C Thy seruantes the men on this syde the water and in Canaan. Be it knowne vnto ¶ kynge, that the Iewes which are come vp from the to vs vnto Ierusalē in to that sedicious ¶ wicked cite, buylde the same, and make vp ¶ walles of it, ¶ bryng it out of ¶ foundation. Be it knowne now therfore vnto ¶ kynge, ¶ yf this cite be buylded ¶ the walles made vp agayne, thē shal not they geue tribute, toll, and yearly custome, and their deuyce shal do ¶ kynge harme. But now that we all are therby which destroyed the temple, we wolde no longer se the kynges dishonoure. Therefore sent we out, and caused the kynge to be certified therof: That it maye be soughte in ¶ Cronicles of thy progenitours, and so shalt thou fynde in the same Cronicles, and perceaue, that this cite is sedicious and noysome vnto kynges and londes, and that they cause other also to rebell of olde, and for the same cause was this cite destroyed. Therefore do we certifie the kynge, that yf this cite be buylded, and the walles therof made vp, thou shalt kepe nothinge on this syde the water by the reason of it.

D Then sent ¶ kynge an answeere vnto Rehum the chaunceler, and Simsai the Scribe, and to the other of their counsell that dwelt in Samaria, and vnto the other beyonde ¶ water. Peace and salutacion. The letter which ye sent vnto vs, hath bene opely red before me, and I haue commaunded to make search: and it is founde, that this cite of olde hath made insurreccion agaynst kynges, & how y vproure and rebellion hath bene commytted therein. There haue bene mightie kynges also at Ierusalē, which haue reigned ouer all that is beyonde the water, and toll, tribute and yearly custome was geuen vnto them. Do ye now after this commaudemēt, forbyd the same men, that the cite be not builded, tyll I haue geuē cōmaudemēt. Take hede now that ye be not negligent here in, lest the kyngye haue harme there thorow.

Now whā kyngye Artaxerses letter was red before Rehum the chaunceler and Simsai the Scrybe and their counsell, they wente vp in all the haist to Ierusalem vnto the Iewes, and forbad them with the arme and auctorite. Then ceased the worke of the house of God at Ierusalem, and continued so vnto the seconde yeare of Darius kyngye of Persia.

The v. Chapter.

THE prophetes, Aggeus and Zachary y sonne of Iddo, prophecied vnto y Iewes that were in Iuda and Ierusalē, in the name of the God of Israel. "Then gat vp Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, and beganne to buylde the house of God at Ierusalem, and with them the prophetes of God which strenghted thē. At the same tyme came to thē Thathnai the debite on this syde the water, and Sethar of Bosen, and their councelers, and sayde thus vnto them: Who hath commaunded you to buylde this house, and to make vp the walles therof? Then tolde we them the names of the men, that made this buyldinge. But the eye of their God came vpon the Elders of the Iewes, that they were not inhibyte, tyll the matter was brought before Darius, and tyll there came a wrytinge therof agayne.

This is the summe of the letter y Thathnai the Debyte on this syde the water, and Sethar of Bosen, and their councellers of Apharsach (which were on this syde the water) sent vnto kyngye Darius. And these are the wordes that they sent vnto him: Vnto Darius the kyngye, all peace. Be it knowne vnto the kyngye, that we came in to Iewry to the house of y greate God, which is buylded with all maner of stone, and balckes are layed in the walles, and y worke goeth fast forth, and prospereth in their handes. Neuertheles we axed the Elders and sayde vnto them: Who hath cōmaunded you to buylde this house, and to make vp the walles therof? We axed their names also, that we might certifye the, and haue wrytten the names of the men that were their rulers.

But they answered vs with these wordes, and sayde: We are the seruauētes of the God of heauen and earth, and buylde the house y was buylded many yeares agoo, *which a greate kyngye of Israel buylded and set vp. Howbeit whan oure fathers prouoked the God of heauen vnto wrath, †he gaue them ouer in the hande of Nabuchodonosor the kyngye of Babilon the Caldee, which brake downe this house, & caried y people awaye vnto Babilon.

‡ Neuertheles in the first yeare of Cyrus the kyngye of Babilon, y same kyngye Cyrus commaunded to buylde this house of God: for the vessels of golde and siluer in the house of God, which Nabuchodonosor toke out of the temple at Ierusalē, and broughte thē in to y temple at Babilon, those dyd Cyrus the kyngye take out of y temple at Babilon, & deliuered them vnto Seszbazer by name, whom he made Debyte, and sayde vnto him: Take these vessels, go thy waye and bryngye them vnto the temple at Ierusalem, and let the house of God be buylded in his place. Then came the same Seszbazar, and layed y foundation of the house of God at Ierusalem. Sence that tyme hath it bene in buyldinge, and yet is it not fynished. Yf it please y kyngye now, let there be search made in y kyngyes treasure house which is at Babilon, whether it haue bene kyngye Cyrus commaundement, that the house of God at Ierusalem shulde be buylded: & sende vs y kyngyes mynde concernyng the same.

The vi. Chapter.

THEN cōmaunded kyngye Darius, that search shulde be made in y library of y kyngyes treasure house, which laye at Babilon. So at Egbathanis in a castell that lyeth in the londe of the Meedes, there was founde a boke, & in it was there an acte wrytten after this maner: In the first yeare of kyngye Cyrus, cōmaunded the same kyngye Cyrus to buylde y house of God at Ierusalem, in the place where the sacrifice is made, & to laye the foundation to beare thre score cubites heyght, ⁊ thre score cubites bredth, ⁊ thre walles of all maner of stones, and one wall of tymber, ⁊ the expences shalbe geuen of the kynges house. And the goldē and syluer vessell of ꝑ house of God (which Nabuchodonosor toke out of the temple at Ierusalem, and broughte vnto Babilon) shalbe restored agayne, ꝑ they maye be broughte vnto the temple at Ierusalē to their place in to the house of God.

Get you farre from them therefore, thou Thathnai Debyte beyonde the water, and Sethar of Bosen, ⁊ youre councelers which are beyonde the water. Let them worke in ꝑ house of God, that the Debyte of ꝑ Iewes and their Elders maye buylde the house of God in his place. I haue commaunded also, what shalbe done to ꝑ Elders of Iuda for the buyldinge of the house of God, that there shal diligently be takē of the kynges goodes, euen of the rentes beyonde the water, ⁊ geuen vnto the men, and that they be not hyndered.

And yf they haue nede of calues, lambes, or goates for the burntoffrynge vnto ꝑ God of heauen, wheate, salt, wyne and oyle, after the custome of the prestes at Ierusalem, there shalbe geuen them daylie as is acordinge: and se that this be not done negligētly, that they maye offre swete sauoures vnto ꝑ God of heauen, and praye for the kynges lyfe, and for his children. This commaundement haue I geuē. And what man so euer he be that altereth these wordes, there shal a balke be taken from his house, and set vp, and he shal be hanged thereon, and his house shalbe prysed for the dede.

But the God that dwelleth in heauen, destroye all kynges and people, that put to their hāde to alter and to breake downe the house of God at Ierusalem. I Darius haue commaunded, that this be diligently done.

Then Thathnai ꝑ Debyte beyonde ꝑ water, and Sethar of Bosen with their councelers (to whom kynge Darius had sent) dyd their diligence. And ꝑ Elders of the Iewes buylde, and they prospered thorow the propheciēge of Ageus the prophet and Zachary the sonne of Iddo: and they buylde, and set vp the worke, acordinge to the commaundement of the God of Israel, and after the commaundement of Cyrus, Darius and Artaxerses kynges of Persia. And they performed the house vnto the thirde daye of the moneth Adar, that was the sixte yeaere of the reigne of kynge Darius.

* And the children of Israel, the prestes, the Leuites, and the other children of ꝑ captiuite helde the dedicacion of the house of God with ioye, and offred at the dedicacion of the house of God, an hundreth calues, two hundreth lambes, foure hundreth goates: and for the synofferynge for all Israel, twolue he goates, acordinge to the nombre of the trybes of Israel, and set the prestes in their courses, and ꝑ Leuites in their offices, to mynister vnto God which is at Ierusalē, as it is wyrtten in the boke of Moses.

And the children of the captiuite helde Passeouer vpon the fourteenth daye of the first moneth: for ꝑ prestes and Leuites had purified them selues, so ꝑ they were all cleane as one man, and kyld Passeouer for all the children of the captiuite, and for their brethrē the prestes, and for them selues. And the childrē of Israel which were come agayne out of captiuite, and all soch as had separated them selues vnto them from the fylthinesse of the Heythen in the londe, to seke the LORDE God of Israel, ate ⁊ helde the feast of vnleuded bred seuen dayes with ioye: for the LORDE had made them glad, and turned the hert of the kynge of Assur vnto thē, so that their handes were strenghtened in the worke of the house of God, which is ꝑ God of Israel.

The vij. Chapter.

AFTER these actes in the reigne of Artaxerses kynge of Persia, ⁊ there wente vp from Babilon, Eszdras the sonne of Seraia, the sonne of Asaria, the sonne of Helchias, the sonne of Sallum, the sonne of Sadoc, the sonne of Aчитob, the sonne of Amaria, the sonne of Asaria, the sonne Meraioth, the sonne of Serahia, ꝑ sonne of Vsi, the sonne of Buki, the sonne of Abisua, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleasar, the sonne of Aaron the chefe prest, which was a quicke scribe in the lawe of Moses, ⁊ which the LORDE God of Israel dyd geue. And ꝑ kynge gaue him all that he requyred, acordinge to the hande of the LORDE his God vpon him.

And there wente vp certayne of the children of Israel, and of the prestes, and of the Leuites, of the syngers, of the porters, and of the Nethinims vnto Ierusalem, in the seuenth yeaere of kyng Artaxerses. And they came to Ierusalem in the fifth moneth, that is the seuenth yeaere of the kyng. For vpon the first daye of the first moneth, deuysed he to go vp from Babilon: and on ȝ first daye of the fifth moneth came he to Ierusalem, accordinge to the good hande of God vpon him: For Eszdras prepared his hert to seke the lawe of the LORDE, and to do it, and to teach the precepte & iudgment in Israel.

B And this is the summe of the letter, that kyng Artaxerses gaue vnto Eszdras the prest, the scribe, which was a teacher in the wordes of the LORDE and of his statutes ouer Israel. Vnto Eszdras the prest and scribe in the lawe of the God of heauen, peace and salutacion. I haue commaunded, that all they of the people of Israel, and of the prestes and Leuites in my realme, which are mynded of their awne good wyll to go vp to Ierusalem, that they go with the, beyng sent of the kyng and of the seuen lordes of the counsell, to vyset Iuda and Ierusalem, accordinge to the lawe of God, which is in thy hãde: And that thou shuldest take with the, syluer and golde, which the kyng and the lordes of his counsell geue of their awne good wyll vnto the God of Israel (whose habitacion is at Ierusalem) and all the syluer and golde that thou canst fynde in all ȝ countre of Babilon: with it that the people and prestes geue of their awne good wil vnto the house of God at Ierusalem.

C Take thou the same, and bye diligently with the same money, calues, lambes, goates, and meatofferynges and drynkofferynges, to be offred vpon the altare of the house of youre God at Ierusalem. And loke what it lyketh the and thy brethren to do with the remnaunt of the money, that do after the wyll of youre God. And the vessels that are geuen the for the mynistracion in the house of thy God, those delyuer thou before God at Ierusalem.

And what so euer thinge more shal be nedefull for the house of thy God, which is necessary for the to spende, let the same be geuē out of the kynges chamber. I kyng Artaxerses haue commaunded all the treasurers beyonde the water, ȝ loke what so euer Eszdras the prest and scribe in the lawe of the God of heauē, requyreth of you, that ye fulfyll the same diligently, vntyll an hundreth talētes of syluer, and tyll an hundreth quarters of wheate, and tyll an hūdreth Batthes of wyne, and tyll an hundreth Batthes of oyle, and salt without measure. Whatsoeuer belongeth to the lawe of the God of heauen, let the same be done with diligence for the house of the God of heauē, that there come no wrath vpon the kynges realme & his children.

And knowne be it vnto you, that ye shall haue no auctorite to requyre taxinge & custome, and yearly rentes vpon eny of the prestes, Leuites, syngers, porters, Nethinims and mynisters in ȝ house of this God. But thou Eszdras (after the wysdome of thy God that is in thy hande) set thou iudges and arbiters, to iudge all the people that is beyonde Iordane, euen all soch as knowe the lawe of thy God: and them that knowe it not, those se that ye teache. And who so euer wyl not diligently fulfyll the lawe of thy God, and the kynges lawe, shall haue his iudgmēt for the dede, whether it be vnto death, or to be banyshed, or to be condemned in good, or to be put in preson.

Prayed be the LORDE God of oure fathers, which so hath inspyred ȝ kynges hert to garnysh the house of God at Ierusalem: and hath enclyned his mercy vnto me in the presence of the kyng, and his councelors, and before all the kynges hye estates. And I was comforted (accordinge to the hãde of the LORDE my God ouer me) and so gathered I the heades of Israel together, ȝ they mighte go vp with me.

The viij. Chapter.

THESE are the heades of their fathers that were named, ^a which wente vp with me from Babilon, what tyme as kyng Artaxerses reigned. Of the childrē of Phineas, Gersom: of the children of Ithamar, Daniel: of the children of Daid, Hattus: of the childrē of Pareos, Zachary, and the men childrē nombred with him, an hundreth and fifty. Of the children of Pahath Moab, Eleoenai the sonne of Serahia, and with him two hundreth males.

Of the children of Sechania, the sonne of Iehasiel, and with him thre hundreth males. Of the children of Adin Ebed, the sonne of Jonathan, and with him fiftie males. Of the children of Elam, Iesaia the sonne of Athalia, and with him seuentie males. Of the children of Sephatia, Sebadia the sonne of Michael, and with him foure score males.

Of the children of Ioab, Obadia the sonne of Iehiel, and with him two hundreth & eightene men children. Of the children of Selomith, the sonne of Iosiphia, and with him an hundreth and thre score males.

Of the children of Bebai, Zachary the sonne of Bebai, and with him eight and twentie males. Of the children of Asgad, Iohanen the yongest sonne, and with him an hundreth and ten males. Of the last children of Adoniam, and these were their names: Eliphelet, Ieiel and Semaia, and with them thre score males. Of the children of Bigeui, Vthai and Sabud, and with them seuē males. And I gathered them together by the water that renneth toward Aheua, & there abode we thre dayes.

And whan I loked amonge the people & the prestes, I founde no Leuites there. Thē sent I Elieser, Ariel, Semaia, Elnathan, Iarib, Elnathan, Natha, Zachary and Mesullam the rulers, and Ioiarib and Elnathan the teachers, and those sent I vnto Iddo ꝑ chefest at Casiphia, that they shulde fetch us mynsters for the house of oure God, and I tolde them what they shulde saye vnto Iddo and to his brethren the Nethinims at Casiphia.

And (acordinge to the good hande of oure God vpon us) they broughte us a wyse man from amonge the children of Maheli the sonne of Leui the sonne of Israel, euen Serebia with his sonnes and brethren, eightene. And Hasabia, and with him Iesaia of the children of Merari, with his brethren & their sonnes, twentye. And of the Nethinims, whom Dauid and the princes gaue to mynister vnto the Leuites, two hundreth & twentye, all named by name.

And euen there at the water besyde Aheua, caused I a fastinge to be proclaimed, ꝑ we mighte humble oure selues before oure God, to seke of him a righte waye for us, & oure children and all oure substaunce. For I was ashamed to require of the kyng, soudyers & horsmen, to helpe us agaynst the enemye in the waye. For we had sayde vnto the kyng: The hande of oure God is for the best vpon all them that seke him, and his violence and wrath vpon all them that forsake him. So we fasted, and soughte this at oure God, and he herde us.

And I toke out twolue of the chefe prestes, Serebia and Hasabia, and ten of their brethren with them, and weyed them there the syluer and golde and vessels for the Heue offeringe vnto the house of oure God, which the kyng, and the lordes of his counsell and prynces, and all Israel that were at hande, had geuen to the Heue offerynge: and there weyed I them vnder their hande sixe hundreth and fiftye talentes of syluer, and in syluer vessell an hundreth talentes, and in golde an hundreth talentes, twentye cuppes of golde of a thousande guldens, and two costly ornamentes of good brasse, as cleare as golde, and sayde vnto them: Ye are holy vnto the LORDE, therefore are the vessels holy also, and so is the syluer and golde that is geuen of a good wyll vnto the LORDE God of youre fathers: Watch ye therfore and kepe it, tyll ye weye it downe before the chefe prestes and Leuites, and awncient fathers of Israel at Ierusalem in the chestes of the house of the LORDE. Then toke the prestes and Leuites that weyed syluer and golde & vessell, to brynge it to Ierusalem vnto ꝑ house of oure God.

So we brake vp, from the water of Aheua on the twoluth daye of the first moneth, to go vnto Ierusalem: and the hande of oure God was vpon us, and delyuered us frō the hande of the enemies and preynt waytinges by the waye. And we came to Ierusalem, and abode there thre dayes. But on ꝑ fourth daye was the syluer and golde, and vessell weyed in the house of oure God vnder the hande of Meremoth the sonne of Vrias the prest, and with him Eleasar the sonne of Phineas, and with them Iosabad the sonne of Iesua, and Noadia ꝑ sonne of Benui the Leuites, acordinge to the nombre & weight of euery one. And the weight was all wrytten vp at the same tyme.

And the children of the captiuyte, which were come out of preson, offred burntofferings vnto ꝑ God of Israel: twolue bullockes for all Israel, sixe and nynetye rammes, seuen and seentye lambes, and twolue goates for a synofferynge, all to the burnt offeringe of the LORDE. And they delyuered the kynges commyssion vnto the kynges officers, & to the Debytes on this syde the water. And they promoted the people and the house of God.

The ii. Chapter.

AWHAN all this was perfourmed, the rulers came to me, and sayde: The people of Israel, and the prestes, & Levites are not separated from the nacions in the londes as touchinge their abhominacions, namely of the Cananites, Hethites, Pheresites, Iebusites, Ammonites, Moabites, Egipcians, and Amorites. * For they haue taken the daughters of the same, & their sonnes, and haue myxte the holy sede with y^e nacions in the londes: and the hande of the rulers and lordes of counsell hath bene principall in this trespace.

Whan I herde this, I rente my clothes and my rayment, and plucte out the heer of my heade and of my beard, and sat mournynge. And there resorted vnto me all such as feared the worde of the LORDE God of Israel because of the greate transgression. And I sat mournynge vntyll the euenynge sacrifice. And aboute the euenynge sacrifice I rose vp fro my heuynes, and rente my clothes and my raiment, and fell vpon my knees, and spred out my handes vnto the LORDE my God, and sayde:

My God, I am ashamed, and darre not lifte vp mine eyes vnto my God: for our wickednesses are growne ouer oure heade, & oure trespaces are waxen greate vnto y^e heauē. Sence the tyme of oure fathers haue we bene in greate trespase vnto this daie, * and because of oure wickednesses haue we and oure kynges bene delyuered in to the hande of y^e kynges of the nacions, in to the swerde, in to captiuyte, in to spoyle, and in to confusion of face, as it is come to passe this daye.

C But now is there a litle and sodane graciousnes come from the LORDE oure God, so that some of vs are escaped, that he maie geue vs a nayle in his holy place, that oure God maye lighte oure eyes, and geue vs a litle lyfe in oure bondage. For we are bondmen, and oure God hath not forsakē vs though we be bondmen, and hath enclyned mercy vnto vs in the sighte of the kynges of Persia, that they shulde geue vs lyfe, and promote the house of oure God, and to sett vp the desolacion therof, and to geue vs an hedge in Iuda and Ierusalem.

O oure God, what shall we saye now after this? that we haue forsaken thy commaundementes, which thou hast commaunded by thy seruantes the prophetes, and saide: The londe wherin ye shal come to possesse it, is an vnclene londe thorow the fylthines of the people of the londes, in their abhominacions wherwith they haue made it full of vnclennes on euery syde. Therefore shal ye not geue youre daughters vnto their sonnes, and their daughters shall ye not take vnto youre sonnes, and seke not their peace and welth for euer, that ye maye be stronge, and enioye the good in the londe, and y^e ye and youre children maye haue the inheritaunce of it for euermore.

And after all this that is come vpon vs (because of oure euell dedes and greate trespaces) thou oure God hast spared oure wickednesses, and hast geuen vs a deluyeraunce as it is come to passe.

As for vs, we haue turned backe, & haue let go thy commaundementes, to make contracte with the people of these abhominacions. Wilt thou then be wroth at vs, tyll we be vtterly consumed, so that nothyng remayne, and tyll there be no deluyeraunce? O LORDE God of Israel, thou art righteous, for we remaine yet escaped, as it is this daie. Beholde, in thy presence are we in oure trespase, for because of it is there no standinge before the.

The i. Chapter.

AND whan Esdras prayed after this maner and knowledg, wepte, and laie before the house of God, there resorted vnto him out of Israel a very greate congregacion of men and women, and children: for the people wepte very sore. And Sachania the sonne of Iehiel one of the children of Elam, answered, and sayde vnto Esdras: We haue trespased agaynst the LORDE oure God, in that we haue taken straunge wyues of all the people of the londe. Now there is hope yet in Israel cōcerninge this, therefore let vs make a couenaūt now with oure God, that we shal put awaye all the wyues (and such as are borne of them) acordynge to the counsell of y^e LORDE, and of them that feare the commaundement of oure God, y^e we maye do acordynge to the lawe. Get the vp therefore, for the matter belongeth vnto the. We wyll be with the, be of good comforte, and do it.

Then rose Esdras, and toke an ooth of the rulers, prestes and Leuites, and of all Israel, that they shulde do acordinge to this worde: and they swore. And Eszdras stode vp before the house of God, and wente in to the chamber of Iohanan the sonne of Eliasab. And whan he came thither, he ate no bred, and dranke no water: for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had bene in captiuyte.

And they caused a proclamacion be made thorow out Iuda and Ierusalem, vnto all the children which had bene in captiuite, \hat{y} they shulde gather them selues together vnto Ierusalē: And that who soeuer came not within thre dayes acordinge to the deuyce of the rulers and Elders, all his substaunce shulde be forfett, and he put out from the cōgregacion of the captiue.

Then all the men of Iuda and Ben Iamin gathered them selues together vnto Ierusalem in thre dayes, \hat{y} is on the twentieth daye of the nyenth moneth: and all the people sat in the strete before the house of God, and trembled because of the matter, and for the rayne. And Eszdras \hat{y} prest stode vp, and sayde vnto them: *Ye haue transgressed, \hat{y} ye haue taken straunge wyues, to make the trespase of Israel yet more: confesse now therefore vnto \hat{y} LORDE God of youre fathers, τ do his pleasure, and separate youre selues from the people of the londe, τ from \hat{y} straunge wyues. Thē answered all the cōgregacion, τ sayde with loude voyce: Let it be done as thou hast sayde. But the people are many, τ it is a raynye wether, τ they cānot stōde here without, nether is this a worke of one daye or two, for we are many \hat{y} haue offended in this transgression.

Let vs appoynte oure rulers therfore in all the congregacion, \hat{y} all they which haue taken straunge wyues in oure cities, maye come at the tyme appoynted, and the Elders of euery cite and their Iudges with them, tyll the wrath of oure God because of this matter be turned awaye from vs.

Then were they appoynted Jonathan the sonne of Asahel τ Iehasia the sonne of Thecua ouer this matter. And Mesullam and Sabthai the Leuites helped them. And the children of the captiuyte dyd euen so. And Eszdras the prest, and \hat{y} auñcient fathers thorow the house of their fathers, and all that were now rehearsed by name, separated theselues, and sat them downe on the first daye of the tenth moneth, to examē this matter. And on \hat{y} first daye of \hat{y} first moneth broughte they the matter to a conclusion, concernyng all the men \hat{y} had takē straunge wyues.

And amōge the childrē of the prestes there were men founde \hat{y} had takē straunge wyues, namely amōge the children of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec τ of his brethrē, Maeseia, Elieser, Iarib and Godolia. And they gaue their hādes there vpon, that they wolde put awaye their wyues: τ for their trespase offerynge to geue a rāme for their trespase. Amōge the children of Immer, Hanani τ Sabadia. Amonge the childrē of Harim, Maeseia, Elia, Semaia, Iehiel, and Vsia. Amonge \hat{y} children of Pashur, Elioenai, Maeseia, Ismael, Nethaneel, Iosabad τ Eleasa. Amonge the Leuites, Iosabad, Simei and Celaia, He is that Celaia, Pethahia, Iuda and Eleasar. Amonge the syngers, Elyasib. Amonge the porters, Sallum, Telem and Vri.

A THESE are the actes of Nehemias the sonne of Hachalia. It fortunēd in y^e moneth Chisleu in y^e twētieth yeaere, that I was in the castell at Susan: and Hanani one of my brethren came with certayne mē of Iuda, and I axed them how the Iewes dyd that were deliuered and escaped from the captiuyte, & how it wente at Ierusalē. And they sayde vnto me: The remnaunt of the captiuyte are there in the londe in greate mysfortune & rebuke. *The walles of Ierusalem are broken downe, and the portes therof are brent with fyre.

Whā I herde these wordes, I sat me downe & wepte, & mourned two dayes, & fasted & prayed before the God of heauen, & sayde: O LORDE God of heauen, thou greate & terrible God, †thou y^e kepest couenaut & mercy for them þy loue the ⁊ obserue thy cōmaundementes: let thy eares marke, ⁊ let thine eyes be open, þy thou mayest heare the prayer of thy seruauant, which I praye now before þy daye and nighte for the children of Israel thy seruantes, ⁊ knowlege the synnes of the children of Israel, which we haue commytted agaynst the.

33 And I ⁊ my fathers house haue synned also. We haue bene corrupte vnto the, in þy we haue not kepte the cōmaundementes, statutes ⁊ lawes, which thou cōmaundest thy seruauant Moses. Yet call to remembraunce þy worde that thou cōmaundest thy seruauant Moses, and saydest: *Yf ye trāsgresse, then wil I scatter you abroad amonge the naciōs. But yf ye turne vnto me, and kepe my commaundementes ⁊ do them: though ye were cast out vnto the vttemost parte of heauen yet wyl I gather you from thence, and wyl brynge you from thence, euē vnto the place, that I haue chosen for my name to dwell there. They are thy seruantes, and thy people, whom thou hast deliuered thorow thy greute power ⁊ mightie hande. O LORDE, let thine eares marke the prayer of thy seruauant, ⁊ the prayer of thy seruantes, whose desyre is to feare thy name, ⁊ let thy seruauant prospere this daye, ⁊ graunte him mercy in the sight of this man: for I was the kynges butlar.

The ij. Chapter.

34 I N the moneth Nisan of the twentieth yeare of kyng Artaxerses, whā the wyne stode before him, I toke vp the wyne, and gaue it vnto þy kyng, and I was heuy in his presence. Then sayde þy kyng vnto me: Why lokest thou so sadly? Thou art not sicke, that is not þy matter, but thou art heuy harted. Neuertheles I was sore afrayed, ⁊ sayde vnto the kyng: God saue the kynges life for euer, shulde I not loke sadly? the cite of my fathers buryall lyeth wayest, ⁊ the portes therof are consumed with the fyre. Then sayde the kyng vnto me: What is thē thy request? Then made I my prayer to the God of heauē, and sayde vnto the kyng: yf it please the kyng, and yf thy seruauant be fauoured in thy sighte, I beseke the sende me in to Iuda vnto þy cite of my fathers buryall, that I maye buylde it.

35 And þy kyng sayde vnto me, ⁊ so dyd the quene þy sat by him: How lōge shal thy iourney

cōtinue, and whā wilt thou come agayne? And it pleased þy kyng to sende me, and I set him a tyme, ⁊ sayde vnto the kyng: Yf it please the kyng, let him geue me letters to the Debitēs beyonde þy water, þy they maye conueye me ouer, tyll I come in to Iuda: ⁊ letters vnto Assaph the lorde of the kynges wode, þy he maye geue me wodd for balke to the gates of the palace, which are harde on the house ⁊ harde on the walles of the cite, ⁊ for the house that I shal entre in to. And þy kyng gaue me accordinge to the good hande of God vpō me. And whan I came to þy Debitēs beyonde the water, I gaue them þy kynges letters. And the kyng sent captaines and horsmen with me.

But whan Saneballath the Horonite, ⁊ Tobias the seruauant of the Ammonites herde þy, it greued them sore, þy there was come a man which soughte the welth of the children of Israel. And whan I came to Ierusalem, ⁊ had bene there thre daies, I gat me vp in þy night season, ⁊ a fewe men with me: for I tolde no man what God had geuē me in my hert to do at Ierusalem: ⁊ there was not one beest with me, saue it þy I rode vpon. And I rode by nighte vnto the valley porte before the Dragon well, ⁊ to the Dongporte, ⁊ considered þy walles of Ierusalem that were broken downe, ⁊ the portes therof consumed with the fyre. And I wente ouer vnto þy Well porte, ⁊ to the kynges condyte, ⁊ there was no rowme for my beest, þy it coulde go vnder me. Then wēte I on in the nighte by the broke syde, ⁊ cōsidered þy wall, ⁊ turned back, ⁊ came home agayne to þy valley porte.

36 And þy rulers knewe not whither I wēte, or what I dyd: for hither to had I not tolde the Iewes ⁊ the prestes, the councelers ⁊ the rulers, ⁊ the other þy laboured in the worke, ⁊ I saide vnto thē: Ye se the myserye þy we are in, how Ierusalē lyeth wayst, ⁊ how þy gates therof are brent with fyre, come, let vs buylde vp þy walles of Ierusalē, þy we be nomore a rebuke. And I tolde thē of the good hāde of my God which was vpō me: And þy kynges wordes þy he had spokē vnto me. And they saide: Then let vs get vp. And we buylded, and their handes were strengthened to good.

But whan Saneballath þy Horonite, and Tobias the seruauant of þy Ammonites, ⁊ Gosem the Arabian herde it, they laughed vs to scorne, and despised vs, & sayde : What is this that ye do? Wyl ye fall awaye agayne from the kynge? Then answered I them, and sayde : The God of heauen shal cause vs to prospere : for we his seruantes are gotten vp, & are buyldinge. As for you, ye haue no porciō ner right, ner remembrance in Ierusalē.

The iiij. Chapter.

A BUT whan Saneballat herde that we builded ⁊ wall, he was wroth, ⁊ toke greate indignacio ⁊ mocked ⁊ Iewes ⁊ saide before his brethre ⁊ the mightie men of Samaria: What do the impotēt Iewes? shall they be thus suffred? shall they offre? shal they perourme it in one daie? shal they make ⁊ stones whole againe, ⁊ are brought to dust, ⁊ brent? And Tobias the Ammonite beside him saide: Let thē builde on, yf a foxe go vp, he shall breake downe their stonye wall. Heare O thou oure God, how we are despysed, turne their shame vpon their awne heade, ⁊ thou mayest geue them ouer in to despisinge in the londe of their captiuite. Couer not their wickednesse, ⁊ put not out their sinne frō thy presence: for they haue prouoked the buylders. Yet buylded we the wall, ⁊ ioyned it whole together, vnto ⁊ halfe heigth. And the people were well mynded to labour.

B But whan Saneballat, ⁊ Tobias, and ⁊ Arabiās, ⁊ Ammonites, ⁊ Aszdodites herde, ⁊ the wallles of Ierusalem were made vp, and that they had begonne to stoppe vp ⁊ gappes, they were very wroth, and cōspyd all together, to come and fight against Ierusalem, ⁊ to make an hinderaunce therin. Neuertheles we made oure praier vnto oure God, ⁊ set watchmē vpō the wall daye ⁊ night ouer against them. And Iuda saide: The strēgh of the bearers is to feble, ⁊ there is to moch dust, we are not able to builde on the wall. And oure aduersaries thought: They shall not knowe nether se, tyll we come in the myddes amonge thē, and slaye them, ⁊ hynder ⁊ worke. But whan the Iewes that dwelt besyde them, came out of all the places where they dwelt aboute vs, and tolde vs as good as tē tymes, then set I the people after their kynreds with their swerdes, speares ⁊ bowes beneth in the lowe places behynde the wall, ⁊ loked, and gat me vp, and sayde vnto the chefe men and rulers, ⁊ to the other people: Be not ye afraied of them, thynke vpon ⁊ greate LORDE which ought to be feared, ⁊ fighte for youre brethren, sonnes, daughters, wyues, ⁊ houses. Neuertheles whan oure enemies herde ⁊ we had godden worde of it, God broughte their counsell to naughte, and we turned all againe to the wall, euery one vnto his labour. And from that time forth it came to passe, ⁊ the halfe parte of the yonge men dyd the labour, ⁊ the other halfe parte helde the speares, shyldes, bowes, and brest-plates, and the rulers stode behynde all the house of Iuda, which buylded on the wall, ⁊ bare burthē, from those that laded thē. With one hande dyd they ⁊ worke, and with the other helde they the weapen. And euery one ⁊ buylded, had his swerde girde by his side, ⁊ so buylded they. And the trompetters stode beside me.

And I sayde vnto the principall men, ⁊ rulers, and to ⁊ other people: The worke is greate ⁊ large, ⁊ we are separated vpon the wall one farre from another. Loke in what place now ye heare the noise of ⁊ trompe, resort ye thither vnto vs. *Oure God shal fight for vs, ⁊ we wil be labourige in ⁊ worke. And the halfe parte of thē helde ⁊ speares frō ⁊ morninge springe, till ⁊ starres came forth. And at ⁊ same tyme sayde I vnto ⁊ people: Euery one abyde with his seruauant at Ierusalem, ⁊ in the night season we maye geue attendaunce to ⁊ watch, and to labour on the daye tyme. As for me and my brethren, ⁊ my seruauantes, and ⁊ men of the watch behynde me, we put neuer of our clothes, so moch as to washe oure selues.

The v. Chapter.

A ND there arose a greate complaynte of ⁊ ⁊ people, ⁊ of their wyues against their brethren the Iewes. And there were some ⁊ sayde: oure sonnes and doughters are to many, let vs take corne for thē, ⁊ eate, that we maye lyue. Some saide: Let vs set oure londes, vynyards ⁊ houses to pledge, ⁊ take vp corne in the derth. But some saide: Let vs borowe money of the kinge vpō vsury for oure londes and vynyardes. Now are oure brethrens bodies as oure awne bodies, and their children as oure children: els shulde we subdue oure sonnes and daughters vnto bondage, and some of oure daughters are subdued allready, and no strength is there in oure handes, and other men shal haue oure londes and vynyardes.

But whan I herde their complaynte and soch wordes, it displeased me sore, and I aduysed so in my mynde, y I rebuked the counsellors, and the rulers, and sayde vnto them: * Wyl ye requyre vsury one of another? And I broughte a greate congregacion agaynst them, and sayde vnto them: We (after oure abilyte) haue boughte oure brethren the Iewes, which were solde vnto the Heythen. And wyl ye sell youre brethren, whom we haue boughte vnto vs? Then held they their peace, & coulde fynde nothinge to answer.

35 And I sayde: It is not good that ye do. Oughte ye not to walke in the feare of God, because of the rebuke of the Heythen oure enemies? I and my brethrē, and my seruantes haue lent them money and corne: but as for vsury, let vs leaue it. Therefore this same daye se that ye restore thē their londes agayne, their vynyardes, oyle gardens and houses, and the hundreth parte of the money of the corne, wyne and oyle that ye haue wonne of them. Then sayde they: We wyl restore them agayne, and wyl requyre nothinge of them, and wyl do as thou hast spoken. And I called the prestes, and toke an ooth of thē, that they shulde do so. And I shoke my lappe, and sayde: God shake out euery man after the same maner frō his house and laboure, that maynteyneth not this worde: euen thus be he shaken out, and voyde. And all y congregacion sayde: Amen, and praysed the LORDE. And the people dyd so.

Ⓒ † And from the tyme forth that it was commytted vnto me to be a Debyte in the londe of Iuda, namely from the twentieth yeare vnto the two and thirtieth yeare off kynge Artaxerses (that is twolue yeare) I and my brethrē lyued not of soch sustenance as was geuen to a Debyte: For the olde Debytes that were before me, had bene chargeable vnto the people, and had takē of thē bred and wyne, and fortye Sycles of syluer: Yee and their seruantes had oppressed the people. But so dyd not I, and that because of the feare of God. I laboured also in the worke vpon the wall, and boughte no lōde. And all my seruantes came thither together vnto y worke. Morouer there were at my table an hundreth and fiftie of the Iewes and rulers, which came vnto me, from amonge the Heythen, that are aboute vs. And there was prepared me daylie an oxe, and sixe chosen shepe, and byrdes, and euer once in ten dayes a greate summe of wyne. Yet required not I the lyuynge of a Debyte for y bondage was greuouse vnto y people. Thynke vpō me my God vnto y best, acordige to all that * I haue done for this people.

The bi. Chapter.

AND whan Saneballat, Tobias and Gosem ^A the Arabian, and the other of oure enemies herde, that I had buylded the wall, and that there were no mo gappes ther in (howbeit at the same tyme had I not hanged the dores vpon the gates) Saneballat and Gosem sent vnto me, sayenge: Come and let us mete together in the villages vpon the playne of the cite Ono. Neuertheles they thoughte to do me euell. Notwithstondynge I sent messengers vnto them, sayenge: I haue a greate busynes to do, I can not come downe. The worke shulde stonde still, yf I were negligent, and came downe to you. Howbeit they sent vnto me as good as foure tymes after the same maner. And I gaue the same answer.

35 Then sent Saneballat his seruauant vnto me the fifth tyme, with an open letter in his hande, wherin was written: It is tolde the Heythen, & Gosem hath sayde it, that thou and the Iewes thynke to rebell: for y which cause thou buyldest the wall, and wylt be their kynge in these matters, and hast ordeyned the prophetes to preach of the at Ierusalem, and to saye: He is kynge of Iuda.

Now shal this come to the kynges eares: come now therefore, and let us take oure counsell together. Neuertheles I sent vnto him, sayenge: There is no soch thinge done as thou sayest: thou hast fayned it out of thine owne hert. For they were all mynded to make us afraied, and thoughte: They shal withdrawe their handes from the worke, y they shal not laboure. Howbeit I strēgthed my hande the more.

sonne of Delaia the sonne of Mechetabeel, ⁊ he had shut him selfe within, ⁊ sayde: Let us come together in to ⁊ house of God, euē vnto ⁊ myddes of ⁊ tēple, ⁊ sparre ⁊ dores of ⁊ tēple: for they wyl come to slaye ⁊, yee euē in the night wyl they come to put the to death. But I sayde: Shulde soch a mā flye? Shulde soch a mā as I am, go in to ⁊ tēple, to saue his life? I wyl not go in.

For I perceaued, that God had not sent him: Yet spake he prophecy vpon me, neuertheless Tobias and Saneballat had hired him for money. Therefore toke he the money, that I shulde be afraied, and so to do and synne, that they might haue an euell reporte of me, to blaspheme me. My God thynke thou vpon Tobias and Saneballat, acordynge vnto these their workes, and of ⁊ prophet Noadia, and of the other prophetes, ⁊ wolde haue put me in feare.

And the wall was fynished on the fyue ⁊ twentyeth daye of the moneth Elul, in two and fyfte dayes. And whan all oure enemies herde therof, all the Heithen ⁊ were aboute vs, were afraied, and their corage failed thē: for they perceaued, that this worke came of God. And at ⁊ same tyme were there many of ⁊ chefe of Iuda, whose letters wēte vnto Tobias, ⁊ from Tobias vnto them (for there were many in Iuda that were sworne vnto him: for he was the sonne in lawe of Sachania the sonne of Arah, and his sonne Iohanan had the daughter of Mesullam the sonne of Barachia, and they spake good of him before me, and tolde him my wordes.) And Tobias sent letters, to put me in feare.

The vij. Chapter.

NOW when we had buylded the wall I hanged on the dores, and the porters, syngers and Leuites were appoynted. And I cōmaunded my brother Hanani, and Hanania the ruler of the palace at Ierusalem: (for he was a faithfull man, and feared God more then dyd many other) and I sayde vnto them: Let not the gates of Ierusalē be opened vntyll the Sonne be whote. And whyle they are yet standinge in the watch, the dores shall be shut and barred. And there were certayne citesyns of Ierusalem appoynted to be watchmen, euery one in his watch, and aboute his house. As for ⁊ cite, it was large of rowme, and greate, but ⁊ people were fewe therin, and the houses were not buylded.

The viij. Chapter.

NOW whan the seuenth moneth drue nye, & and & children of Israel were in their cities, all the people gathered them selues together as one man vpon the strete before the Watergate, and sayde vnto Esdras the scribe, that he shulde fetch the boke of the lawe of Moses, which the LORDE commaunded Israel. *And Esdras the prest brought & lawe before the congregaciō both of men and women, and of all that coule vnderstonde it, vpon the first daye of the seuenth moneth, and red therein in the strete that is before the Watergate, from & light mornynge vntyll the noone daye before men and wemen and such as coulde vnderstonde it: and the eares of all the people were inclyned vnto the boke of the lawe. And Eszdras the scribe stode vpon an hye pulpit of wod, which they had made for the preachynge, & beside him stode Mathithia, Sema, Anania Vria, Ezechias, and Maeseia on his righte hand: And on his lefte honde stode Pedaia, Misael, Malchia, Hasum, Haszbadana, Zachary and Mesullam.

B And Eszdras opened þe boke before all þe people, for he stode aboue all þe people. And whan he opened it, all the people stode vp. And Eszdras prayes the LORDE the greates God. And all the people answered Amen, Amen, with their handes vp, and bowed the selues, and worshipped þe LORDE with their faces to the grounde. And Iesua, Bani, Serebia, Iamin, Acub, Sabthai, Hodaia, Maeseia, Celita, Asaria, Iosabad, Hanan, Plaia, and the Leuites, caused þe people to geue hede vnto the lawe, & the people stode in their place. And they red in the boke of the lawe of God distinctly and planely, so that men vnderstode the thinge that was red. And Nehemias (which is Hathirsatha) and Esdras the prest and scribe, and the Leuites þe caused the people to take hede, sayde vnto all the people: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE youre God: be not ye sory therfore, & wepe not. For all þe people wepte, whā they herde the wordes of the lawe.

C Therefore sayde he vnto them: Go youre waye, and eate the fat, and drynke the swete, and sende parte vnto them also that haue not prepared themselves: for this daye is holy vnto oure LORDE, be not ye sory therfore: for the ioye of the LORDE is youre strength. And the Leuites stilled all the people, and sayde: Holde youre peace, for the daye is holy, vexe not ye youre selues. And all the people wente their waye to eate and drinke, and to sende parte vnto other, and to make greates myrth, for they had vnderstode the wordes that were declared vnto them.

And on the nexte daye were gathered together the chefe fathers amonge all the people, and the prestes and Leuites, vnto Esdras the scribe, that he shulde teach them þe wordes of the lawe. And they founde written in the lawe, * how that the LORDE had commaunded by Moses, that the childrē of Israel shulde dwell in bothes in the feast of the seuenth moneth. And so they caused it be declared and proclaimed in all their cities, & at Ierusalem, sayenge: Go vp vnto þe moūt and fetch Olyue braunches, Pynebraunches, Myrtbraunches, Palmebraunches, & braunches of thicketrees, to make bothes as it is wrytten.

And þe people wente vp, and fetched the, and made them bothes, euery one vpon the rofe of his house, and in their courtes, and in the courtes of the house of God, and in the strete by the Watergate, and in the strete by Ephraims porte. And all the congregacion of them that were come agayne out of the captyuite, made bothes, and dwelt therein: for sence the tyme of Iosua the sonne of Nū vnto this daye, had not the children of Israel done so, and there was very greates gladnesse. And euery daye from the first daie vnto the last, red he in the boke of the lawe of God. And seuen dayes helde they the feast, & on the eight daye the gatherynge together, acordynge vnto the maner.

The ii. Chapter.

IN the foure and twentieth daye of this moneth came the children of Israel together with fastinge and sackclothes, and earth vpon them, and separated the sede of Israel from all the straunge children, and stode and knowleged their synnes, and the wyckednesses of their fathers, and stode vp in their place, and red in the boke of the lawe of the LORDE their God foure tymes on the daye, and they knowleged, and worshipped the LORDE their God foure tymes on the daye. And the Leuites stode on hye, namely Iesua, Bani, Cadmiel, Sebania, Buni, Serebia, Bani, and Chenani, and cryed loude vnto the LORDE their God. And the Leuites, Iesua, Cadmiel, Bani, Hasabenia, Serebia, Hodia, Sebania, Pethahia, sayde: Stonde vp, prayse the LORDE oure God for euer: and let thankes be geue vnto the name of thy glorye, which excelleth all thankesgeuyng and prayse. LORDE, thou art alone, thou hast made heauen, and the heauen of all heauens, with all their hoost, the earth and all that therein is, the See and all that is therein: thou geuest life vnto all, and þe hoost of heauen bowe themselves vnto the. Thou art the LORDE B God, that hast chosen Abrā, and broughte him out of Vr in Chaldea, & called him

Abraham,* and founde his hert faithfull before the, †and madest a couenaüt with him, to geue vnto his sede the londe of the Cananites, Hethites, Amorites, Pheresites, Iebusites, and Girgosites, and hast made good thy wordes: for thou art righteous. ‡And hast considered the mysery of oure fathers in Egipte, and herde their complainte by the reed See, and shewed tokēs and wonders vpō Pharaō, and on all his seruātes, and on all his people of his londe: for thou knewest §they were presumptuous ¶cruell against them, ¶so madest thou §the a name as it is this daie. And the reed See partedst thou in sunder before them, so that they wēte thorow the myddes of the See drye shod: ¶their persecuters threwest thou in to the depe as a stone, in the mightie waters, and ledest them on the daye tyme in a cloudy pyler, and on the nighte season in a piler of fyre, to shewe them lighte in the waye §they wente.

C Thou camest downe also vpō mount Sinai, and spakest vnto them from heauen, and gauest them righte iudgmentes, true lawes, good commaundementes and statutes, and declared vnto them thy holy Sabbath, and commaunded them preceptes, ordinaunces, and lawes, by Moses thy seruānt: and ¶gauest them bred from heauen when they were hongrye, and ¶broughte forth water for them out of the rock whan they were thyrstye: and promysed them, ¶that they shulde go in, and take possession of the londe, where ouer thou haddest lyfte vp thine hande for to geue them.

Neuertheles oure fathers were proude and hardnecked, so that they folowed not thy cōmaundementes, and refused to heare, and were not myndefull of the wonders §thou dydest for them: but became obstynat and heady, in so moch that they turned back to their bondage in their dishobedience. But thou my God forgauest, and wast gracious, mercifull, patient, and of greate goodnesse, and forsokest them not. ¶¶And though they made a molten calfe (and sayde: This is thy God, that broughte the out of the londe of Egipte) and dyd greate blasphemies, yet forsokest thou them not in the wyldernes, accordinge to thy greate mercy. ¶¶And §cloudy piler departed not from them on §daye tyme to lede them the waye, nether the piler of fyre in the night season, to shewe them lighte in the waye that they wente.

And thou gauest them thy good sprete D enfourme them, ¶and withheldest not thy Manna from their mouth, ¶and gauest thē water whā they were thirstie. Fortye yeares longe madest thou prouysion for them in the wyldernes, so that they wanted nothinge: ¶¶their clothes waxed not olde, and their fete swelled not. And thou gauest thē kīgdomes ¶nacions, ¶partedst thē accordinge to their porcions, so that they possessed ¶¶the londe of Sihon kynge of Heszbon, ¶the londe of Og §kynge of Basan. ¶¶¶And their childrē multipliedst thou as the starres of heauen, and broughtest thē in to the londe wherof thou haddest spoken vnto their fathers, that they shulde go in to it, and haue it in possession.

And §children wente in, and possessed the londe, ¶¶and thou subdudest before thē the inhabitors of the londe, euen the Cananites, ¶gauest them in to their hande, and their kynges and §people of the londe, §they might do with them what they wolde. And they wanne their stronge cities, ¶a fat londe, and toke possession of houses §were full of all maner goodes, welles dygged out, vynyardes, oylgardens, ¶many frutefull trees: and they ate ¶were fylled, ¶became fat, ¶lyued in welth thorow thy greate goodnes. Neuertheles they were disobedient, and rebelled agaynst the, and cast thy lawe behynde their backs, ¶¶and slewe thy prophetes (which exhorted them so earnestly, that they shulde cōuerte vnto the) and dyd greate blasphemies. Therefore gauest thou them ouer in to the hāde of their enemies that vexed them.

And in §tyme of their trouble they cried vnto the, and thou hardest them from heauen: and thorow thy greate mercy thou gauest them sauours, which helped thē out of the hande of their enemies. But whan they came to rest, they turned back agayne to do euell before the: therefore ledest thou them in the hande of their enemies, so §they had §dominion ouer them. So they cōuerted, and cryed vnto the, and thou herdest them from heauen, and many a tyme hast thou delyuered them accordinge to thy greate mercy, and testified

Notwithstōdinge they were proude, and herkened not vnto thy cōmaundementes, but synned in thy lawes (which a man shulde do, & lyue in them) & turned their shulder awaye, & were styffnecked, & wolde not heare. And many yeares dydest thou forbearē them, & testified vnto them thorow thy sprete, euen by the office of thy prophetes, & yet wolde they not heare. Therefore gauest thou thē in to y^e hāde of y^e nacions in the londes. But for thy greate mercies sake thou hast not vtterly cōsumed them, nether forsaken them: for thou art a gracious and mercifull God.

F Now oure God, thou greate God, mightie and terrible, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy, regarde not a litle all the trauayle y^e hath happened vnto vs, & oure kynges, prynces, prestes, prophetes, fathers & all thy people, sence the tyme of the kynges of Assur vnto this daie. Thou art righteous in all y^e thou hast broughte vpō vs: for thou hast done righte. As for vs, we haue bene vngodly, and oure kynges, prynces, prestes & fathers haue not done after thy lawe, ner regarded thy cōmaundementes, & thy earnest exhortaciōs wherwith thou hast exhorted them, & haue not serued y^e in their kyngdome, and in thy greate goodes y^e thou gauest them, and in the large and plenteous lōde which thou gauest them to good, and haue not conuerted from their wicked workes. Beholde, therefore are we in bondage this daye: Yee euen in the lōde that thou gauest vnto oure fathers, to enioye the frutes and goodes therof, beholde, there are we bondmen. And greate is the increase of it vnto the kynges, whom thou hast set ouer vs because of our synnes, and they haue dominion ouer oure bodies and catell, and we are in greate trouble.

And in all this made we a sure couenaunt, & wrote it, & let oure prynces, Leuites & prestes seale it.

And f prestes and Leuites purified them selues, and clensed the people, the gates and the wall.

And I caused the prynces to go vp vpon the wall, and appoynted two greate queres of thankesgeuynge, which wētē on the righte hande of the wall towarde the Donggate, and after them wētē Hosaia, and halfe of the prynces of Iuda, t Asaria, Eszdras, Mesullam, Iuda, Ben Iamin, Semaia and Ieremy: and certayne of the prestes childrē with trompettes, namely Zachary f sonne of Ionathan, the sonne of Semaia, the sonne of Mathania, the sonne of Michaia, the sonne of Sachur, the sonne of Assaph, and his brethren, Semaia, Asareel, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nathaneel and Iuda and Hanani, with the musically instrumentes of Dauid y man of God.

D And Eszdras y scribe before the the towarde the Wellgate, and they wente vp ouer agaynst them vpon the steppes of the cite of Dauid at the goynge vp of the wall to the house of Dauid, vnto the Watergate Eastwarde.

The other quere of thankesgeuyng wente ouer against them, and I after them, and the halfe parte of the people vpon y wall, towarde y Fornacagate vwarde, vntyll y brode wall, and to y porte of Ephraim, and to the Oldgate, and to y Fyshgate, and to the tower of Hananeel, and to the tower of Meah, vntyll the Shepegate. And in y presongate stode they styll, and so stode the two queres of thankesgeuyng of the house of God, and I and the halfe of the rulers with me, and the prestes, namely Eliachim, Maeseia, Miniamin, Michaia, Elioenai, Zachary, Hanania, with troppetes, and Maeseia, Semaia, Eleasar, Vsi, Iohanen, Malchia, Elam and Aser. And the syngers songe loude, and Iesrahia was the ouerseer.

E And the same daye were there greatesacrifices offred, ⁊ they reioysed: for God had geuē them greates gladnesse, so that both the wyues and children were ioyfull, ⁊ the myrth of Ierusalem was herde farre of.

At the same tyme. were there men appointed ouer the treasure chestes (wherin were y Heue offerynges, the firstlinges and the tithes) that they shulde gather them out of y felde aboute the cities, to distribute the vnto the prestes and Leuites accordinge to the lawe: for Iuda was glad of the prestes, and Leuites, that they stode and wayted vpon the office of their God, and the office of the purification. And the syngers ⁊ porters stode after the commaundemēt of Dauid ⁊ of Salomon his sonne: * for in the tyme of Dauid and Assaph, were the chefe syngers founded, and the songes of prayse and thankesgeuyng vnto God. In the tyme of Zorobabel and Nehemias, dyd all Israel geue porciōs vnto the syngers and porters, euery daye his portion, and they gaue thinges halowed vnto the Leuites, and the Leuites gaue thinges that were sanctified, vnto the childrē of Aaron.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND what tyme as the boke of Moses was founde wyrtten therein, †y the Ammonites and Moabites shulde neuer come in to the congregacion of God, because they mett not the children of Israel with bred and water, ‡ and hyred Balaam against the, that he shulde curse them: neuertheles oure God turned y curse in to a blessinge. Now when they herde the lawe, they separated from Israel euery one that had myxte him selfe therein. And before this had the prest Eliasib deluiered the chest of y house of oure God vnto his kynsman Tobia: for he had made him a greates chest, and there had they aforetyme layed the meatofferynges, frankencense, vessell, and the tithes of corne, wyne and oyle (accordinge to the commaundement geuen to the Leuites, syngers and porters) and the Heueofferynges of the prestes.

But in all this was not I at Ierusalem: for in y two and thirtieth yere of Artaxerses kynge of Babilon, came I vnto the kynge, and after certayne dayes optayned I lycence of the kynge to come to Ierusalē. And I gat knowledge of y euell that Eliasib dyd vnto Tobia, in that he had made him a chest in the courte of the house of God, and it greued me sore, and I cast forth all the vessels of Tobias house out of the chest, and commaūded them to clense the chest. And thither broughte I agayne the vessels of the house of God, the meatofferyng and the incense.

And I perceaued, that the porcions of y Leuites were not geuen them, for the which cause the Leuites and syngers were fled, euery one to his londe for to worke. Then reprocured I the rulers, and sayde: Why forsake we the house of God? But I gathered them together, and set them in their place. Then brought all Iuda the tithes of corne, wyne and oyle vnto the treasure. And I made treasurers ouer y treasure, euen Selemia y prest, and Sadoc the scribe, ⁊ of the Leuites Pedaia, and vnder their hande Hanan the sonne of Sachur the sonne of Mathania: for they were counted faithfull, and their office was, to distribute vnto their brethren. §Thynke vpon me O my God here in, ⁊ wpe not out

At the same tyme sawe I some tredinge wyne presses on the Sabbath, and brynginge in clusters, and asses laden wyth wyne, grapes, fygges, and brynginge all maner of burthens vnto Ierusalem, vpon the Sabbath daye. And I rebuked them earnestly \hat{y} same daye that they solde \hat{y} vytayles. There dwelt mē of Tyre also therin, which broughte fysh and all maner of ware, and solde on the Sabbath vnto the childrē of Iuda and Ierusalem. Dyd not oure fathers euen thus, and oure God broughte all this plage vpon vs τ vpon this cite? And ye make the wrath more yet vpon Israel, in that ye breake the Sabbath.

O my God, thynke thou vpon them that are quyte of the presthode, and haue defyled the couenaunt of the presthode and of the Leuites. Thus censed I them from all soch as were outlandish, and appoynted the courses of the prestes and Leuites, euery one to his office, and to offre the wod at tymes appoynted, and the first frutes. Thynke thou vpon me (O my God) for the best.

Chap. X.

Of the auctorite of Mardocheus vnder the kyng.

The first Chapter.

IN the tyme of Ahasuerus, which reigned from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundredreth and seuen and twentye londes, what tyme as he sat on his seate roiall in the castell of Susan in the thirde yeaere of his reigne, he made a feast vnto all his prynces and seruantes, namely vnto the mightie men of Persia and Media, to the Debities and rulers of his countrees, that he mighte shewe the noble riches of his kingdome, and the glorious worshippe of his greatnesse, many dayes longe, euen an hundredreth and foure score dayes.

And whan these dayes were expyred, the kyng made a feast vnto all the people that were in the castell of Susan, both vnto greate and small, seuen dayes longe in the courte of the garden by the kynges palace: where there hanged whyte, reed & yalow clothes, fastened with coardes of lynnen and scarlet in siluer rynges, vpon pylers of Marble stone.

The benches were of golde and siluer made vpon a pauement of grene, white, yalow and black Marble. And & drinke was caried in vessels of golde, and there was euer chaunge of vessell. And the kinges wine was moch acordynge to the power of the kyng. And noman was appoynted what he shulde drinke: for the kyng had commaunded all the officers of his house, that euery one shulde do as it lyked him. And the quene Vasthi made a feast also for the wemen in the palace of Ahasuerus. And on the seuenth daye whan the kynge was mery of the wine, he cōmaunded Mehuman, Bistha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Sethar and Charcas, the seuen chamberlaynes (that dyd seruyce in the presence of kynge Ahasuerus) to fetch the quene Vasthi with the crowne regall, that he might shewe ſ̃ people and prynces hir fairnesse: for she was bewtiful. But the quene Vasthi wolde not come at the kynges worde by his chamberlaynes. Then was the kynge very wroth, and his indignaciō kyndled in him.

¶ And the kynge spake to ſ̃ wyse men that had vnderstandinge in the ordinaunces of the londe (for the kinges matters must be hādled before all soch as haue knowlege of the lawe and iudgment: And the nexte vnto him were, Charsena, Sethar, Admatha, Tharsis, Meres, Marsena and Memuchan, the seuen prynces of the Persiās, and Meedes, which sawe the kynges face, and satt aboue in the kyngdome) What lawe shulde be execute vpon the quene Vasthi, because she dyd not acordynge to the worde of the kynge by his chamberlaines. Thē saide Memuchā before the kynge & the prynces: The quene Vasthi hath not onely done euell agaynst the kinge but also agaynst all the prynces and all the people in all the londes of kynge Ahasuerus, for this dede of the quene shall come abrode vnto all wemen, so that they shall despyse their huszbandes before their eyes, and shall saye: The kynge Ahasuers cōmaunded Vasthi ſ̃ quene to come before him, but she wolde not. And so shall the pryncesses in Persia and Media saye lykewyse vnto all the kynges prynces, whan they heare of this dede of the quene, thus shall there aryse despytefulnes and wrath ynough. Yf it please the kynge, let there go a kyngly commaundemēt from him, and let it be wryten acordynge to the lawe of the Persians and Medians (and not to be transgressed) that Vasthi come nomore before kynge Ahasuerus, and let the kynge geue the kyngdome vnto another that is better then she.

And ſ̃ this wrytinge of the kynge which shalbe made, be published thorow out all his empyre (which is greate) that all wyues maye holde their huszbandes in honoure, both amonge greate and smal.

This pleased the kynge and the prynces, and the kynge dyd acordynge to the worde of Memuchan. Then were there letters sent forth in to all the kynges londes, in to euery londe acordinge to the wrytinge therof, and to euery people after their lāguage, ſ̃ euery man shulde be lorde in his awne house. And this caused he be spoken after the language of his people.

The ij. Chapter.

AFTER these actes whan the displeasure of kynge Ahasuerus was layed, he thoughte vpon Vasthi, what she had done, and what was concluded concernynge her. Then sayde the kynges seruauantes: Let there be fayre yonge virgins soughte for the kynge, and let the kynge appoynte ouerseers in all ſ̃ londes of his empyre, that they maye brynge together all fayre yonge virgins vnto the castel of Susan to the Wemens buyldinge, vnder the hande of Hegai the kynges chamberlayne, that kepeth the wemen, and let him geue them their apparell. And loke which damsell pleaseth the kynge, let her be quene in Vasthis steade. This pleased the kynge, and he dyd so.

In the castell of Susan there was a Iewe, whose name was Mardocheus, the sonne of Iair, the sonne of Simeī, the sonne of Cis, the sonne of Iemini, which was caried awaye from Ierusalem, *whan Iechonias the kynge of Iuda was led awaye, (whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon caried awaye) and he norished Hadassa (that is Hester) his vnclēs daughter: for she had nether father ner mother, and she was a fayre and beutyfull damsell. And whan hir father and mother dyed, Mardocheus receaued hir as his awne daughter.

Now whan ſ̃ kynges cōmaundemēt and cōmyssion was published, & many dāsels were broughte together vnto the castell of Susan vnder ſ̃ hande of Hegai, Hester, was takē also vnto ſ̃ kynges house vnder ſ̃ hande of Hegai ſ̃ keper of ſ̃ wemē, & the damsell pleased him, & she founde grace in his sighte. And he put her with hir maydēs in ſ̃ best place of ſ̃ Womēs buildige. And Hester shewed it not vnto hir people & hir kyared: for Mardocheus had charged her, ſ̃ she shulde not tell it. And Mardocheus walked euery daye before ſ̃ courte of ſ̃ Womēs buyldinge, ſ̃ he might knowe how Hester dyd, and what shulde become of her.

C And whan the appoynted tyme of euery damsell came that she shulde come to þe kynges Ahasuerus, after that she had bene twolue monethes in the deckynge of the wemen (for their deckynge must haue so moch tyme, namely sixe monethes with Balme & Myrre, & sixe monethes with good spyces, so were the wemē beutified) then wente there one damsell vnto þe kyng, and what so euer she requyred, þe must be geuē her to go with her out of the Womens buyldinge vnto þe kynges palace. And whan one came in the euenynge, þe same wēte frō him on þe morow in to þe seconde house of wemen, vnder the hande of Saasgas the kynges chamberlayne, which kepte þe concubines. And she must come vnto the kyng nomore, excepte it pleased the kyng, and that he caused her to be called by name.

Now whan the tyme came of Hester the daughter of Abihail Mardocheus vncle (whom he had receaued as his awne daughter) þe she shulde come to the kyng, she desyred nothing but what Hegai the kynges chamberlayne the keper of the wemen sayde.

And Hester founde fauoure in the sighte of all them that loked vpon her. And Hester was taken vnto kyng Ahasuerus in to the house royall, in the tenth moneth which is called Tebeth, in the seuenthe yere of his reigne.

D And the kyng loued Hester aboue all the wemen, and she founde grace and mercy in his sighte before all the virgins: and he set the quenes croune vpon hir heade, and made her quene in steade of Vasthi. And the kyng made a greete feast vnto all his prynces and seruautes (which feast was because of Hester) and let the londes be in quyetnes, & gaue royall giftes.

And whan the virgins were gathered together the seconde tyme, Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate. And as yet had not Hester shewed hir kynred and hir people, acordinge as Mardocheus had bydden her: for Hester dyd after the worde of Mardocheus, like as whan he was hir tutoure. At the same tyme whyle Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate, two of the kynges chamberlaynes, Bigthan and Theres which kepte the dore, were wroth, and sought to laye their handes on the kyng Ahasuerus: Wherof Mardocheus gat knowlege, and tolde it vnto quene Hester, and Hester certified the kyng thetherof in Mardocheus name. And whan inquisition was made, it was founde so. And they were both hanged on tre: and it was wyttē in the Cronicles before the kyng.

The iij. Chapter.

AFTER these actes dyd the kyng promote Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite, and set him hye, & set his seate aboue all þe prynces that were with him. And all the kynges seruautes that were in the gate, bowed their knees, and dyd reuerence vnto Aman: for the kyng had so comaunded. But Mardocheus bowed not the knee, and worshipped him not. Then the kynges seruautes which were in the kynges gate, sayde vnto Mardocheus: Why transgressest thou the kynges commaundement? And whan they spake this daylie vnto him, and he folowed them not, they tolde Aman, that they mighte se whether Mardocheus matters wolde endure: for he had tolde them, þe he was a Iewe. And whā Aman sawe, that Mardocheus bowed not the knee vnto him, ner worshipped him, he was full of indignacion & despyte, that he shulde laye hondes onely on Mardocheus: for they had shewed him þe people of Mardocheus, but he sought to destroye the people of Mardocheus, and all the people that were in the whole empyre of Ahasuerus.

B In the first moneth that is the moneth Nissan, in þe twolueth yere of kinge Ahasuerus, was there occasion and oportunitie sought by Aman, from one daye to another, and from the same moneth vnto the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar. And Amā sayde vnto kinge Ahasuerus: There is a people scatered abroad and dispersed amonge all people in all the londes of thine empire, and their lawe is cōtrary vnto all people, and they do not after the kynges lawes, nether is it the kynges profit to suffre thē after this maner. Yf it please the kyng, let him wryte, that they maye be destroyed, & so wil I weye downe ten thousande talentes of siluer, vnder the handes of the workmen, to be brought in to the kynges chamber. Then toke the kyng his ryng from his hande, and gaue it vnto Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite the Iewes enemye. And the kinge sayde vnto Aman: Let the siluer be geuen the, and that people also, to do withall what pleaseth the.

C Then were the kynges scribes called on þ̃ thirteenth daye of the first moneth, & there was wrytten (acordynge as Aman commaunded) vnto the kynges prynces, and to the Debites euery where in the londes, and to the capytaynes of euery people in the countrees on euery syde, acordynge to the wrytinge of euery nacion, and after their language in the name of kyng Ahasuerus, and sealed with the kynges ryng. And the wrytynges were sent by postes in to all the kynges lodes, to rote out, to kyll, and to destroye all Iewes, both yonge and olde, childrē and wemen in one daye (namely vpon the thirteenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar) and to spoyle their goodes.

This was the summe of the wrytinge, þ̃ there shulde be a commaundement geuen in all londes, to be published vnto all people, þ̃ they shulde be ready agaynst the same daye. And the postes wente in all the haist acordynge to the kynges commaundement. And in the castell of Susan was the cōmaundement deuysed. And the kyng & Aman sat & dranke. But þ̃ cite of Susan was disquieted.

The iiii. Chapter.

A WHAN Mardocheus perceaued all that was done, he rēte his clothes, and put on a sack cloth, & aszshes, & wente out in to the myddes of the cite, and cried loude and lamentably, and came before the kynges gate: for there might no man entre within the kynges gate, that had a sack cloth on. And in all lodes & places, as farre as the kynges worde and commaundement extended, there was greate lamentacion amonge the Iewes, and many fasted, wepte, mourned, & laye in sack clothes & in aszshes. So Hesters dāsels, and hir chamberlaines, came and tolde it her. Then was the quene exceedingly astonnyed. And she sent rayment, that Mardocheus shulde put them on, and laye the sackcloth from him. But Mardocheus wolde not take them. Thē called Hester Hathac one of the kynges chamberlaines (which stode before her) and gaue him a cōmaundement vnto Mardocheus, that he might knowe what it were, and wherefore he dyd so. So Hathac wente forth to Mardocheus vnto the strete of the cite, which was before the kynges gate.

33 And Mardocheus tolde him of all þ̃ had happened vnto him, and of the summe of siluer that Amā had promysed to weie downe in the kynges chamber because of þ̃ Iewes for to destroye them, and he gaue him the cōpye of the commaundement, that was deuysed at Susan to destroye them, that he mighte shewe it vnto Hester, and to speake to her and charge her, þ̃ she shulde go in to the kyng, and make her prayer and supplicacion vnto him for hir people.

And whā Hathac came in, and tolde Hester the wordes of Mardocheus, Hester spake vnto Hathac, and cōmaunded him to saye vnto Mardocheus: All the kynges seruantes, and the people in the londes of the kyng knowe, that who so euer commeth within the courte vnto þ̃ kyng, whether it be man or woman, which is not called, the cōmaundement is that the same shal dye immediatly, excepte the kyng holde out the goldē cepter vnto him, that he maye lyue. As for me, I haue not bene called to come in to the kyng now this thirtie dayes.

And whā Mardocheus was certified of Hesters wordes, Mardocheus bad saie againe vnto Hester: Thyne not to saue thine awne life, whyle thou art in þ̃ kynges house before all Iewes: for yf thou holdest thy peace at this tyme, then shal the Iewes haue helpe and delyueraunce out of another place, & thou & thy fathers house shalbe destroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kyngdome, for this tymes sake? Hester bad geue Mardocheus this answer: Go thou thy waye then, & gather together all þ̃ Iewes þ̃ are founde at Susan, & fast ye for me, þ̃ ye eate not & drynke not in thre dayes, nether daye ner nighte. I & my damsels wil fast likewyse, & so wyl I go in to the kyng cōtrary to the cōmaundement: yf I perishe, I perishe. So Mardocheus wente his waye, & dyd all þ̃ Hester had cōmaunded him.

The v. Chapter.

A ND on the thirde daye put Hester on 2 hir royall apparell, and stode in the courte of þ̃ kynges palace within ouer agaynst the kynges house. And þ̃ kyng sat vpō his royall seate in þ̃ kynges palace ouer agaynst þ̃ dore of the house. And whan the kyng sawe Hester the quene stōdinge in the courte, she founde grace in his sighte. And þ̃ kyng helde out the goldē cepter in his hāde towarde Hester. So Hester stepte forth, and touched the toppe of þ̄ cepter. Then sayde þ̄ kyng vnto her: What wilt thou quene Hester? ⁊ what requyrest thou? axe euē the halfe of þ̄ empyre, ⁊ it shal be geuē the. Hester sayde: Yf it please þ̄ kyng, let þ̄ kyng ⁊ Aman come this daye vnto þ̄ banket þ̄ I haue prepared. The kyng sayde: Cause Aman to make haist, þ̄ he maye do as Hester hath saide.

B Now whā the kyng ⁊ Aman came to þ̄ banket þ̄ Hester had prepared, the kyng sayde vnto Hester whan he had dronken wyne: Hester, what is thy petition? it shal be geuē the. And what requyrest thou? euen the halfe of the empyre, it shal be done.

Then answered Hester and sayde: My petition and desire is, yf I haue founde grace in þ̄ sight of the kyng, ⁊ yf it please the kyng to geue me my petition, and to fulfill my request, then let the kyng ⁊ Aman come to the banket þ̄ I shal prepare for the, and so wil I do tomorow as the kyng hath sayde.

C Then wente Aman forth the same daye ioyfull and mery in his mynde. And whan he sawe Mardocheus in the kynges gate, þ̄ he stode not vp and kneled before him, he was full of indignacion at Mardocheus. Neuertheles he refrained himselfe: and whā he came home, he sent, and called for his frēdes, and Seres his wyfe, and tolde them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, all together how the kyng had promoted him so greatly, and how that he was taken aboute the prynces and seruantes of the kyng. Aman sayde morouer: Yee and Hester the quene let no man come with the kyng vnto the bancket that she had prepared, excepte me, and tomorow am I bidden vnto her also with the kyng. But in all this am I not satisfied as longe as I se Mardocheus the Iewe syttinge in þ̄ kynges gate. Then sayde Seres his wife and all his frendes vnto him: Let the make a galowe of fifty cubites hie, ⁊ tomorow speake thou vnto the kyng, that Mardocheus maye be hanged thereon, yf thou comest merely with the kyng vnto the bancket. Aman was well content withall, and caused a galowe to be prepared.

The bi. Chapter.

A THE same night coude not the kyng slepe, and he commaunded to brynge þ̄ Cronicles and storyes: which whā they were red before þ̄ kyng, they happened on the place where it was wryttē, how Mardocheus had tolde, that the kynges two chāberlaynes (which kepte þ̄ tresholdes) sought to laie hondes on kinge Ahasuerus. And the kyng sayde: What worshippe and good haue we done to Mardocheus therfore? Then sayde the kynges seruantes that mynistrd vnto him. There is nothinge done for him. And the kyng sayde: Who is in þ̄ courte? (for Aman was gone in to þ̄ courte without before þ̄ kynges house, þ̄ he might speake vnto þ̄ kyng to hange Mardocheus on þ̄ tre, þ̄ he had prepared for him.) And the kynges seruantes saide vnto him: Beholde, Amā stōdeth in the courte. The kyng sayde: Let him come in. And whā Amā came in, B kyng sayde vnto him: What shal be done vnto þ̄ mā, whom the kyng wolde fayne brynge vnto worshippe? But Hamā thought in his hert: Whom shulde the kyng els be glad to brynge vnto worshippe, but me? And Aman sayde vnto the kyng: Let the man vnto whom the kyng wolde be glad to do worshippe, be broughte hither, that he maye be araied with the royall garmentes which the kyng vseth to weere: and the horse that the kyng rydeth vpon, and that the crowne royall maye be set vpon his heade. And let this rayment and horse be deluyered vnder the hande of one of the kynges prynces, that he maye araye the man withall (whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure) and cary him vpon the horse thorow the strete of the cite, and cause it to be proclaimed before him: Thus shal it be done to euery man, whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure.

C The kyng sayde: Make haist, and take (as thou hast sayde) the raymēt and the horse, and do euen so with Mardocheus þ̄ Iewe that sitteth before the kynges gate, and let nothinge fayle of all that thou hast spoken. Then toke Aman the rayment and the horse, and arrayed him, and broughte him on horszbacke thorow the strete of the cite, and proclaimed before him: Euen thus shall it be done vnto euery man whom the kyng is disposed to honoure. And Mardocheus came agayne to the kynges gate, but Aman gat him home in all the haist, mournynge with bare heade, and tolde Seres his wyfe and all his frendes, euery thynge that had happened him. Then sayde his wise men and Seres his wyfe vnto him: Yf it be Mardocheus of the sede of the Iewes, before whō thou hast begonне to fall, thou canst do nothyng vnto him, but shalt fall before him. While they were yet talkyng with him, came the kynges chamberlaynes, and caused Aman to make haist to come vnto the bancket that Hester had prepared.

The iij. Chapter.

AND when the kyng and Aman came to the bancket that quene Hester had prepared, the kyng sayde vnto Hester on the seconde daye when he had drōken wyne: What is thy peticion quene Hester, that it maye be geuen the? And what requyrest thou? Yee axe euen halfe of the empyre, and it shal be done. Hester ſ kyng answered and sayde: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sighte (O kyng) and yf it please the kyng, then graunte me my lyfe at my desyre and my people for my petitions sake: for we are solde to be destroyed, to be slayne, and to perishe. And wolde God we were solde to be bondmen and bondwomen, then wolde I holde my tonge, so shulde not the enemye be so hye to the kynges harme. The kyng Ahasuerus spake and sayde vnto quene Hester: What is he that? Or where is he ſ darre presume in his mynde to do soch a thinge after that maner? Hester sayde: The enemye and aduersary is this wicked Aman.

B As for Amā, he was exceedingly afraied before ſ kyng and ſ quene. And the kyng arose frō the bancket and frō ſ wyne in his displeasure, and wente in to the palace garden. And Aman stode vp, and besoughte quene Hester for his life: for he sawe ſ there was a mischaunce prepared for him of the kyng already.

And when the kyng came agayne out of the palace garden in to ſ parler where they had eaten, Aman had layed him vpon the bed that Hester sat vpon. Then saide the kyng: wyl he force the quene also besyde me in the house? As soone as that worde wente out of the kynges mouth, they couered Amans face. And Harbona one of the chamberlaynes that stode before the kyng, sayde: Beholde, there stondesth a galowe in Amā house fiftie cubytes hye, which he had made for Mardocheus, that spake good for ſ kyng. The kyng sayde: Hange him theron. So they hanged Aman on the galowe that he had made for Mardocheus. Then was the kynges wrath stilled.

The viij. Chapter.

THE same daye dyd kyng Ahasuerus geue the house of Aman the Iewes enemye, vnto quene Hester. And Mardocheus came before ſ kyng: for Hester tolde how that he belōged vnto her. And the kyng put of his fynger rynge, which he had taken from Aman, and gaue it vnto Mardocheus. And Hester set Mardocheus ouer the house of Aman. And Hester spake yet more before the kyng, and fell downe at his fete, and besought him, that he wolde put awaye the wyckednes of Aman the Agagite, and his deuice that he had ymagined against ſ Iewes. And the kyng helde out the golden cepter vnto Hester. Then rose Hester, and stode before the kyng, and sayde: Yf it please the kyng, and yf I haue fōunde grace in his sight, and yf it be cōuenient for the kyng, and yf it be accepted in his sighte, then let it be wryttē, ſ the letters of the deuyce of Amā the sonne of Amadathai the Agagite, maie be called agayne: which letters he wrote, to destroie ſ Iewes in all ſ kynges lōdes. For how can I se the euell that shal happē vnto my people? and how can I loke vpon the destruction of my kynred?

Then sayde ſ kyng Ahasuerus vnto quene Hester, and to Mardocheus the Iewe: Beholde, I haue geuen Hester the house of Aman, and him haue they hanged vpon a tre, because he layed hāde vpon ſ Iewes. Wryte ye now therfore for the Iewes, as it liketh you in the kynges name, and seale it with ſ kynges rynge (for the wrytinges that were wrytten in ſ kynges name, and sealed with the kynges rynge, durst no man dysanulle.) Then were the kynges scribes called at the same tyme in the thirde moneth, that is the moneth Siuan, on the thre and twentieth daie.

And it was wrytten (as Mardocheus cōmaunded) vnto the Iewes and to the prynces, to the Debities and captaynes in the londes from India vntyll Ethiopia, namely, an hundred and seuen and twenty londes, vnto euery one accordinge to the wrytinge therof, vnto euery people after their speche, and to the Iewes accordinge to their wrytinge and language.

And it was written in the kyng Ahasuerus name, and sealed with the kynges rynge. And by postes that rode vpon swyfte yonge Mules, sent he the wrytinges, wher in the

kyng graunted the Iewes (in what cities so euer they were) to gather them selues together, and to stonde for their lyfe, and for to rote out, to slaye, and to destroye all the power of the people and londe that wolde trouble them, with children and women, and to spoyle their good vpon one daye in all the londes of kyng Ahasuerus, namely vpon the thirteenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar.

D The summe of the wrytinge was, how there was a cōmaundement geuen in all londes to be published vnto all the people, that ſ Iewes shulde be ready agaynst that daye to auenge them selues on their enemies. And the postes that rode vpon the Mules, made haist with all spede, accordinge to the kynges worde: and the commaundement was deuysed in the castel of Susan.

As for Mardocheus, he wente out from the kyng in royall apparell of yalow and whyte, and wyth a greate crowne of golde, beyng arayed with a garment of linnen and purple, and ſ cite of Susan reioysed ¶ was glad: but vnto the Iewes there was come light and gladnesse, ¶ ioye ¶ worshippe. And in all londes and cities, in to what places so euer the kynges worde and commaundemēt reached, there was ioye ¶ myrth, prosperite and good dayes amonge the Iewes: in so much that many of the people in the londe became of the Iewes beleue, for the feare of the Iewes came vpon them.

The ix. Chapter.

A *I*N the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar, vpon the thyrteenth daye, which the kynges worde and cōmaundement had apoynted, that it shulde be done, euē vpon ſ same daie ſ the enemies shulde haue destroyed the Iewes to haue oppressed them, it turned contrary wise, euen ſ the Iewes shulde subdue their enemies. Then gathered the Iewes together in their cities within all ſ londes of kyng Ahasuerus, to laye honde on such as wolde do thē euell, ¶ no man coulede withstonde them: for ſ feare of thē was come ouer all people. And all the rulers in the londes, and prynces and Debities, and officers of the king promoted the Iewes: for the feare of Mardocheus came vpō thē. For Mardocheus was greate in the kynges house, ¶ the reporte of him was noised in all lōdes, how he increased ¶ grewe.

Thus the Iewes smote all their enemies with a sore slaughter, and slewe and destroyed, ¶ dyd after their wyll vnto such as were their aduersaries. And at ſ castell of Susan slewe the Iewes and destroyed fyue hūdreth men: ¶ slewe Parsandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmashta, Arissai, B Aridai, Vaiesatha, the ten sonnes of Aman ſ sonne of Amadathi ſ enemie of the Iewes: but on his goodes they layed no handes. At the same tyme was the kyng certified of the nombre of those that were slaine at the castell of Susan. And the kyng sayde vnto quene Hester: The Iewes haue slayne and destroyed fyue hūdreth men at ſ castell of Susan, and the ten sonnes of Amā: What shal they do in the other londes of ſ kyng? What is thy petition, that it maye be geuen the? ¶ what requiress thou more to be done? Hester sayde: Yf it please the kyng, let him suffice the Iewes tomorow also to do accordinge vnto this dayes commaundement, that they maye hange Amans ten sonnes vpō ſ tre. And the kyng charged to do so, and the commaundement was deuysed at Susan, ¶ Amans ten sonnes were hanged. And the Iewes gathered thē selues together at Susan, vpon the fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, and slewe thre hundreth men at Susan, but on their goodes they laied no hādes.

As for the other Iewes in the kynges lōdes, C they came together, ¶ stode for their lyues, ¶ gatt rest frō their enemies: and slewe of their enemies fyue and seuentye thousande, howbeit they layed no hondes on their goodes. This was done on the thirtēth daie of the moneth Adar, and on the fourteenth daye of the same moneth rested they, which (daye) they ordeyned to be a daye of feastinge and gladnesse. But the Iewes at Susan were come together both on the thyrteenth daye and on the fourteenth, and on the fyfteenth daye they rested, and the same daye ordeyned they to be a daye of feastinge ¶ gladnes. Therefore the Iewes that dwelt in the vyllages and vnwalled townes, ordeyned ſ fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, to be a daye of feastinge and gladnes, and one sent giftes vnto another.

And Mardocheus wrote these actes, and sent the wrytinges vnto all the Iewes ſ were in all ſ londes of kyng Ahasuerus, both nye and farre, that they shulde yearly receaue and holde the fourteenth and fifteenth daie of the

D moneth Adar, as the daies wherin y Iewes came to rest from their enemies, a as a moneth wherin their payne was turned to ioye, and their sorowe in to prosperite: that they shulde obserue the same as dayes of wealth and gladnes, and one to sende giftes vnto another, a to distribute vnto the poore.

And the Iewes receaued it that they had begonne to do, and that Mardocheus wrote vnto them: how that Aman the sonne of Amadathai all y Iewes enemye, had deuysed to destroye all the Iewes, and caused the lot to be cast for to put them in feare, and to brynge them to naughte: and how Hester wente and spake to the kynge, that thorow letters his wicked deuyce (which he ymagyned agaynst the Iewes) might be turned vpon his awne heade, and how he and his sonnes were hanged on the tre. For the which cause they called this daye Purim after the name of the lot, acordynge to all y wordes of this wrytinge: and what they the selues had sene, and what had happened vnto them.

E And the Iewes set it vp, and toke it vpon them and their sede, and vpon all soch as ioyned themselves vnto them, that they wolde not mysse to obserue these two dayes yearly, acordynge as they were wryttē and appoynted, how y these dayes are not to be forgotten, but to be kepte of childers children amōge all kynreds in all londes and cities. They are the dayes of Purim, which are not to be ouerslipte amonge the Iewes, and the memoriall of them oughte not to perishe from their sede.

And quene Hester the daughter of Abihail and Mardocheus the Iewe, wrote with all auctorite, to confirme this seconde wrytinge of Purim, and sent the letters vnto all the Iewes in the hundreth and seuen and twentie londes of y empyre of Ahasuerus, with frendly and faithfull wordes, to confirme these dayes of Purim, in their tyme appoynted, acordynge as Mardocheus the Iewe and Hester the quene had ordeined cōcernynge them: lyke as they vpon their soule and vpon their sede had cōfirmed the actes of the *fastinges and of hir cōplainte. And Hester cōmaunded to stablish these actes of this Purim, and to wryte them in a boke.

The i. Chapter.

AND the kynge Ahasuerus layed tribute a vpon the londe, and vpon the Iles of the See. As for all y worke of his power and auctoryte; and y greate worshippe of Mardocheus, which the kynge gaue him, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Media a Persia, For Mardocheus the Iewe was the seconde nexte vnto kynge Ahasuerus, and greate amonge y Iewes, and accepted amonge the multitude of his brethren, as one y seketh the welth of his people, and speaketh the best for all his sede.

The first Chapter.

IN the lōde of Hus^a there was a man called Iob: an innocent and vertuous man, soch one as feared God, and eschued euell. This man had^a vij. sonnes, and iij. daughters. His substaunce was vij. M. shepe, iij. M. camels, v. C. yock of oxen, v. C. she asses, and a very greate housholde: so ^y he was one of the most principall men amōge all them of the east cowntre. His sonnes now wente on euery man, and made bankettes: one daye in one house, another daye in another, and sent for their iij. sisters, to eate & drinke with them. So when they had passed ouer the tyme of their banquettinge rounde aboute, Iob sent for them, and clensed them agayne, stode vp early, and offred for euery one a brētofferinge. For Iob thought thus: peraduenture my sonnes haue done some offence, and haue bene vnthankfull to God in their hertes. And thus dyd Iob euery daye.

Now vpon a tyme, when the seruauentes of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: I haue gone aboute the lōde, ^aand walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: hast thou not considered my seruauent Iob, how that he is an innocēt and vertuous mā: soch one as feareth God, and eschueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? Sathan answered, and sayde vnto the LORDE: Doth Iob feare God for naught? hast thou not preserued him, his house, and all his substaunce on euery syde? hast thou not blessed the workes of his hondes? Is not his possession encreaced in the londe? But laye thyne honde vpō him a litle, touch once all that he hath, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: lo all that he hath, be in thy power: only vpon him self se that thou laye not thine honde. Then wente Sathan forth from the LORDE.

Now vpon a certayne daye when his sonnes C

and daughters were eatinge, and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, there came a messaunger vnto Iob, and sayde: Whyle the oxen were a plowinge, and the Asses goinge in the pasture besyde them: the Sabees came in viciōtly, and toke them all awaye: yee they haue slayne the seruauntes with the swearde, and I only ranne my waye, to tell the.

And whyle he was yet speakynge, there came another, and sayde: The fyre of God is fallen from heauen, it hath consumed ⁊ brēt vp all the shepe and seruauntes: and I only ranne my waye, to tell the. In the meane season whyle he was yet speakinge, there came another, and sayde: The Caldees made thre armies, and fell in vpon the camels, which they haue caried awaye, yee and slayne the seruauntes with the swearde: and I only am gottē awaye, to tell the. Whyle he was speakinge, there came yet another, and sayde: Thy sonnes and daughters were eatinge and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, and sodenly there came a mightie greate wynde out off the South, and smote the iij. corners of the house: which fell vpon thy children, so that they are deed: and I am gOTTen awaye alone, to tell the.

Then Iob stode vp, and rente his clothes shaued his heade, fell downe vpon the groude, worshipped, and sayde: "Naked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall I turne thither agayne. "The LORDE gaue, and the LORDE hath taken awaye (the LORDE hath done his pleasure) now 'blessed be y name off the LORDE. In all these thinges dyd Iob not offende, ner murmured foolishly agaynst God.

The ij. Chapter.

IT happened also apon a tyme, "that when the seruauntes of God came ⁊ stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them, and stode before him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered and sayde: "I haue gone aboute the lōde, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathan: Hast thou not considered my seruaunt Iob, how that he is an innocent ⁊ vertuous man soch one as feareth God, and eschueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? But thou mouedest me agaynst him, to punysh him: yet is it in wayne, for he contynueth still in his godlynesse.

Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: Skygne for skygne? yee a man will geue all y euer he hath, for his life. But laye thine honde vpon him, touch him once vpon the bone and flesh, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: lo, there hast thou him in thy power, but spare his life.

So wente Sathan forth from the LORDE, and smote Iob with maruelous sore byles, from the sole off the fote vnto his crowne: so that he sat vpon the grounde in the ashes, and scraped of the etter off his sores with a potsherde.

Then sayde his wife vnto him: "Dost thou yet cōtinue in thy perfectnesse? curse God, ⁊ dye. But Iob sayde vnto her: Thou speakest like a foolish womā. Seinge we haue receaued prosperite at the honde of God, wherefore shulde we not be content with aduersite also? "In all these thinges, dyd not Iob synne with his lippes.

Now when Iobs frendes herde of all y trouble, that happened vnto him, there came thre off them, euery one from his owne place: namely, Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite, and Sophar the Naamathite.

For they were agreed together to come, to shewe their compassion vpon him, and to comforte him. So when they lifte vp their eyes a farre off, they knewe him not.

Then they cried, and wepte: then euery one off them rente his clothes, and sprynckled dust vpon their heades in the ayre. They sat them downe by him also vpon the grounde, vij. dayes and vij. nightes. Nether was there eny of them that spake one worde vnto him, for they sawe that his payne was very greate.

The iij. Chapter.

AFTER this opened Iob his mouth, and cursed his daye, and sayde: "lost be that daye, wherin I was borne: and the night, in the which it was sayde: there is a manchilde conceived. The same daye be turned to darknesse, and not regarded of God from aboue, nether be shynd vpō with light: but be couered with darcknesse, and the shadowe of death. Let the dymme cloude fall vpon it, and let it be lapped in with sorowe. Let the darckstorne ouercome y^e night, let it not be reckened amonge the dayes off the yeaere, ner counted in the monethes. Despyed be that night, and discommended: let them that curse the daye, geue it their curse also, euen those that be ready to rayse vp Leuiathan. Let the starres be dymme thorow darcknesse of it. Let it loke for light, but let it se none, nether the rysynge vp of the fayre mornynge: because it shut not vp the wombe that bare me, ner hyd these sorowes fro myne eyes.

B Alas, why dyed I not in y^e byrth? "Why dyd not I perysh, as soone as I came out of my mothers wōbe? Why set they me vpō y^eir knees? Why gaue they me suck with their brestes? Then shulde I now haue lyen still, I shulde haue slepte, and bene at rest: like as the kynges ād lordes of y^e earth, which buylde them selues speciall places: As the prynces that haue greate substaunce of golde, ⁊ their houses full of syluer. O that I vtterly had no beyng, or were as a thiȝe borne out of tyme (that is put asyde) ether as yonge children, which neuer sawe the light. There must the wicked cease from their tyranny, there soch C as are ouerlaboured, be at rest: there are those letten out fre, which haue bene in preson, so that they heare nomore the voyce of the oppressoure: There are small and greate: the bonde man, and he that is fre frō his master.

Wherefore is the light geuen, to him that is in mysery? and life vnto them, that haue heuy hertes? (Which longe for death, and it commeth not: for yf they might fynde their graue, they wolde be maruelous glad, as those that dygge vp treasure) To the man whose waye is hyd, which God kepeth backe from him.

This is the cause, that I syghe before I eate, and my roaringes fall out like a water floude. For the thyng that I feared, is come vpon me: and the thyng that I was afrayed of, is happened vnto me. Was I not happy? Had I not quyetnesse? Was I not in rest? And now commeth soch mysery vpon me.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THEN answered Eliphaz of Theman and sayde vnto him: Yf we begynne to comon with the, peraduēture thou wilt be mys-content, but who can witholde himself from speakyng? Beholde, thou hast bene a teacher of many, and hast comforted the weery hondes.

Thy wordes haue set vp those that were fallen, thou hast refreshed the weake knees. But now that the plage is come vpon the, thou shrēkest awaye: now that it hath touched thyself, thou art faint harted. ^aWhere is now thy feare of God, thy stedfastnesse, thy patience, and the perfectnesse of thy life? Considre (I praye the) who euer peryshed, beyng an innocent? Or, when were the godly destroyed? ^cAs for those that plowe wickednesse (as I haue sene myself) and sowe myschefe, they reape y^e same. For whē God bloweth vpon them, they perysh, and are destroyed thorow the blast of his wrath. The roaringe of the lyon, the cryenge off the lyonesse, ⁊ y^e teth off y^e lyōs whelpes are brokē. The greate lyon perysheth, because he cā get no pray and the lyons whelpes are scatred abroad.

There is spoken vnto me a thyng in coun- B cell, which hath geuen a terrible sounde in myne eare, with a vision in the night, ^dwhen men are fallen a slepe. Soch feare and drede came vpō me, that all my bones shoke. And when the wynde passed ouer by me, the hayres of my flesh stode vp.

Then stode there one before me, whose face I knewe not: an ymage there was, and the wether was still, so that I herde this voyce: Maye a man be iustified before God? ^eMaye there eny man be iudged to be clene, by reason of his owne workes? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaythfulnesse amonge his owne seruantes, and proude disobedience amonge his angels.

How moch more thē shal they (that dwell in houses of claye, whose foundation is but earth) be moth eaten? They shalbe destroyed from the mornynge vnto the euenynge: yee they shall perish, or euer they be awarre: and be taken awaye so clene, that none of thē shall remayne, but be deed, or euer they be awarre off it.

"I haue sene my self, when the foolish was depe roted, that his bewty was sodely destroyed: that his children were without prosperite or health: that they were slayne in the dore, and no mā to deluyuer them: "that his haruest was eaten vp off the hungrie: that the weapened man had spoyled it, and that the thurstie had droncke vp his riches. It is not the earth that bryngeth forth trauayle, nether commeth sorow out of ȝ grounde: but it is man, that is borne vnto mysery, like as the byrde for to fle.

B But now will I speake off the LORDE, and talke of God: which doth thinges, that are vnsearcheable, "and marueles without nōbre: Which geueth rayne vpō the earth, and poureth water vpon all thinges: which setteth vp them of lowe degre, and sendeth prosperite, to those that are in heuynesse: Which destroyeth the deuyces of the sotyll, "so that they are not able to perfourme the thynges that they take in hōde: which compaseth ȝ wyse in their owne craftynesse, and ouertroweth the counsell of the wicked: "In so moch that they runne in to darcknesse by fayre daye, and grope aboute them at the noone daye, like as in the night.

"And so he deluyuereth the poore from the swearde, from their mouth, and from the hōde of the cruell: that the poore maye haue hope, ȝ that the mouth of the oppressoure maye be stopped.

C Beholde, "happie is the man, whom God punysheth: therfore, despyse not thou ȝ chastenyng of the Almighty. For though he make a wounde, he geueth a medecyne agayne: though he smyte, his honde maketh whole agayne.

He deluyuereth the out of sixe troubles, so that in the seuenth there can no harme touch the. In the myddest of hunger he saueth ȝ from death: and when it is warre, from the power of the swearde.

He shall kepe the from the perlous tonge so that when trouble commeth, thou shalt not nede to feare. "In destruccion and derth thou shalt be mery, and shalt not be afraide for the beastes of the earth: But the castels in the londe shal be confederate with the, ȝ the beastes of the felde shall geue the peace:

Yee thou shalt se, that thy dwellynge place shalbe in rest: thou shalt beholde thy substaunce, and be nomore punyshed for synne. Thou shalt se also, that thy sede shall encrease, and that thy posterite shalbe as the grasse vpon the earth. Thou shalt come to thy graue in a fayre age, like as ȝ corne sheeues are brought in to the barne in due season. Lo, this is the matter, as we oure selues haue proued by experience. Therfore now that thou hearest it, take better hede to thyself.

The vi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O that my misery A weere weyed, and my punyshment layed in the balaunces: for then shulde it be heuier, then the sonde of the see. This is the cause, that my wordes are so sorowfull.

For the allmighty hath shott at me with his arowes, whose indignacion hath droncke vp my sprete, and ȝ terrible feares of God fight agaynst me. Doth the wilde asse roare when he hath grasse? "Or crieth the ox, whē he hath fodder ynough? Maye a thyng be eaten vnseasoned, or without salt? What taist hath ȝ whyte within the yoke an egg? The thinges that some tyme I might not awaye withall, are now my meate for very sorow. O that I might haue my desyre: O ȝ God wolde graunte me the thyng, that I longe for: That he wolde begynne and smyte me: that he wolde let his honde go, ȝ hew me downe. Thē shulde I haue some cōforte: yee I wolde desyre him in my payne, that he shulde not spare, for I will not be agaynst ȝ wordes of the holy one.

What power haue I to endure? Or what B is myne ende, that my soule might be paciēt? Is my strength the strength of stones? Or, is my flesh made of brasse? Am I able to helpe my self? Is not my strength gone fro me, like as yf one withdrew a good dede from his frende, and forsoke the feare of God? Myne owne brethren passe ouer by me as the water-broke, that hastily runneth thorow ȝ valleys. "But they that feare the hore frost, the snowe shal fall vpon them.

When their tyme cōmeth, they shalbe destroyed and perishe: and when they be set on fyre, they shalbe remoued out of their place, for the pathes y^e they go in, are croked: they haist after vayne thinges, and shal perish. Consider the pathes off Theman, & the wayes off Saba, wherin they haue put their trust. Confounded are they, that put eny cōfidence in them: For whē they came to opteyne the thynges that they loked for, they were brought to confucion.

C Eue so are ye also come vnto me: but now that ye se my misery, ye are afayed. Dyd I desyre you, to come hyther? Or, to geue me eny off youre substaunce? To deluyer me from the enemies honde, or to saue me from the power off the mightie? Teach me and I will holde my tonge: and yf I do erre, shewe me wherin.

Wherefore blame ye then the wordes, that are well and truly spoken? which of you can reprove them? Sauynge only that ye are soflyl to check mens sayenges, and can speake many wordes in the wynde. Ye fall vpon the fatherlesse, & ad go aboute to ouerthrowe youre owne frende. Wherefore loke not only vpon me, but vpon youre selues: whether I lye, or no. Turne in to youre owne selues (I praye you) be indifferent iudges, and conside myne vngyltinesse: whether there be eny vnrightuousnesse in my tonge, or vayne wordes in my mouth.

The viij. Chapter.

A IS not the life off mā vpon earth a very batayll? Are not his dayes, like the dayes of an hyred seruaunte? For like as a bonde seruaunt desyreth the shadowe, and as an hyrelinge wolde fayne haue an ende of his worke: Euen so haue I laboured whole monethes longe (but in vayne) and many a carefull night haue I tolde. When I layed me downe to slepe, I sayde: "O when shal I ryse? Agayne, I longed sore for the night. Thus am I full off sorowe, till it be darcke. My flesh is clothed with wormes, fylthinesse and dust: my skynne is wythered, and cromptled together: my dayes passe ouer more spedely, thē a weeuier can weeuie out his webbe, and are gone, or I am awarre. O remembre, that my life is but a wynde, & that myne eye shal nomore se the pleasures therof, yee and that none other mans eye shall se me eny more. For yf thou fasten thine eyes vpon me, I come to naught. like as a cloude is cōsumed and vanyshed awaye, euen so he that goeth downe to hell, commeth nomore vp, ner turneth agayne in to his house, nether shall his place knowe him eny more.

Therefore I will not spare my mouth, but will speake in the trouble of my sprete, in y^e bytternesse of my mynde will I talke. Am I a see or a whalfysh, that thou kepest me so in preson? When I thynke: my bedd shall comforte me, I shall haue some refresshing by talkynge with myself vpon my couche: Thē troublest thou me with dreames, & makest me so afayed thorow visions, that my soule wyssheth rather to be hanged, and my bones to be deed.

I can se no remedy, I shall lyue nomore: O spare me then, for my dayes are but vayne. What is man, that thou hast him in soch reputacion, and settest so moch by him? Thou takest diligent care for him, and sodely doest thou trye him.

Why goest thou not fro me, ner lettest me alone, so longe till I swallowe downe my spete? I haue offended, what shal I do vnto y^e, O thou preseruer off men? Why hast thou made me to stonde in thy waye, and am so heuy a burden vnto my self? Why doest thou not forgeue me my synne? Wherefore takest thou not awaye my wickednesse? Beholde, now must I slepe in the dust: and yff thou sekest me tomorow in the mornynge, I shalbe gone

The viij. Chapter.

THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: How longe wilt thou talke of soch thinges? how longe shal thy mouth speake so proude wordes? Doth God peruerthe the thinge that is laifull? Or, doth the Allmightie destroye the thyng that is right? Whē thy sonnes synned agaynst him, dyd not he punysh thē for their wickednesse? Yff thou woldest now resorte vnto God by tymes, and make thine humble prayer to y^e Allmightie: yf thou woldest lyue a pure and a godly life: shulde he not wake vp vnto the immediatly, & geue the the bewtie of rightuousnesse agayne? In so moch, that where i so euer thou haddest litle afore, thou shuldest now haue greate abudaunce. are but of yesterdaye, and conside not, that oure dayes vpon earth are buth a very shadow. "They shall shewe the, they shall tell the, yee they will gladly confesse the same.

B Maye a resshe be grene without moystnesse? maye the grasse growe without water? No: but (or euer it be shot forth, and or euer it be gathered) it wythereth, before any other herbe. Euen so goeth it with all them, that forget God: and euen thus also shal the ypocrytes hope come to naught. His confidence shalbe destroyed, for he trusteth in a spyders webbe.

He leeneth him vpō his house, but he shal not stonde: he holdeth him fast by it, yet shal he not endure. Oft tymes a thinge doth florish, and men thynke that it maye abyde the Sonneshyne: it shuteth forth the braunches in his garden, it taketh many rotes, in so moch that it is like an house off stones. But yf it be taken out off his place, euery man denyeth it, sayenge: I knowe the not. Lo, thus is it with him, that reioyseth in his owne doinges: and as for other, they growe out of the earth.

Beholde, God will not cast awaye a vertuous man, nether will he helpe the vngodly. Thy mouth shall he fyll with laughynge, and thy lippes with gladnesse. They that hate the, shalbe confounded, and they dwellinges of the vngodly shal come to naught.

The ix. Chapter.

A IOB answered, and sayde: "As for I knowe it is so of a treuth, I a man compared vnto God, can not be iustified. Yf he wil argue with him, he shall not be able to answer him vnto one amonge a thousande. He is wyse of hert, and mightie in strength. Who euer prospered, that toke parte agaynst him? He translateth the mountaynes, or euer they be awarre, and ouerthroweth them in his wrath. He remoueth the earth out of hir place, that hir pilers shake withall. He commaundeth the Sōne, and it ryseth not: he closeth vp the starres, as it were vnder a signet. He himself alone spredeth out the heauens, and goeth vpon the waves of the see. He maketh the waynes of heauen, the Orions, the viij. starres and the secrete places of the south. He doth greate thinges, such as are vnsearchable, yee and wonders without nombre.

B Yf he came by me, I might not loke vpō him: yf he wente his waye, I shulde not perceaue it. Yf he be haisty to take eny thinge awaye, who wil make him restore it agayne? Who wil saye vnto him: what doest thou? "He is God, whose wrath no man maye withstōde: but the proudest of all must stoupe vnder him. How shulde I then answer him? or, what wordes shulde I fynde out agaynst him? Yee though I be rightuous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but mekely submytte my self to my iudge. All be it that I call vpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not sure, I he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me so with the tempest, and woundeth me out of measure without a cause. He will not let my sprete be in rest, but fylleth me with bytternesse.

C Yf men will speake of strength, he is the strōgest of all: yf men will speake of rightousnes, who darre be my recorde? yf I will iustifie my self, myne owne mouth shall cōdemne me: yf I will put forth my self for a perfecte man, he shal proue me a wicked doer: For that I shulde be an innocent, my cōscience knoweth it not, yee I my self am weery off my life.

This one thiage wil I saye: "He destroyeth both the rightuous and vngodly. And though he slaye sodenly with the scourge, yet laugheth he at the punyshment of the innocent. As for the worlde, he geueth it ouer in to the power of the wicked, such as the rulers be, wherof all londes are full. Is it not so? where is there eny, but he is soch one?

D My dayes haue bene more swifte, then a runner: they are gone sodenly, and haue sene no good thinge. They are passed awaye, as the shippes that be good vnder sale, and as the Aegle that haisteth to the pray. When I am purposed to forget my complayninges to chaunge my countenance, and to cōforte my self: then am I afraied of all my workes, for I knowe, thou fauourest not an euell doer. Yf I be then a wicked one, why haue I laboured in vayne? Though I washed my self with snowe water, and made myne hondes neuer so clene, yet shuldest thou dyppe me in myre, and myne owne clothes shulde defyle me. For he I must geue answer vnto, and with whom I go to lawe, is not a man as I am. Nether is there eny dayes man to reprove both the partes, or to laye his hōde betwixte vs. Let him take his rod awaye fro me, yee let him make me nomore afraied of him, and then shal I answere him without eny feare. For as longe as I am in soch fearfulnessse, I can make no answere: And why? it greueth my soule to lyue.

The i. Chapter.

A NEUERTHELESSE, now will I put forth my wordes: I wil speake out of the very heuynesse off my soule, and will saye vnto God: O do not condemne me, but shewe me the cause, wherefore thou iudget me on this maner. Thinkest thou it well done, to oppresse me, to cast me of (beinge a worke of thy hondes) and to manteyne the counsell of the vngdoly? Hast thou fleszshy eyes then, or doest thou loke as man loketh? Are thy dayes as the dayes of man, and thy yeares as mans yeares? that thou makest soch inquisition for my wickednesse, and searchest out my synne? where as (notwithstandinge) thou knowest that I am no wicked person, & that there is no man able to deliyuer me out of thine honde. "Thy hondes haue made me, & fashioned me altogether rounde aboute, wilt thou then destroye me sodely? O remembre (I beseke the) how that thou madest me of the moule of the earth, and shalt brynge me to earth agayne.

B Hast thou not milked me, as it were mylck: and turned me to cruddes like chese? Thou hast couered me with skynne and flesh, and ioyned me together with bones & synowes. Thou hast graunted me life, and done me good: and the diligent hede that thou tokest vpon me, hath preserued my sprete.

Though thou hydest these thinges in thine hert, yet am I sure, that thou remembrest the all. Wherefore didest thou kepe me, when I synned, and hast not clensed me fro myne offence? Yf I do wickedly, wo is me therefore: Yf I be righteous, yet darre I not lift vp my heade: so full am I of confucion, and se myne owne misery.

C Thou huntst me out (beynge in heuynesse) as it were a Lyon, and troublest me out of measure. Thou bringest fresh witnessess agaynst me, thy wrath increaseth thou vpon me, very many are the plages that I am in. Wherefore hast thou brought me^a out of my mothers wombe? O that I had perished, & that no eye had sene me. Yf they had caried me to my graue, as soone as I was borne, then shulde I be now, as though I had neuer bene.

Shall not my short life come soone to an ende? O holde the fro me, let me alone, that I maye ease myself a litle: afore I go thither, from whence I shal not turne agayne: Namely, to that londe of darcknesse & shadowe of death: yee in to that darck cloudy londe & deadly shadowe, where as is no ordre, but terrible feare as in the darcknesse.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, B and sayde: Shulde not he that maketh many wordes, be answered? Shulde he that bableth moch, be commended therein? Shulde men geue eare vnto the only? Thou wilt laugh other men to scorne, & shal no body mocke the agayne? Wilt thou saye vnto God: The thinge that I take in honde, is perfecte, & I am clene in thy sight? O that God wolde speake, and open his lippes agaynst the, that he might shewe the (out of his secrete wysdome) how manyfolde his lawe is: then shuldest thou knowe, that God had forgotten the, because of thy synnes.

Wilt thou fynde out God with thy sekyng? wilt thou attayne to the perfectnesse of the Allmightie? He is hyer the heauē, what wilt thou do? Deper the hell, how wilt thou then knowe him? His length exceedeth the length of the earth, and his bredth & bredth of the see. Though he turne all thinges vp syde downe, close them in, or thrust the together, who darre check him therefore?

For it is he, that knoweth the vanite of men: he seyth their wickednesse also, shulde he not then conside it? A vayne body exalteth him self, and the sonne of man is like a wyld asses foale. Yf thou haddest now a right herte, & liftest vp thine hondes towarde him: yf thou woldest put awaye the wickednesse, which thou hast in honde, so that no vngodlynnesse dwelt in thy house: Then mightest thou lift vp thy face without shame, the shuldest thou be sure, and haue no nede to feare.

Then shuldest thou forget thy misery, and thynke nomore vpon it, then vpon the waters that runne by. Then shulde thy life be as cleare as the noone daye, and sprynge forth as the mornynge. Then mightest thou haue comforth, in the hope that thou hast: & slepe quietly, when thou art buried. Then shuldest thou take thy rest, and no mā to make the afraied, yee many one shulde set moch by the. As for the eyes of the yngodly, they shal be consumed, and not escape: their hope shalbe misery and sorow of mynde.

The xij. Chapter.

A SO Iob answered, and sayde: Then (no doute) ye are the men alone, and wysdome shal perish with you. But I haue vnderstōdinge as well as ye, and am no lesse then ye. Yee who knoweth not these thinges? Thus he that calleth vpō God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neghbour: the godly & innocent man is laughed to scorne. Godlynesse is a light despyed in ⁊ hertes of the rich, & is set for them to stōmble vpon.

The houses of robbers are in wealth and prosperite, & they that maliciously medle agaynst God, dwel without care: yee God geueth all thinges richely with his honde.

B Axe the catell, & they shal enfourme the: the foules of the ayre, and they shall tell ⁊: Speake to the earth, and it shall shewe the: Or to the fyshes of the see, and they shal certifie the. What is he, but he knoweth, that ⁊ hōde of the LORDE made all these? ^aIn whose honde is the soule of euery lyuynge thinge, and the breth of all men. Haue not the eares pleasure in hearinge, ^band the mouth in tastynge the thinge that it eateth? Amonge olde personnes there is wysdome, and amonge the aged is vnderstōdinge. Yee with God is wysdome and strength, it is he that hath counsell & foreknowledge. Yf he breake downe a thinge, who can set it vp agayne? ^cYf he shutt a thinge, who wil open it? Beholde, yf he witholde the waters, they drye vp: Yf he let thē go, they destroye the earth. With him is strength and wysdome: he knoweth both the disceauer, and him that is disceaued.

C He carieth awaye the wyse men, as it were a spoyle, and bryngeth the iudges out of their wyttes. He lowseth the gyrdle of kynges, and gyrdeeth their loynes with a bonde, he ledeth awaye the prestes in to captiuyte, and turneth the mightie vp syde downe. ^dHe taketh the verite from out of the mouth, & disapoynteth ⁊ aged of their wysdome. He poureth out confucion vpon prynces, and cōforteth them that haue bene oppressed. Loke ^ewhat lyeth hyd in darknesse, he declareth it opely: and the very shadowe of death bringeth he to light. He both increaseth the people, and destroyeth them: He maketh them to multiplie, and dryueth them awaye. He chaungeth the herte of the prynces and kynges of the earth, and disapoynteth them: so that they go wādringe out of the waye, and grope in the darcke without light, stackeringe to and fro like droncken men.

The xij. Chapter.

LO, all this haue I sene with myne eye, ^fI herde with myne eare, & vnderstonde it. Loke what ye knowe, that same do I knowe also, nether am I inferior vnto you. Neuerthelesse I am purposed to talke with the All-mightie, and my desyre is to comon with God. As for you, ye are workmasters of lyes: and vnprofitable Physicians alltogether. Wolde God ye kepte youre tonge, that ye might be taken for wyse men. Therefore heare my wordes, and pondre the sentence of my lippes. Will ye make answer for God with lyes, and māteyne him with disceate? Wil ye accepte ⁊ personne of God, and intreate for him? Shal that helpe you, when he calleth you to rekenynge? Thinke ye to begyle him, as a man is begyled? Punysh you shall he and reprove you, yf ye do secretly accepte eny personne. Shall he not make you afraied, when he sheweth himself? Shal not his terrible feare fall vpō you? youre remembraunce shalbe like the dust, & youre pryde shalbe turned to claye.

B Holde youre tonges now, and let me speake, for there is some thinge come in to my mynde. Wherefore do I beare my flesh in my teth, and my soule in myne hondes? Lo, there is nether cōforte ner hope for me, yf he wil slaye me. ^gBut yf I shewe and reprove myne owne wayes in his sight, he is euen the same, that maketh me whole: and why? there maye no Ypocrite come before him, Heare my wordes, and pondre my sayenges with youre eares. How greate are my myszdedes & synnes? Let me knowe my trās-gressions & offences. Wherefore hydest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemye? Wilt thou be so cruell & extreme vnto a flyenge leaf, and folowe vpon drye stubble? that thou layest so sharply to my charge, and wilt vtterly vndoo me, for y synnes of my yough? The xiiij. Chapter.

A MAN that is borne of a woman, hath but a shorte tyme to lyue, and is full of dyuerse miseries. He cometh vp, and falleth awaye like a floure. He flyeth as it were a shadowe, and neuer continueth in one state. Thinkest thou it now well done, to open thine eyes vpon soch one, and to brynge me before the iudgment? Who can make it cleane, that commeth of an vncleane thinge? No body. The dayes of man are shorte, y nombre of his monethes are knowne only vnto the. Thou hast apoynted him his boundes, he can not go beyonde them. Go from him, that he maye rest a litle: vntill his daye come, which he loketh for, like as an hyrelinge doth.

B Yf a tre be cutt downe, there is some hope yet, that it will sproute and shute forth the braunches againe: For though a rote be waxen olde and deed in the ground, yet whē the stocke getteth the sent of water, it will budde, and brynge forth bowes, like as when it was first planted. But as for man, when he is deed, perished and consumed awaye, what becommeth of him? The floudes when they be dryed vp, & the ryuers when they be emptie, are fylled agayne thorow the flowing waters of the see: but when man slepeth, he ryseth not agayne, vntill the heauen perish: he shal not wake vp ner ryse out of his slepe. O that thou woldest kepe me, and hyde me in the hell, vntill thy wrath were stilled: & to apoynte me a tyme, wherein thou mightest remembre me. Maye a deed man lyue agayne? All the dayes of this my pilgreme-ge am I lokinge, when my chaunginge shal come. Yf thou woldest but call me, I shulde obeie the: only despyse not the worke of thine owne hondes.

For thou hast nombred all my goynges, yet be not thou to extreme vpon my synnes. Thou hast sealed vp myne offences, as it were in a bagg: but be mercifull vnto my wickednesse. The mountaynes fall awaye at the last, the rockes are remoued out of their place, the waters pearse thorow the very stones by litle and litle, the floudes waszshe awaye the grauell & earth: Euen so destroyest thou the hope of man in like maner. Thou preuaylest agaynst him, so that he passeth awaye: thou chaungest his estate, and putttest him from the. Whether his children come to worshipe or no, he can not tell: And yf they be men of lowe degre, he knoweth not. Whye he lyueth, his flesh must haue trauayle: and whye the soule is in him, he must be in sorowe.

The xv. Chapter.

A THEN answered Eliphas the Themanite, and sayde: Shulde a wyse man geue soch an answer (as it were one that spake in the wynde) and fyll his stomacke with anger? Thou reprocuest with wordes, that are nothinge wroth: and speakest the thinges, which can do no good. As for shame, thou hast set it asyde, els woldest thou not make so many wordes before God: but thy wickednesse teacheth thy mouth, and so thou hast chosen the a craftie tonge. Thine owne mouth condemneth the, and not I: yee thine owne lippes shappe the an answer. Art thou the first man, that euer was borne? Or, wast thou made before the hylles? hast thou herde the secrete counsell of God, that all wysdome is to litle for y? What knowest thou, y we knowe not? What vnderstondest thou, but we can the same? thine owne conceate? Where vnto loke thine eyes, ⁊ thy mynde is so puft vp agaynst God ⁊ lettest soch wordes go out of thy mouth? What is man, that he shulde be vnclene? what hath he (which is borne of a woman) wherby he might be knowne to be righteous? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amōge his owne sanctes: ⁊ yee the very heauens are vnclene in his sight. How moch more then an abhominable and vyle mā, which dryncketh wickednesse like water? I will tell the, heare me: I wil shewe the a thinge, that I knowe: which wyse men haue tolde, ⁊ hath not bene hyd from their fathers: vnto whom only the londe was geuen, that no straunger shulde come amonge them.

C The vngodly despayreth all the dayes of his life, ⁊ the nombre of a tyrauntes yeares is vnkowne. A fearful sounde is euer in his eares, ⁊ when it is peace, yet feareth he destruction: He beleueth neuer to be deluyered out of darknesse, the swearde is allwaye before his eyes. When he goeth forth to get his lyuinge, he thinketh planely, that the daye of darknesse is at honde. Sorow and carefulnesse make him afrayed, ⁊ cōpasse him rounde aboute, like as it were a kinge with his hoost redy to the battayll. For he hath stretched out his honde agaynst God, ⁊ armed himself agaynst ⁊ Allmightie. He runneth proudly vpon him, ⁊ with a stiff necke fighteth he agaynst him: where as he couereth his face with fatnesse, and maketh his body well lykyng. Therefore shall his dwellyng be in desolate cities, ⁊ in houses which no mā inhabiteth, but are become heapes of stones.

D He shall not be rich, nether shall his substaunce continue, ner encrease vpon earth. He shal neuer come out of darknesse, the flame shal drye vp his braunches, with ⁊ blast of the mouth of God shal he be takē awaie. He wil nether applye himself to faithfulness ner treuth, so sore is he disceaue with vanite.

He shall perish, afore his tyme be worne out, and his honde shal not be grene. He shal be pluckte of as an vntymely grape from ⁊ vyne, and shal let his floure fall, as the olyue doth. For the congregacion of Ypocrites is vnfrutefull, ⁊ the fyre shal consume the houses of such, as are greedy to receaue giftes. He conceaueth trauayle, he beareth myschefe, ⁊ his body bryngeth forth disceate.

The xvi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: I haue oft tymes A herde soch thinges. Miserable geuers of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy vayne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet eny more to saye? I coude speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with ⁊ talkinge of my lypes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tōge, yet wil it not departe fro me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroyed (wherof my wryncles beare wytnesse) there stōdeth vp a dyssembler to make me answere with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnasseth vpon me with his teth. Myne enemy skoueth vpon me with his eyes.

They haue opened their mouthes wyde vpon me, ⁊ smytten me vpon the cheke despitefully, they haue eased the selues thorow myne aduersite. God hath geuen me ouer to the vngodly, and deluyered me in to the hondes of ⁊ wicked. I was somtyme in wealth, but sodenly hath he brought me to naught. He hath taken me by the necke, he hath rente me, and set me, as it were a marck for him to shute at. He hath compassed me rounde aboute with his dartes, he hath wounded my loynes, ⁊ not spared. My bowels hath he poured vpon the grounde. He hath geuē me one wounde vpon another, and is fallē vpon me like a giaunte. I haue sowed a sack cloth vpon my skynne, and lye with my strength in the dust.

E My face is swollē with wepinge, ⁊ myne eyes are waxen dymme. Howbeit there is no wickednesse in my hondes, and my prayer is cleue. O earth, couer not my bloude, and let my crienge fynde no rowme. For lo, my witness is in heauen, and he that knoweth me, is aboue in the heyth. My frendes laugh me to scorne, but myne eye poureth out teares vnto God. Though a body might pleate with God, as one man doth with another, yet the nombre of my yeares are come, ⁊ I must go the waye, from whence I shal not turne agayne.

The xviij. Chapter.

A MY breth fayleth, my dayes are shortened, I am harde at deathes dore. I haue diseaued no man, yet must myne eye cōtinue in heuynesse. O delyuer me, and set me by the, who shall then be able to thrust my hondes together? Thou hast with holdē their hertes from vnderstōdinge, therfore shall they not be set vp an hye. He promiseth his frēdes parte of his good, but his owne childrē spende it. He hath made me as it were a byworde of the comon people, I am his gestinge stocke amōge thē. My countenance is heuy for very anger, & the membres of my body are become like a shadowe. Vertuous mē therfore shall wel cōsidre this, and the innocent shal take parte agaynst the Ypocrite.

B The righteous wil kepe his waye, and he ſ̄ hath cleane handes, wil euer be stronger & stronger. As for you, turne you, & get you hence, for I can not se one wyse mā amonge you. My dayes are past, my thoughtes are vanished awaye, which haue vexed myne herte, chaunginge the night in to daye, & ſ̄ light in to darcknes. Though I tary neuer so moch, yet the graue is my house, and I must make my bed in the darcke. I call corrupcion my father, and the wormes call I my mother and my sister. What helpeth then my longe tarienge? Or, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for? All that I haue, shall go downe in to the pytt, & lye with me in the dust.

The xviij. Chapter.

A THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of youre wordes? Marke well, and conside, we wil speake also. Wherefore are we counted as beestes, & reputed so vyle in youre sight? Why destroyest thou thy self with anger? Shal ſ̄ earth be forsaken, or the stones remoued out of their place because of ſ̄? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out? yee the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shalbe darcke in his dwellinge, & his candle shalbe put out with him. His presumptuous goinges shal be kepte in, and his owne counsell shal cast him downe. For his fete shalbe taken in the nett, and he shal walke in the snare. His fote shalbe holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and a pytfall in the waye.

B Fearfulnesse shal make him afrayed on euery syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Hunger shalbe his substaunce, and mysfortune shall hange vpon him. He shall eate his owne skynne, yee his owne armes shall he deuoure, beyng a firstborne of death. All his comforte and hope shal be roted out of his dwellynge, very fearfulnesse shall brynge him to the kynge. Other men shall dwel in his house (which now is none of his) and brymstone shalbe scattered vpon his habitacion. His rotes shalbe dryed vp beneth, & aboue shall his haruest be cut downe. His remembrance shal perish from the earth, & his name shall not be praysed in the stretes: he shalbe dryen from the light in to darcknesse, and be cast cleue out of the worlde. He shall nether haue children ner kynszfolkes amonge his people, no ner eny posterite in his cōtre: yonge & olde shalbe astonysed at his death. Soch are now the dwellynges of the wicked, and this is ſ̄ place of him that knoweth not God.

The xix. Chapter.

IOB answered, & sayde: How lōge wil ye vex me mynde, & trouble me with wordes? Lo, ten tymes haue ye reproofed me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me so to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhaunce youre selues agaynst me, & accuse me to be a wicked personne because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowe this then, ſ̄ it is God, which hath handled me so violently, & hath compased me aboute with his scourges. Beholde, though I crie, yet violēce is done vnto me,^a I can not be herde: Though I complaine, there is none to geue sentēce with me. He hath hedged vp my path, I cā not get awaye, he hath set darcknesse in my gate.

B He hath spoyled me of myne honoure, & taken the crowne awaye fro my heade. ^b He hath destroyed me on euery syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye fro me, as it were a tre plucte vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His men of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and beseged my dwellinge rounde aboute. "He hath put my brethren farre away fro me, and soch as were of myne acquaintaunce, are become straügers vnto me. Myne owne kynsz folkes haue forsaken me, and my frendes haue put me out of remembraunce. The seruauentes and maydens of myne owne house take me for a straüger, and I am become as an aleuant in their sight.

¶ When I call vpon my seruauit, he geueth me no answer: no though I praeie him with my mouth. Myne owne wyfe maye not abyde my breth, I am fayne to speake fayre vnto the children of myne owne body. Yee the very deserte fooles despise me, and when I am gone from them, they speake euell vpon me. All soch as were my most familiars, abhorre me: and they whom I loued best, are turned agaynst me. My bone hangeth to my skynne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the skynne aboute my teth. Haue pite vpon me, haue pite vpon me (o ye my frendes) for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vexe me also? Haue ye not yet ynough of the trouble of my flesh?

¶ O that my wordes were written, O that they were put in a boke: wolde God they were graue with an yron pene in leade or in stone. For I am sure, that my redemer lyueth, and that I shall ryse out of the earth in the latter daye: that I shal be clothed againe with this skynne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shal beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are consumed within me, when yee saye: Why do not we persecute him? we haue founde an occasion agaynst him. But bewarre of the swerde, for the swerde wylbe avenged of wickednesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The xx. Chapter.

¶ THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to answer. And why? my mynde is tossed here and there. I haue sufficiently herde the checkyng & reprove, therefore am I purposed to make answer after my vnderstodinge. Knowest thou not this, namely: that from the begynninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Ypocrytes continued but & twinkle of an eye? Though he be magnified vp to the heauē, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he perisheth at the last like donge: In so moch & they which haue sene him, saye: Where is he? He vanysheth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, & passeth awaye as a vision in & night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth now no sight of him, & his place knoweth him nomore. His childre go a begginge, their handes bringe the to sorow and heuynesse.

From his youth his bones are ful of vyce, which shal lie downe with him in & earth. Whē wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyl he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poysen of serpētes within his body. The riches & he deuoureth, shall he perbreake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shall sucke him, and the adders tonge shall slaye him: so that he shal nomore se the ryuers and brokes of hony and butter: But labourer shal he, & yet haue nothinge to eate. Greate traualle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them: houses hath he spoyled, and not buylded them. His bely coude neuer be fylled, therfore shall he perish in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so greedely, & he left nothinge behynde, therfore his goodes shal not prospere. "Though he had plenteousnesse of euery thinge, yet was he poore, & therfore he is but a wretch on euery syde.

For though & wicked haue neuer so moch to fyll his bely, yet God shal sende his wrath vpon him, and cause his battayll to rayne ouer him: so that yf he fle the yron weapons, he shall be shott with the stele bowe. The arrowe shal be taken forth, & go out at his backe, and a glisteringe swerde thorow & gall of him, feare shal come vpo him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnkyndled fyre shal consume him, and loke what remayneth in his house, it shal be destroyed. The heauen shall declare his wickednesse, & the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The xxi. Chapter.

A IOB answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende youre selues. Suffre me a litle, that I maye speake also, and the laugh my wordes to scorne, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputaciō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my sprete be the in sore trouble? Marck me well, be abaszshed, and laye youre hāde vpon youre mouth. For whē I pondre & considre this, I am afayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. "Wherefore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperite, come to their olde age, & increase in riches? Their childers children lyue in their sight, & their generacion before their eyes.^b Their houses are safe from all feare, for the rodd of God doth not smyte the. Their bullocke gendreth, and that not out of tyme: their cow calueth, and is not vnfrutefull.

B They sende forth their children by flockes, and their sonnes lede the daunce. "They beare with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in wellthynesse: but sodenly they go downe to hell. They say vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. "What maner of felowe is the Allmightie, that we shulde serue him? What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is vtterly no goodnesse in them, therefore will not I haue to do with the counsell of the vngodly. "How oft shal the candle of y^e wicked be put out? how oft commeth their destruction vpon them? O what sorowe shall God geue them for their parte in his wrath? "Yee they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as dust that the storme carieth awaye.

C And though God saue their childrē from soch sorowe, yet wil he so rewarde the selues, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruction and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynke of the fearfull wrath of the Allmighty. For whath careth he, what become of his housholde after his death? whose monethes passe awaye swifter then an arowe.

In as moch the as God hath y^e hiest power of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? One dyeth now when he is mightie & at his best, rich and in prosperite: euen when his bowels are at the fattest, and his bones full of mary. Another dyeth in sorowe and heuynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, & the wormes couer them. But I knowe what ye thinke, yee and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrightuously. "For ye saye: where is the prynces palace? where is the dwellyng in the vngodly: Axe eny man that goeth by the waye, and (yf ye will not regarde their tokens & dedes) he shal tell you, "that the wicked is kepte vnto the daye of destruction, and that the vngodly shalbe brought forth in the daye of wrath. Who darre reprove him for his wayes to his face? who rewardeth him for the vngraciousnesse that he doth? Yet shal he be brought to his graue, and watch amonge the heape of the deed. The shal he be fayne to be buried amōge the stones by the broke syde. All men must folowe him, & there are innumerable gone before him. O how vayne is the comforte y^e ye geue me? Now because ŷ God is hyer thē the heauens, ⁊ because thou seist ŷ the starres are so hye, wilt thou therefore saye: "Tush, how shulde God knowe? Doth his dominion reach beyonde the cloudes? The xiiij. Chapter.

A IOB answered, and sayd: My sayenge is yet this daye in bytternes, and my hande heuy amonge my groninges. O that I might se him ⁊ fynde him: O that I might come before his seate, to pleate my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes:

That I might knowe, what answeere he wolde geue me: ⁊ that I might vnderstonde, what he wolde saye vnto me. Wil he pleate agaynst me with his greate power ⁊ strength, or wyll he leane him self vtterly vpon me? Oh no, let him not do so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to lawe, then am I sure to wyne my matter. For though I go before, I fynde him not: yf I come behynde, I cā get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to pondre his workes, I can not atteyne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hydeth himself, ŷ I can not se him. But as for my waye, he knoweth it: ⁊ trieth me as ŷ golde in ŷ fyre.

Neuertheles my fete kepe his path, his hye strete haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the cōmaundemēt of his lippes, but loke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shutt vp in my herte. It is he himself alone, who will turne him back? He doth as him listeth, and bryngeth to passe what he wil. He rewardeth me in to my bosome, ⁊ many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is ŷ cause, that I shrenke at his presence, so that when I considre him, I am afraied of him. For in so moch as he is God, he maketh my herte soft: and seynge that he is Allmightie, he putteth me in feare. Thus can not I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

The xiiij. Chapter.

CONSIDERINGE then that there is no tyme hyd from the Allmightie, how happeneth it, that they which knowe him, wil not regarde his dayes? For some mē there be, "that remoue other mēs londe markes: that robbe them of their catell, and kepe the same for their owne: that dryue awaye the asse of the fatherlesse: that take ŷ wyddowes oxen for a pledge: that thrust the poore out of the waye, ⁊ oppresse the symple of the worlde together. Beholde, the wilde asses in ŷ deserte go by tymes (as their maner is) to spoyle: Yee the very wildernesse ministrereth foode for their children. They spoyle the suckinge fatherlesse children, and put the poore in prison : In so much that they let them go naked without clothinge, and yet the hungrie beare the sheeues. The poore are fayne to labour in their oyle mylles, yee and to treade in their wyne presses, and yet to suffre thyrst. "The whole cite crieth vnto the LORDE with sighinge, the soules of the slayne make their complaynte : But God destroyeth them not for all this, where as they (not with stödinge) are rebellious and disobedient enemies : which seke not his light and waye, ner turne agayne in to his path. "Tymely in the mornynge do they aryse, to murthure the symple and poore, & in the night they go a stealinge.

C The eye of the vngodly is like the aduouterer, that wayteth for the darknesse, and sayeth thus in him self : Tush, there shal no mā se me, & so he disgyseth his face. In the night season they search the houses, and hyde them selues in the daye tyme, but wil not knowe & light. For as soone as the daye breaketh, the shadowe of death commeth vpō them, and they go in horrible darknesse. The vngodly is very swyft : O & his porciō also vpō earth were swyfter then & runnyng water, which suffreth not & shipmā to beholde the fayre & pleasaūt vyniarden. O & they (for the wickednesse which they haue done) were drawn to the hell, sooner thē snowe melteth at the heate. O & all cōpassion vpon thē were forgottē : & their daynties were wormes : that they were clene put out of remembraunce, & vtterly hewē downe like an vnfrutefull tre. For they mainteyne the baren, & make them & they can not beare, & vnto wyddowes they do no good. They plucke downe the mightie with their power, & when they them selues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be safe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but shortly are they gone, brought to extreme pouerte, & takē out of the waye : yee & vtterly plucte of as the eares of

The xxi. Chapter.

THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, & A sayde : Power & feare is with him aboue, that maketh peace (sittinge) in his hynesse, whose men of warre are innumerable, and whose light aryseth ouer all. "But how maye a man cōpared vnto God, be iustified ? Or, how can he be clene, that is borne of a woman ? Beholde, the Moone shyneth no thinge in comparision to him, & the starres are vnclene in his sight. How moch more thē, mā, that is but corrupcion : and the sonne of man, which is but a worme ?

The xxi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde : O how helpeth A thou the weake ? what comforte geuest thou vnto him that hath no strēth ? Where is & cōcell & thou shuldest geue him, which hath no wysdome ? Wilt thou so shewe thine excellent rightuousnes ? Before whom hast thou spoken those wordes ? Who made the breth to come out of thy mouth ? The giauntes & worthies & are slayne, & lye vnder & worlde with their cōpanions : yee & all they which dwell beneth in the hell are not hyd frō him, & the very destruccion it self cā not be kepte out of his sight. He stretcheth out & north ouer the emptie, & hāgeth & earth vpō nothinge. He byndeth & water in his cloudes, that they fall not downe together. He holdeth back his stole, that it cā not be sene, and spredeth his cloudes before it.

B "He hath cōposed the waters with certayne boundes, vntill the daye & night come to an ende. The very pilers of heauē trēble & quake at his reprove. "He stilleth the see with his power, & thorow his wysdome hath he set forth & worlde. With his sprete hath he garnished the heauē, & with his hande hath he wounded the rebellious serpēt. This is now a shorte summe of his doynge. But who is able sufficiently to rehearse his workes ? Who can perceaue and vnderstonde & thondre of his power ?

God forbydde, that I shulde graunte youre cause to be right. As for me, vntill myne ende come wil I neuer go fro myne innocency. My rightuous dealyng wil I kepe fast, & not forsake it: For my conscience reproueth me not in all my conuersacion. The xxiiij. Chapter.

THERE are places where syluer is moltē, & where golde is tryed: where yron is dygged out of the grounde, & stones resoluēd to metall. The darcknes shal once come to an ende, he can seke out the grounde of all thinges: the stones, the darcke, & the horrible shadowe, with the ryuer of water parteth he a sunder the straunge people, y^e knoweth no good neighbourheade: soch as are rude, vmanerly & boysteous. He bryngeth foode out of the earth, & y^e which is vnder, consumeth he with fyre. There is founde a place, whose stones are cleue Saphirs, and where y^e clottes of the earth are golde. There is a waye also that the byrdes knowe not, that no vulturs eye hath sene: wherin y^e proude & hye mynded walke not, & where no lyon commeth. There putteth he his honde vpon the stony rockes, & ouerthroweth the mountaynes. Ryuers flowe out of the rockes, & loke what is pleasaunt, his eye seyth it. Out of droppes bryngeth he greate floudes together, & the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to light. How commeth a man then by wysdome? Where is the place that men fynde vnderstandinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, nether is she foude in the lōde of the lyuynge. The depe sayeth: she is not in me. The see sayeth: she is not with me. She can not be gotten for the most fyne golde, nether maye the pryce of her be bought with eny moneye. No wedges of golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphirs maye be compared vnto her. No, nether golde ner Christall, nether swete odours ner golden plate. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellēt, as once to be named vnto her: for perfecte wysdome goeth farre beyonde thē all. The Topas that cōmeth out of Inde, maye in no wyse be lickened vnto her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasaunt and fayre so euer it be.

From whēce then commeth wysdome? & where is the place of vnderstandinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee & frō the foules of the ayre. Destruction & death saie: we haue herde tell of her with oure eares. But God seyth hir waie, & knoweth hir place. For he beholdeth the endes of the worlde, and loketh vpon all that is vnder the heauē. When he weyed the wyndes, & measured y^e

The xxi. Chapter.

A SO Job proceeded and wete forth in his communicacion, sayenge: O y I were as I was in the monethes by past, g in the dayes whē God preserued me: when his light shyned vpon my heade: whē I wente after the same light g shyne euē thorow the darcknesse. As it stode with me, whē I was welthy g had ynough: whē God prospered my house: when the almighty was with me: when my householdes folkes stode aboute me: whē my wayes ranne ouer with butter, g when the stony rockes gaue me ryuers of oyle: when I wente thorow the cite vnto the gate, g whē they set me a chayre in y strete: whē the yonge mē (as soone as they sawe me) hyd thē selues, g when the aged arose, g stode vp vnto me: whē the princes left of their talkinge, g laied their hāde to their mouth: whē the mightie kepte still their voyce, and whē their tonges cleued to the rofe of their mouthes. When all they y herde me, called me happie: g when all they y sawe me, wysshed me good. For I deluyered y poore whē he cried, g the fatherlesse y wanted helpe. He y shulde haue bene lost, gaue me a good worde, g y widdowes hert praised me. And why? I put vpon me righteousnes, which couered me as a garmēt, g equite was my crowne. I was an eye vnto the blynde, g a fote to the lame. I was a father vnto the poore, g whē I knew not their cause, I sought it out diligētly. I brake the chaftes of y vnrightuous, g g plucte the spoyle out of their teth.

C Therefore, I thought verely, y I shulde haue dyed in my nest: g y my dayes shulde haue bene as many as the sondes of the see. For my rote was spred out by the waters syde, g the dew laye vpō my corne. My honoure encreased more g more, and my bowe was euer the stronger in my hande. Vnto me men gaue eare, me they regarded, g with sylence they taried for my coucell. Yf I had spoken, they wolde haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amonge thē.

They wayted for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: g gaped vpon me, as the groude doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knew well it was not earnest: g this testimony of my couētaunce pleased thē nothinge at all. When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chefe, g sat as a kynge amonge his seruantes: Or as one that comforteth such as be in heynesse.

The xxi. Chapter.

BUT now they that are my inferiours g A yonger then I, haue me in derision: yee euē they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought scorne to haue set with the dogges of my catell. The power g strēth of their hādes might do me no good, g as for their age, it is spēt g past awaye without eny profit. For very misery g hunger, they wente aboute in the wilderness like wretches g beggers, pluckyng vp herbes from amonge the buszshes, g the Iunipers rote was their meate. And when they were dryuen forth, men cried after them, as it had bene after a thefe. Their dwellinge was beside foule brokes, yee in the caues g dennes of the earth. Vpō the drye heeth wēte they aboute crienge, g in the brome hilles they gathered them together. They were the children of foolles g vylanes, which are deed awaye frō the worlde. Now am I their songe, g am become their iesting stocke. they abhorre me, they fle farre fro me g stayne my face with spetle. For y LORDE hath opened his quyer, he hath hytt me, g put a brydle in my mouth. Vpon my right hāde they rose together agaynst me, they haue hurte my fete, made a waye to destroye me, g my path haue they clene marred. It was so easy for them to do me harme, that they neded no man to helpe thē. They fell vpon me, as it had bene y breakyng in of waters, g came in by heapes to destroye me. Fearfulnessse is turned agaynst me. Myne honoure vanisheth awaye more swiftly then wynde, g my prosperite departeth hēce like as it were a cloude. Therefore is my mynde poured full of heynesse, g y dayes of trouble haue takē holde vpon me. My bones are pearsed thorow in y night season, g my synewes take no rest. But now I am a cōpanyon of dragons, & a felowe of Estriches. My skynne vpō me is turned to black, & my bones are brēt with heate: my harpe is turned to sorow, & my pipe to weeping.

The xxi. Chaptr.

I MADE a couenaunt with myne eyes, ſ I wolde not ^aloke vpō a dāsell. For how greate a porciō shal I haue of God frō aboue? & what enheritaunce frō ſ Almightie on hie? As for the vngodly & he ſ ioyneith himself to ſ cōpani of wicked doers shal not destruccion & misery come vpon him? ^bDoth not he se my wayes, & tell all my goings? Yf I haue cleued vnto vanite, or yf my fete haue runne to disceau: let me be weyed in an eauen balaunce, that God maye se my innocency. Yf so be that I haue withdrawn my fote out of the right waye, yf my hert hath folowed myne eye sight, yf I haue stayned or defyled my hōdes: O then is it reason that I sowe, and another eate: yee that my generacion and posterite be clene roted out. Yf my hert hath lusted after my neighbours wife, or yf I haue layed wayte at his dore: O then let my wife be another mans harlot, and let other lye with her. ^cFor ^dthis is a wickednesse and synne, that is worthy to be punyshed, yee a fyre that vtterly shulde consume, & rote out all my sub-

And for so moch as he wil nedes vyset me, what answer shal I geue him? He that fashioned me in my mothers wombe, made he not him also?, were we not both shappen alyke in oure mothers bodies? When the poore desyred eny thinge at me, haue I denyed it them? Haue I caused ſ wyddowe stonde waytinge for me in vayne? Haue I eaten my porcion alone, that the fatherles hath had no parte with me? Or, eny poore man for lack of rayment, whose sydes thanked me not, because he was warmed with ſ will of my shepe?

Dyd I euer lyft vp my honde to hurte the fatherlesse? Yee in the gate where I sawe my self to be in auctorite: Thē let myne arme fall fro my shulder, & myne arme holes be broken from the ioyntes. Here ende the wordes of Iob.

The xxxij. Chapter.

SO these thre men wolde stryue nomore with Iob, because he helde himself a righteous man. But Eliu the sonne of Barachel the Bussite ^a of the kynred of Ram, was very sore displeased at Iob, that he called himself iust before God. And with Iobs three frēdes he was angrie also, because they had founde no reasonable answer to ouercome him. Now taried Eliu till they had ended their communication with Iob, for why? they were elder then he. So when Eliu y^e sonne of Barachel y^e Bussite sawe, that these three men were not able to make Iob answer, he was myscontent: so that he gaue answer himself, and sayde: ^bConsideringe y^e I am yonge, & ye be men of age, I was afrayed, & durst not shewe forth my mynde, for I thought thus within my self: ^cIt becometh olde men to speake, & the aged to teach wysdome. Euery mā^d (no doute) hath a mynde, but it is the inspyracion of the Allmightie that geueth vnderstondinge. All men are not wyse, nether doth euery aged man vnderstonde the thinge that is laufull. Therefore wil I speake also (in so farre as I maye be herde) & wil shewe yow myne opinyon. For whē I had wayted till ye made an ende of youre talkyng, & herde youre wysdome, what argumētes ye made in youre communication: yee when I had diligently pondred what ye sayde, I founde not one of you that made eny good argument agaynst

Iob, or that directly coude make answer vnto his wordes: lest ye shulde prayse youre selues, to haue founde out wysdome: because it is God that hath cast him out, & no man. Neuetherlesse, seynge he hath not spoken vnto me, (therefore will not I answer him as ye haue done (for they were so abaszshed, that they coude not make answer, ner speake one worde) but in so moch as ye wil not speake, stondinge still like dome men & makinge no answer: I haue a good hope for my parte to shappe him an answer & to shewe him my meanyng. For I am full of wordes, & the sprete that is within me, cōpellethe me. Beholde, I am as the new wyne which hath no vente, & bursteth the new vessels in sunder. Therefore wil I speake, that I maye haue vete: I wil open my lyppes, and make answer. I will regarde no maner of personne, no man wil I spare. For yf I wolde go aboute to please mē,^e I knowe not how soone my maker wolde take me awaye.

The xxxij. Chapter.

WHERFORE, heare my wordes (O Iob) & herken vnto all, that I wyll saye: Beholde, I wil open my mouth, & my tonge shal speake out of my chawes. My hert shall orde my wordes a right, & my lyppes shal talke of pure wysdome. The sprete of God hath made me,^f & the breth of the Allmightie hath geuē me my life. Yf thou cāst, then geue me answer: prepare thy self to stōde before me face to face. Beholde, before God am I euen as thou, for I am fashioned and made euē of the same moulde. Therefore, thou nedest not be afrayed of me, nether nedest thou to feare, that my auctorite shal be to heuy for the. Now hast thou spoken in myne eares, & I haue herde y^e voyce of thy wordes: I am clene without eny fawte,^g I am innocent, & there is no wickednesse in me. But lo, he hath pyked a quarell agaynst me, & taketh me for his enemy: he hath put my fote in the stockes, & loketh narrowly vnto all my pathes. Beholde, vnto these vnreasonable wordes of thyne wil I make answer.

Shulde God be reproued of man? Why doest thou then stryue agaynst him, because he geueth the no accomptes of all his doinges? For whē God doth once commaunde a thinge, there shulde no man be curious, to search whether it be right. "In dreames and visions of the night season (when slombrynge cometh vpō mē,^a that they fall a slepe in their beddes) he rowneth them in the eares, he infourmeth them, & sheweth thē planely, that it is he, which withdraweth man from euell, delyuereth him from pryde, kepeth his soule from destruction, & his life from ſwearde. he chasteneth him with sicknesse, & bringeth him to his bed: he laieeth sore punyſhmēt vpō his bones, so that his life maye awaye with no bred, & his soule abhorreth to eate eny dayntie meate: In so moch, that his body is clene consumed awaye, & his bones appeare no more. His soule draweth on to destruction, & his life to death. Now yf there be an angel (one amonge a thousande) sent for to speake vnto mā, and to shewe him the right waye: thē the LORDE is mercifull vnto him, & sayeth: He shalbe delyuered, ſh he fall not downe to destruction, for I am ſufficiently recōciled. Than his flesh (which hath bene in misery & trouble) shalbe, as it was in his youth. For yf he submitte himself vnto God, he is gracious, & sheweth him his countenance ioyfully, & rewardeth man for his righteousnes. Such a respecte hath he vnto mē. Therefore let a man cōfesse, (& saye:) I offended, but he hath chastened & reformed me: I dyd vnrightuously, neuertheless he hath not recōpensēd me thereafter. Yee he hath delyuered my soule from destruction, & my life, that it seyth ſ light. Lo, thus worketh God all waie with mā, that he kepeth his soule from perishingē, & latteth him enioye the light of ſ luyngē. Marke well (O Iob) & heare me: holde the still, vntill I haue spoken. But yf thou hast eny thinge to saye, then answer me and speake, for thy answer pleaseth me. Yf thou hast nothinge, then heare me, and holde thy tonge, so shal I teach the wysdome.

The xxxiiiij. Chapter.

ELIU proceeded forth in his cōmunicacion, & sayde: Heare my wordes (O ye wyse men) herken vnto me, ye ſ haue vnderſtōdinge. For like as the mouth tasteth the meates, so the eare proueth & discerneth the wordes. "As for the iudgmēt, let vs keke it out amonge oure selues, ſ we maye knowe what is right. And why? Iob hath sayde: I am rightuous, but God doth me wronge. I must nedes be a liar, though my cause be right: & violetly am I plagued, where as I made no fawte. where is there soch one as Iob, ſ drinketh vp scornfulnes like water? which goeth in ſ company of wicked doers, & walketh with vngodly mē? For he saieth: Though a mā be good, yet is he naught before God. Therefore herke vnto me, ye ſ haue vnderſtōdinge.

Farre be it from God, that he shulde medle with wickednesse: and farre be it from the Allmightie, ſ he shulde medle with vnrightuous dealynge: but he rewardeth the workes of man, & causeth euery man to fynde acordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God cōdemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgmēt of the Allmightie is not vnrightuous. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole worlde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to drawe his sprete and breth vnto him? "All flesh shal come together vnto naught, & all mē shal turne agayne vnto earth. Yf thou now haue vnderſtōdinge, heare what I saye and herken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? Yf thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is euen the same, ſ knoweth the rebellious kynge, & sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye. He hath no respecte vnto the personnes of ſ lordly, & regardeth not the rich more thē poore. For they be all the worke of his hondes.

In the twyncklinge off an eye shall they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people & the tyrauntes rage, then shall they perish, & be taken awaye without hondes. "And why? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goings. There is no darcknes ner thicke shadowe, ſ can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mā shalbe suffred to go in to iudgment with God.

"Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyſhe and setteth other in their steades. For he knoweth their euell & darcke workes, therefore shal they be destroyed. Of soch an vngodly personne as thou, & of ȝ sonne of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greate crie & cōplaynte made by thē that are oppressed with violence, yee euery man complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrauntes. For soch one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? ād ȝ shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night? Which geueth vs more vnderstōdinge then he doth the beastes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heauē.

Yf eny soch complayne, no mā geueth answer, and ȝ because of the wickednesse off proude tyrauntes. But yf a man call vpon

God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Allmightie accepte his crie? Whā thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thy self before him, and put thy trust in him? Then vseth he no violence in his wrath nether hath he pleasure in curious and depe inquisicions. Therefore hath Iob opened his mouth but in vayne, ād folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

ELIU proceeded forth in his talkinge, & sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto ȝ yet more of myne vnderstōdinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, & no lye: and the knowlege wherwithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not away ȝ mightie, for he himself is mightie in power and wisdomē.

As for the vngodly, he preserueth thē not but helpeth the poore to their right. he turneth not his eyes away from the righteous he setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and cōfirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therin. But yf they be layed in preson and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of pouerte: then sheweth he them their workes ād dedes and the synnes wherwith they haue vsed cruell violence.

He with punyshinge and nurturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. Yf they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, ād their yeares in pleasure ād ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, & perish or euer they be awarre. As for soch as be fayned, dyssemblers and ypcrites, they heape vp wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his presoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe with ȝ condēd. The poore delyuereth he out of his straytnesse, and comforteth soch as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the (yf thou wilt be content) from the bottomlesse pytte that is beneth: & yf thou wilt holde the quyete, he shal fyll thy table with plenteuousnesse.

iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen such a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffre. For then shal not thy cause be stilled with crueltie, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordered then, that the glorious life off the α all such mightie men shulde not be put downe? Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for thee, to set other people in thy steade. But bewarre that thou turne not asyde to wickednesse and synne, which hytherto thou hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there such a gyde and lawegeuer as he? Who wil reprove him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

B O conside how greate and excellent his workes be, whom all men loue and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to \hat{y} experiece of his yeares. He turneth \hat{y} water to smal droppes, he dryueth his cloudes together for to rayne, "so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can sprede out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpo them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth the abundaunce of meate. In \hat{y} turnynge of a hande he hydeth the light, α at his commaundement it commeth agayne. The rysinge vp therof sheweth he to his frendes and to the catell.

A T this my hert is astonniend, and moued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse \hat{y} goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A roaringe voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth such a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceaue it afterwarde. It geueth an horrible sounde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not coprehende. ^a When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Immediately the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne workes. The beestes cripe in to their dennes, α take their rest. Out of the south commeth the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the breth of God, the frost commeth, α the waters are shed abroad. The cloudes do their laboure in geuyng moystnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, accordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth the thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punysh eny londe, or to do good vnto them, that seke him.

Herken vnto this (o Iob) stonde still, and conside the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of coucel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his coucell, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonders? and how thy clothes are warme, whē the lode is still thorow the south wynde? hast thou helped him to spred out the heauen, which is to loke vpo, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hi, for we are vnmete because of darknes. Shal it be tolde him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery mā seith not the light, \hat{y} he kepeth cleare in the cloudes, which he clenseth whan he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the north, but the prayse and honour off Gods feare commeth fro God himself. It is not we that can fynde out the allmightie: for in power, equite and rightuousnesse he is hyer then can be expressed. Seinge then that euery body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stode in feare of hi?

The xxxviiij. Chapter.

THEN spake the LORDE vnto Iob out of the storme, and sayde: what is he, that hydeth his mynde with foolysh wordes? Gyrde vp thy loynes like a mā, for I will question the, se thou geue me a dyrecte answer. Where wast thou, when I layed \hat{y} foundations of the earth? Tell planely yff thou hast vnderstandinge. Who hath measured it, knowest thou? Or, who hath spred \hat{y} lyne vpon it? C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or lerned him to bowe downe his neck with feare: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth like a greshopper, where as the stoute neyenge that he maketh, is fearfull? he breaketh & groundeth with the hofes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to mete the harness men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny swerde. Though the quyvers rattle vpon him, though the speare and shilde glistre: yet russeth he in fearely, and beatech vpon the grounde. He feareth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, tush (sayeth he) for he smell-eth the batell asfarre of, & noyse, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshauke flyeth towards the south? Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hye at thy commaundement? He abydeeth in the stony rockes, ad vpon the hye toppes of harde mountaynes, where no man can come. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. ^a His yonge ones are fed with bloude, and where eny deed body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Morouer, God spake vnto Iob and sayde: Can he that stryeth with the Allmightie, be at rest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answer? Iob answered the LORDE, sayenge: Beholde, I am to vyle a personne, to answer the, therefore will I laye my hande vpon my mouth. Once or twyse haue I spoken, but I will saye nomore.

The xl. Chapter.

A THEN spake the LORDE vnto Iob out of the storme, and sayde: ^bgyrde vp thy loynes like a man, and tell me the thige that I will axe the. Wilt thou disanulle my iudgment? Or, wilt thou condemne me, & thou thy self mayest be made rightuous? Is thine arme then like the arme of God? Maketh thy voyce such a soude as his doth? Then arme thy self with thine owne power, vp, decke the in thy ioly araye, poure out the indignacion of thy wrath: se that thou cast downe all & proude, loke well, that thou makest all such as be stubburne, to obeye: treade all the vngodly vnder thy fete, cast the downe in to the myre, and couer their faces with darcknesse: Then will I confesse also, that thyne owne right honde hath sau'd the.

B Beholde, the cruell beast (whom I made with the) which eateth haye as an oxe: lo, how stronge he is in his loynes, and what power he hath in the nauell of his body. He spredeth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his waynes are stiff. His shynnes are like pipes off brasse, his rygge bones are like staues of yro. First when God made him, he ordered the wyldernes for him, & the mountaynes shulde geue him grasse, where all the beastes off the felde take their pastyme. He lyeth amōge the redes in the Mosses, the fennes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wyloves of the broke couer him rounde aboute. Lo, without eny labour might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Iordane without eny traauyle. Who darre laye honde vpon him openly, and vndertake to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, ad laye a snare for him?

C Darrest thou drawe out ^cLeuiathan with an angle, or bynde his tongue with a snare? Canst thou put a ryng in the nose of him, or bore his chafes thorow with an aule? Wyl he make many fayre wordes with the (thynkest thou) or flatre the? Wyl he make a couenaunt with the? Or, art thou able for to compell him to do the contynuall seruyce? Wilt thou take thy pastyme with him as with a byrde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy companyons maye hew him in peces, to be parted amonge the marchaunt men? Canst thou fyll the nett with his skynne, or & fysh pānyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye honde vpon him? It is better for the to conside what harme might happē the there thorow and not to touch him. For when thou thynkest to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle the: Euery man also that seyth him, shall go backe. And why? there darre none be so bolde, as to rayse him vp.

Who openeth the dore of his face? for he hath horrible tethe rounde aboute. His body is couered with scales as it were with shyldes, locke in, kepte, and well cōpacte together. One is so ioyned to another, that no ayre can come in: Yee one hangeth so vpon another, and stickes so together, that they can not be sundered. His nesinge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the mornynge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrils there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote seetinge pott. His breth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remaineth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are ioyned so straye one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hert is as harde as a stone, ad as fast as the stythe that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the wawes heuy. Yff he drawe out the swearde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yro, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not awaye for him that bendeth the bowe, & as for slynge stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorne that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like y sharpe potsherdes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boyle like a pott, and stereth the see together like an oyntment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkynge place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. Yff a man will cōsidre all hye thinges, this same is a kynge ouer all the children off pryde.

O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answere me vnto the thinge that I will axe the. I haue geuen diligent eare vnto the, and now I se y with myne eyes. Wherfore I geue myne owne self y blame, and take repentaunce in the dust and ashes.

Now whē the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Iob, he sayde vnto Eliphaz y Themanite: I am displeased with the & thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thinge y is right before me, like as my seruauit Iob hath done. Him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue not spokē y thinge which is right, like as my seruauit Iob hath done.

So Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad y Suhite and Sophar the Naamathite wēte their waye, and did acordynge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also 'accepted the personne off Iob, and the LORDE turned him vnto Iob, whē he prayed for his frendes: 'Yee the LORDE gaue Iob twyse as moch as he had afore.

And the LORDE made Iob richer then he was before: for he had xiiij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yock oxē, and a M. asses. He had children also: vij. sonnes and iij. daughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde, poerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In all the londe were none founde so fayre, as the daughters of Iob, & their father gaue them enheritaunce amonge their brethren. After this lyued Iob xl. yeares, so that he sawe his children, & his childers children vnto the fourth generacion.^d And so he dyed, beinge olde & of a perfecte age.

BLESSED is \hat{y} man, \hat{y} goeth not in the counsell of \hat{y} vngodly: \hat{y} abydeth not in the waye off synners, τ sytteth not in \hat{y} seate of the scornefull. BWHY do the Heithē grudge?^f why do the people ymagyn vayne thinges? The kynges of the earth stōde vp, and the rulers are come together, agaynst the LORDE \hat{a} d agaynst his anoynted. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse: yee let them euer be geuyng of thanks, because thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioyfull in the. For thou LORDE geuest thy blessinge vnto the rightuous: and with thy fauorable kyndnes thou defendest him, as with a shyld.

The vi. A psalme of David.

OH LORDE, rebuke me not in thine anger: c Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. Haue mercy vpon me (o LORDE) for I am weake: o LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greate trouble, but LORDE how longe? Turne the (o LORDE) & delyuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remembreth the: Oh who wil geue the thanks in the hell? I am weery of gronyng: Euery night wasse I my bedde, b & water my couche with my teares. My cōtēnaunce is chaunged for very inwarde grefe, I cōsume awaye, I haue so many enemies. a Awaye fro me all ye wicked doers, for the LORDE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge. The LORDE hath herde myne humble peticiō, the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All myne enemies shalbe cōfounded & sore vexed: yee they shalbe turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

OLORDE my God, in y do I trust: a saue me frō all thē y persecute me, & delyuer me. Lest he hantch vp my soule like a lyon, & teare it in peces, whyle there is none to helpe. O LORDE my God, yff I haue done eny soch thinge: yf there be eny vnrightuousnes in my hādes: Yff I haue rewarded euell vnto thē y dealt frendly with me or hurte thē y without eny cause are myne enemyes: Then let myne enemye persecute my soule, & take me: yee let hī treade my life downe in the earth, & laye myne honoure in the dust. Sela. Stōde vp (o LORDE) in thy wrath, lift vp thyself ouer the furious indignaciō of myne enemyes: aryse vp (for me) in the vengeance that thou hast promysed. b That the congregacion of the people maye come aboute the, for their sakes therfore lift vp thyself agayne. The LORDE is iudge ouer the people: Auenge me then (o LORDE) accordinge to my rightuousnes & innocency. Oh let the wickednes of the vngodly come to an ende: but manteyne the iust, thou rightuous God, y triest the very hertes & the reynes. My helpe cōmeth of God, c which preserueth them y are true of herte. God is a rightuous iudge, & God is euer threateninge. The liij. A psalme of David.

O LORDE oure gouernoure: how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde? how excellent is thy glory aboue the heauens? "Out of the mouth of the very babes & sucklings thou hast ordered prayse, because of thine enemies, y^e thou mightest destroye the enemye and the auenger. For I conside thy heauens, euen the worke off thy fyngers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. Oh what is man, y^e thou art so myndfull of him? ether the sonne of mā that thou visitest him? "After thou haddest for a season made him lower thē the angels, thou crownedest him with honoure & glory. "Thou hast set him aboue the workes off thy hondes: thou hast put all thinges in subieccion vnder his fete. All shepe and oxen, yee and the beastes of the felde. The foules of the ayre: the fysh of the see, and what so walketh thorow the wayes of the see. O LORDE oure gouernoure, how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde?

The ij. A psalme of David.

I WIL geue thanks vnto the (o LORDE) with my whole herte, "I wil speake of all thy maruelous workes. I wil be glad & reioyse in the, yee my songes wil I make of thy name, o thou most hyest. Because thou hast dryuē myne enemies abacke, they were discōfited, & perished at thy presence. For thou hast manteyned my right and my cause: thou syttest in the Trone that art the true iudge. Thou rebukest the Heithen, and destroyest the vngodly, thou putttest out their name for euer and euer. The enemies swerdes are come to an ende, thou hast ouerthrowen their cities, their memoriall is perished with thē. But y^e LORDE endureth for euer, he hath prepared his seate vnto iudgmēt. He gouerneth y^e worlde with rightuousnes & ministreth true iudgmēt vnto the people. The LORDE is a defence for the poore, a defence in the tyme of trouble. Therefore they y^e knowe thy name, put their trust in y^e: for thou (LORDE) neuer faylest thē, that seke the. "O prayse the LORDE, which dwelleth in Sion, shewe y^e people of his doinges. And why? he maketh inqysicion for their bloude, and remembreth them: "he forgetteth not the complaynte of the poore. Haue mercy vpō me (o LORDE) conside the trouble that I am in amōge myne enemies, thou that listest me vp from y^e gates of death. That I maye shewe all thy prayes within the portes off the doughter Sion, and reioyse in thy sauynge health. As for the Heithen, they are sunckē downe in the pytte that they made: in the same nette, which they spred out priuely, is their owne fote takē. Thus y^e LORDE is knowne to execute true iudgment, whē the vngodly is trapped in the workes of his owne handes. Sela. The wicked must be turned vnto hell, and all the Heithen y^e forget God. But the poore shal not allwaye be out of remembrance, the paciēt abydinge of such as be in trouble shall not perish for euer. Here the Hebrues begynne the x. psalme.

WHY art thou gone so farre of, O LORDE? wilt thou hyde thyself in tyme of trouble? Whyle y^e vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore must suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginacions which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh boost of his owne hertes desyre, the cuetous blesseth him self, and blasphemeth the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: nether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthie, thy iudgmentes are farre out of his sight, he defyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauayle & sorow. He sytteth lurkyng in the gardens, Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their right, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The x. A psalme of Dauid.

AIN the LORDE put I my trust: how will ye then saye to my soule: that she shulde fle as a byrde vpon youre hill? For lo, the vngodly haue bēt their bowe, and made redy their arowes in the quyer: "that they maye priuely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundacion haue they cast downe, what cā the righteous thē do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: ^a He cōsidereth it with his eyes, ^b his eye lyddes beholde the children of men. The LORDE seith both the righteous and vngodly, but who so deliteth in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. For the LORDE is righteous, ād he loueth righteousness, his countenance beholdeth the thigē ^c ⁊ is iust.

The xi. A psalme of Dauid.

AHELPE LORDE, for there is not one saynte more: very fewe faithfull are Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, ⁊ because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vp (sayeth the LORDE) I wil helpe thē, and set thē at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: ^d "euē as ^e ⁊ syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vij. tymes in the fyre. The xij. A psalme of Dauid.

HOW longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE? for euer? how longe wilt thou hyde thy face fro me? Oh how lōge shall I seke counsell in my soule? how longe shall I be so vexed in my herte? how longe shal myne enemye triumphe ouer me? Considre, ād heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemye saye: I haue preuayled agaynst hī, for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyce at it.

The xiii. A psalme of David.

The xv. A psalme of David.

PRESERVE me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto y LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon soch like. But they y runne after another, shall haue greate trouble. Their drynkofferynges of bloude wil not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my mouth. ^c The LORDE himself is my good and my porcion, thou manteynest my enheritaūce. The lott is fallen vnto me in a fayre grounde, yee I haue a goodly heretage. I wil thanke the LORDE for geuyng me warnyng: my reynes also haue chastened me in the night season. Afore honde sawe I God allwayes before me, ^d for he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be moued.

^e Therefore dyd my hert reioyce, & my tunge was glad, my flesh also shall rest in hope. For why? thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, ^f nether shalt thou suffre thy saynte to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shalt make me full of ioye with thy countenance. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for euermore.

The xvi. A psalme of David.

HEARE y right (O LORDE) ^g cōside my cōplaynte: herken vnto my prayer, that goeth not out of a fayned mouth. Let my sentence come forth frō thy presence, and loke vpon the thinge that is equal. ^h Thou hast proued & visited myne herte in the night season: thou hast tried me in the fyre, & hast founde no wickednes in me: for I vtterly purposed, that my mouth shulde not offende. Because of the wordes of thy lippes, I haue kepte me frō the workes of men, in y waye off the murthurer. Oh ordre thou my goynges in thy pathes, that my fote steppes slippe not. For vnto the I crie, heare me o God: encline thine eares to me, and herkē vnto my wordes. Shewe thy maruelous louinge kindnesse, thou that sauest them which put their trust in the, from soch as resist thy right honde. Kepe me as the apple of an eye, defende me vnder the shadowe of thy wynges.ⁱ From the vngodly that trouble me, fro myne enemies which compasse my soule rounde aboute.

Which manteyne their owne welthynesse with oppression, & their mouth speaketh proude thinges. They lye waytinge in oure waye on euery syde, turnyng their eyes downe to the grounde. The xviij. A psalme of Dauid when he was deluyered from the honde off Saul.

I WIL loue the (o LORDE) my strēghth. The LORDE is my soucure, my refuge, my Sauicoure: my god, my helper i whō I trust: my buckler, y^e horne of my health, ⁊ my protectiō. I wil prayse y^e LORDE ⁊ call vpon him, "so shal I be safe fro myne enemies. The sorowes of death cōpassed me,^a ⁊ the brokes of vngodlynnes made me afraied. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the snares of death toke holde vpō me. Yet in my trouble I called vpō the LORDE, ⁊ cōplayned vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out off his holy tēple, ⁊ my cōplaynte came before hī, yee euē in to his eares. "Thē the earth trembled ⁊ quaked, the very fōundaciōs of the hilles shoke ⁊ were remoued, because he was wrothe. There wēte a smoke out of his nostrils, ād a cōsumynge fyre out of his mouth, so y^e coales were kyndled at it. He bowed the heauē ⁊ came downe, ⁊ it was darcke vnder his fete. He rode vpō the Cherubins ⁊ dyd fle: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made darcknesse his paylyon rounde aboute hī, with darcke water ⁊ thicke cloudes to couer him. At the brightnes off his presence the cloudes remoued, with hale stones ⁊ coales of fyre. The LORDE also thondred out of y^e heauē, ⁊ the heyth gaue his thondre with hale stones ⁊ coales of fyre. He sent out his arowes ⁊ scatred thē, he cast sore lighteninges, ⁊ destroyed thē. The springes of waters were sene, ⁊ the foundaciōs of the rōude worlde were discouered at thy chiding (o LORDE) at the blasinge ⁊ breth of thy displeasure. He sent downe frō the heyth to fetch me, ⁊ toke me out of greete waters. He deluyered me fro my stronge enemies, and fro my foes which were to mightie for me. They preuented me in the tyme of my trouble, but y^e LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth also in to lyberte: ⁊ deluyered me, because he had a faouore vnto me. The LORDE shall rewarde me after my rightuous dealynge, ⁊ acordinge to the clēnesse of my hōdes shal he recōpense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, ⁊ haue not behaued myself wickedly agaynst my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, ⁊ cast not out his commaundemētes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hī, ⁊ wil eschue myne owne wickednes. Therefore shal y^e LORDE rewarde me after my rightuous dealinge, ⁊ acordinge vnto y^e clēnesse of my hōdes in his eye sight. With the holy thou shalt be holy, ⁊ with y^e innocēt thou shalt be innocēt. With the clene thou shalt be clene "⁊ with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde. For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed, ⁊ brige downe the hye lokes of the proude. "Thou lightest my cādle, o LORDE my God: thou makest my darcknesse to be light. For in the I can discōfit an hoost of mē: yee in my God I cā leape ouer the wall.

"The waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the fyre: he is a shyld of defence, for all them that trust in him. "For who is God, but the LORDE? "Or, who hath eny strength, but oure God? It is God that hath gyrded me with strēghth and made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my fete like hartes fete, and set me vp an hye. "He teacheth myne hondes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake euen a bowe off stele. "Thou hast geuē me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correciōn maketh me greate. Thou hast made rowme ynough vnder me for to go, that my fote steppes shulde not slyde. I will folowe vpon myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be discomfited. I will smyte them, they shall not be able to stonde, but fall vnder my fete. Thou hast gyrded me with strength vnto y^e batell, thou hast throwē them all downe vnder me, that rose vp agaynst me. Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backs vpon me, thou hast destroyed thē y^e hated me. They cried, but there was none to helpe thē: "yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde thē not. I will beate them as small as the dust before the wynde, I will cast them out as y^e claye in the stretes. The xxi. A psalme of Dauid.

MY God, my God: why hast thou forsaken me?^a y^e wordes of my cōplaynte are farre fro my health. O my God, I crie in the daye tyme, but thou hearest not: and in the night season also I take no rest. Yet dwellest thou in the Sanctuary, o thou worshipec of Israel. Oure fathers hoped in the, they trusted in the, ad thou dyddest deluyuer them. They called vpon the, and were helped: they put their trust in the, and were not cōfounded. But as for me, I am a worme and no man: a very scorne of mē and the outcast of the people. All they y^e se me, laugh me to scorne: they shute out their lippes, and shake their heades. He trusted in God,^c let him deluyuer him: let him helpe hī, yf he wil haue him. But thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wōbe:^d thou wast my hope, when I hanged yet vpon my mothers brestes. I haue bene left vnto the euer sence I was borne, thou art my God, euē fro my mothers wombe. O go not fro me thē, for trouble is harde at honde, and here is none to helpe me. Greate bulles are come aboute me, fatt oxen close me in on euery syde. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, as it were a rampinge and roaringe lyon.

I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of ioynt: my hert in the myddest off my body is euen like meltinge waxe. My strength is dried vp like a potsherde, my tunge cleueth to my goomes, and thou hast brought me in to the dust of death. For dogges are come aboute me, the cōicell of y^e wicked hath layed sege agaynst me. They pearced my hondes and my fete, I might haue tolde all my bones: as for them, they stode staringe and lokinge vpon me. They haue parted my garments amonge them,^e ad cast lottes vpon my vesture.

But be not thou farre fro me, o LORDE: thou art my succoure, haist the to helpe me. Deluyuer my soule from the swearde, my dear-linge from the power of the dogge. Saue me from the Lyons mouth, and heare me frō amonge the hornes off the vnicornes.^f So will I declare thy name vnto my brethren,^g in the myddest off the congregacion will I prayse the. O prayse the LORDE ye that feare him: Magnifie him all ye sede of Iacob, & let all y^e sede of Israel feare hī. For he hath not despysed ner abhorred the myserable estate of the poore: he hath not hyd his face fro me, but whē I called vnto him, he herde me. I wil prayse the in the greate congregacion, and perfourme my vowes in the sight off all thē that feare the. The poore shal eate ad be satisfied: they y^e seke after y^e LORDE shal prayse him: youre herte shal lyue for euer.

All the endes of the worlde shal remembre them selues, & be turned vnto the LORDE: and all the generations of the Heithen shal worshipec before him. For the kyngdome is the LORDES, and he shal be the gouernoure of y^e Heithen. All soch as be fat vp^e earth, shal eate also and worshipec: All they that lye in the dust, and lyue so hardly, shall fall downe before him. The sede shall serue him, and preach of the LORDE for euer. They shal come, & declare his rightuousnes: vnto a people that shal be borne, whō the LORDE hath made.

The xxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

THE LORDE is my shepherde,^a I can wante nothinge. He fedeth me in a grene pasture, ad ledeth me to a fresh water. He quickeneth my soule, & bringeth me forth in the waye of rightuousnes for his names sake. Though I shulde walke now in the valley of the shadowe of death, yet I feare no euell, for thou art with me: thy staffe & thy shepehoke cōforte me. Thou preparast a table before me agaynst mine enemies: thou anoyntest my heade with oyle, & fyllest my cuppe full. Oh let thy louynge kyndnes & mercy folowe me all the dayes off my life, that I maye dwell in the house off the LORDE for euer.

VNTO the (O LORDE) I lift vp my

not ⁊ synnes & offences of my youth, but acordinge vnto thy mercy thynke vpon me (O

& rightuous is the LORDE, therefore wil he teach synners in the waye. He ledeth the symple a right, and such as be meke thē lerneth he his wayes. All the wayes of the LORDE are very mercy & faithfulness, vnto such as kepe his testament and couenaunt.
For thy nāmes sake,^c O LORDE, be mercifull vnto my synne, for it is greate. What so euer he be that feareth the LORDE, he shal shewe him the waye that he hath chosen.

desolate and in misery. The sorowes of my Loke vpon my aduersite and misery, and forgeue me all my synnes. Considre how myne enemies are many, and beare a malicious hate agaynst me. O kepe my soule, and delyuer me: let me not be confounded, for I

The xxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

BE thou my iudge (O LORDE) for I

LORDE, therfore shall I not fall.

Examen me O LORDE, and proue me:
trie out my reynes and my hert. For thy louinge kyndnesse is before myne eyes, and I walke in thy trueth. I syt not amōge wayne disceatfull. I hate the congregacion of the wicked, and I will not syt amonge the vngodly.

I waszshe my hondes with innocency O

33 For in the tyme of trouble he hath hyd me in his tabernacle, ^cye in the secrete place of his dwellinge hath he kepte and set me vp vpon a rocke of stone. And now hath he lift vp my heade aboute myne enemies, that copassed me rounde aboute. For my father and my mother haue forsaken me, but the LORDE hath taken me vp. Shewe me thy waye O LORDE, and lede me in the right path, because of myne enemies. Delyuer me not in to the wylls of myne aduersaries, for there are false wytnesses rysen vp against me, and they ymagyn myschefe. 34 VNTO the wil I crie, o my stronge defence: thinke no scorne of me, lest (yf thou make the as though thou herdest not) I become like them, that go downe in to ^j pytte. Heare the voyce of my humble petition, when I crie vnto the, and holde vp my hondes towarde thy holy temple.

O plucke me not awaye amonge the vngodly and wicked doers, ^k which speake frendly to their neighbour, but ymagin myschefe in their hertes. Rewarde them accordinge to their dedes and wickednesse of their owne inuencions. Recompense them after ^l thy workes of their hōdes, paye them that they haue de-serued. For they regarde not the workes of the LORDE, ner the operacion of his hādes: therfore shal he breake them downe, and not buylde them vp. Praysed be ^m thy LORDE, for he hath herde the voyce of my humble peticiō. ⁿThe LORDE is my strēth and my shyld: my herte hoped in him, ^o & I am helped: therefore my hert daūseth for ioye, and I wil syng prayes vnto him. The LORDE is the strength of his people, he is the defender and Sau^pioure of his anoynted.

O helpe thy people, geue thy blessinge vnto thy enheritaunce: ^qfede them, and set them vp for euer.

The xxxij. A psalme of Dauid.

35 ASCRYBE vnto the LORDE (o ye ^r mightie) ascribe vnto the LORDE worshi^spe and strength. The voyce of the LORDE is mightie in operacion, the voyce of the LORDE is a glorious voyce. ^wThe voyce of the LORDE breaketh the Cedre trees: yee the LORDE breaketh the Ceders of Libanus. He maketh them to skippe like a calfe: ^x Libanus and Sirion like a yonge vnycome. ^yThe voyce of the LORDE deuideth the flames of fyre: the voyce of the LORDE shaketh the wildernesse, yee the LORDE shaketh the wildernesse of Cades.

But as soone as thou turnedest thy face fro me, I was brought in feare. The cried I vnto [†] (O LORDE) yee vnto [‡] LORDE made I my prayer. What profit is there in my bloude, [§] yf I go downe to corrupcion? Maye the dust geue thanks vnto [¶]? Or shal it declare thy faithfulness? The xxx. A psalme of Dauid.

A IN the, O LORDE, is my trust: let me neuer be put to cofucion,^a but delyuer me in thy rightuousnesse. Bowe downe thine eare to me, make haist to delyuer me: be thou my stronge rocke and a house of defence, that thou mayest saue me. For thou art my stronge holde & my castell: O be thou my gyde, & lede me for thy names sake. Drawe me out of the nett [†] they haue layed priuely for me,^d for thou art my strēgth.

B In to thy hondes I commende my sprete: thou hast delyuered me O LORDE thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORDE. I will be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast considred my trouble, thou hast knowne my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not delyuered me ouer in to the hōdes of the enemye, but hast set my fete in a large rowme. Haue mercy vpon me, O LORDE, for I am in trouble, myne eye is consumed for very heuynesse, yee my soule and my body. My life is waxen olde with heuynesse, and my yeares with mournynge. My strēgth fayleth me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reprove amonge all myne enemies, my neighbours & they of myne owne aquauntaunce are afrayed of me: they [†] se me in the strete, cōveye them selues fro me. I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessell.

C For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: every man abhorreth me: they haue gathered a councel together agaynst me, and are purposed to take a waye my life.

But my hope is in [†] O LORDE, & I saye: thou art my God. My tyme is in thy honde: delyuer me from the honde of myne enemies, & from them [†] persecute me. Shewe thy seruauent the light of thy countenance, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (o LORDE) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confucion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the lyenge lippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdanedly & despitefully speake agaynst the rightuous. O how greate and manifolde is thy good, which thou haist hyd for them that feare [†]? O what thinges bringest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the, euen before the sonnes of men?

B Thou hydest them priuely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou kepest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tonges. Thanks be to the LORDE, for he hath shewed me maruelous greate kyndnesse in a stronge cite. For when the sodane feare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. Neuertheless, thou herdest myne humble prayer, when I cried vnto the. O loue the LORDE (all ye his sayntes) for the LORDE preserueth the faithfull, and plenteously rewardeth he the proude doer. ^a Be strōge therefore & take a good herte vnto you, all ye that put youre trust in the LORDE.

BLESSED are they, whose vnrightuousnesse is forgeuen,^d and whose synnes are couered. Blessed is the man, vnto whom the LORDE imputeth no synne, in whose sprete there is no gyle. For whye I helde my tonge, my bones consumed awaye thorow my daylie complaynynges. And because thy

The xxxij. A psalme of Dauid.

REIOYSE in y LORDE (o ye righteous) "for it becommeth well the iust to be thankfull. Prayse the LORDE with harpe: syng psalmes vnto him with the lute and instrument of ten strynges. Singe him a new songe, yee syng lustely vnto him & with a good corage. For the worde of y LORDE is true, and all his workes are faithfull. "The LORDE loketh downe from heauen, & beholdeth all the children of men: from his stronge seate he considreth all them y dwell in the worlde. "He only hath fashioned all the hertes of them, & knoweth all their workes. A kyng is not helped by his owne greate hoost, nether is a giaunte saued thorow the might of his owne strēgth.

"A horse is but a wayne thyng to saue a man, it is not the power of his strēgth that can delyuer him. "Beholde, the eye of the LORDE loketh vnto them that feare him, & put their trust in his mercy. That he maye delyuer their soules from death, and to fede them in the deare tyme. Let oure soule patiently abyde the LORDE, for he is oure helpe and shilde. False witnesses are rysen vp, & laye to my charge thinges that I knowe not. "They rewarde me euell for good, to the greate discomfort of my soule. Neuertheles, when they were sick, I put on a sack cloth: I humbled my soule with fasting, and my prayer turned in to myne owne bosome. I behaued my self as though it had bene my frende or my brother, I wete heuely, as one y mourneth for his mother. "But in my aduersite they reioyse, and gather them together: yee y very lame come together agaynst me vnawarres, makyng mowes at me, & cease not.

With y gredy & scornfull ypcrites, they gnaszshed vpon me with their teth. LORDE, whan wilt thou loke vp this? O restore my soule from y wicked rumoure of the, my dearlinge from the Lyons. "So wil I geue y thanks in the greate congregacion, & prayse the amonge moch people. O let the not triuphe ouer me, that are myne enemies for naught: O let them not wyncke with their eyes, that hate me without a cause. "And why? their comonyng is not for peace, but they ymagin false wordes agaynst y outcastes of the londe. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, sayenge: there there: we se it with oure eyes. This thou seist, o LORDE: holde not thy tonge the: go not farre fro me, o LORDE. Awake (LORDE) and stonde vp: auenge thou my cause, my God, and my LORDE. Iudge me (o LORDE my God) acordinge to thy righteousnesse, y they triuphe not ouer me. O let the not saye in their hertes: there there, so wolde we haue it. O let them not saye: we haue ouercome him.

Let them be put to confucion and shame, that reioyse at my trouble: let the be clothed with rebuke and dishonoure, that boost the selues agaynst me. Let them also be glad and reioyse, that fauoure my righteous dealing: yee let them saye allwaye: blessed be y LORDE, which hath pleasure in the prosperite of his seruaut. And as for my tonge, it shal be talkyng of thy righteousness and of thy prayse, all the daye longe.

My hert sheweth me the wickednesse of the vngodly, that there is no feare of God before his eyes. For he dyssembleth before his face, so longe till his abhominable synne be founde out. The wordes of his mouth are vnrightuousnesse and disceate,^a he wil not be lerned to do good.

He ymagineth myschefe vpon his bedde, he will come in no good waye, ner refuse the thinge that is euell. ³ Thy mercy (O LORDE) reacheth vnto the heauen, and thy faithfulness vnto the cloudes. Thy rightuousnesse stondesth like the stronge mountaynes, and thy iudgment like the greates depe. Thou LORDE preseruest both me and beestes. How precious is thy mercy (O God) that the children of men maye put their trust vnder thy shadowe of thy wynges? They shalbe satisfied with the pleteuousnesse of thy house, and thou shalt geue them drynke of the ryuer of thy pleasures. For by the is thy well of life, and in thy light, shall we se light. O sprede forth thy louynge kyndnesse vnto them that knowe the, and thy rightuousnes vnto the that are true of hert. O let not the fote of pryde ouertake me, O let not the hande of thy vngodly cast me downe. As for wicked doers, they fall, they are cast downe, and are not able to stode.

² FRETTE not thy self at the vngodly, be not thou envious agaynst the euell doers. For they shall soone be cut downe like thy grasse, and be wythered euen as thy grene herbe. Put thou thy trust in thy LORDE, and be doinge good: so shalt thou dwell in the londe, and verely it shal fede the. Delyte thou in the LORDE, and he shal geue the thy hertes desyre. ³ Committe thy waye vnto thy LORDE, set thy hope in him, and he shal brynge it to passe. Yee he shall make thy rightuousnesse as cleare as the light, and thy iust dealinge as the noone daye. Holde the still in thy LORDE, and abyde paciēty vpon him: but greue not thy self at one that hath prosperite, and lyueth in abhominacion. Leauē of from wrath, let go displeasure, let not thy gelousy moue the also to do euell. For wicked doers shal be roted out, but they that paciēty abyde the LORDE, shal enheret the londe.

Suffre yet a litle whyle, and thy vngodly shal be clene gone: thou shalt lōke after his place, and he shal be awaye. But the meke spreted shal possesse the earth, and haue pleasure in moch rest. The vngodly layeth wayte for the iust, and gnaszeth vpon him with his tethe.

But thy LORDE laugheth him to scorne, for he seith thy daye is cōminge. The vngodly drawe out the swerde and bende their bowe, to cast downe thy symple and poore, and to slaye soch as go thy right waye. Neuertheles, their swerde shal go thorow their owne hert, and their bowe shalbe brokē. A small thinge thy the rightuous hath, is better then greates riches of the vngodly. For the armes of thy vngodly shalbe broken, but the LORDE vpholdeth the rightuous. The LORDE knoweth the dayes of the godly, and thy enheritaūce shal endure for euer. They shal not be cōfounded in thy perloous tyme, and in thy dayes of derth they shall haue ynough. As for thy vngodly, they shall perishe: and whē thy enemies of thy LORDE are in their floures, they shal cōsume, yee euen as the smoke shal they cōsume awaye. The vngodly boroweth and paieth not agayne, but the rightuous is mercifull and liberall. Soch as be blessed of him, shal possesse the londe: and they whom he curseth, shalbe roted out. The LORDE ordreth a good mans goinge, and hath pleasure in his waye. Though he fall, he shal not be hurte, for the LORDE vpholdeth him with his hāde. I haue bene yonge, and now am olde: yet sawe I neuer the rightuous forsake, ner his sede to seke their bred. The rightuous is euer mercifull, and ledeth gētly, therfore shal his sede be blessed. Fle fro euell, and do thy thinge that is good, so shalt thou dwell for euer.

For thy LORDE loueth thy thinge thy is right, he forsaketh not his sayntes, but they shal be preserued for euermore: as for the sede of the vngodly, it shalbe roted out. Yee the rightuous shal possesse thy lōde, and dwell therein for euer. The mouth of the rightuous is exercised in wysdome, and his tōge talketh of iudgment. The lawe of his God is in his hert, therfore shal not his fotesteppes slyde. The vngodly seyth the rightuous, and goeth aboute to slaye him. But the LORDE wil not leaue him in his hōdes, ner cōdemne him when he is iudged. Hope thou in the LORDE, and kepe his waye: and he shal so promote the, that thou shalt haue the lōde by enheritaūce, ¶ se, when the vngodly shall perishe. I myself haue sene the vngodly in greate power, & florishing like a grene baye tre: but when I wente by, lo, he was gone: I sought him, but he coude no where be founde.

Kepe innocency, and take hede vnto the thinge that is right, for that shall brynge a man peace at the last. As for the trasgressours, they shal perishe together, and the vngodly shal be roted out at y last. The helpe of the righteous commeth of the LORDE, he is their strength in the tyme of trouble. The LORDE shal stöde by them, and saue them: he shal delyuer them from the vngodly, and helpe thē, because they put their trust in him.

The xxxvij. A psalme of Dauid.

¶ PUT me not to rebuke (Oh LORDE) in thine anger:^a Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. For thy arowes stick fast in me, and thy honde presseth me sore. There is no whole parte in my body, because of thy displeasure: there is no rest in my bones, by reason of my synnes. For my wickednesses are gone ouer my heade, and are like a sore burthen, to heuy for me to beare.

My woundes styncke & are corrupte, thorow my folishnesse. I am brought in to so greate trouble and misery, that I go mournynge all the daye longe. For my loynes are clene dried vp, and there is no whole parte in my body. I am feble and sore smytē, I roare for the very disquietnes of my hert.

¶ LORDE, thou knowest all my desyre, & my gronyng is not hyd from the. My hert paunteth, my strength hath fayled me, & the light of myne eyes is gone fro me. My louers & frendes^b stonde lokinge vpon my trouble, and my kynsmen are gone a farre of.^c

They that sought after my life, and to do me euell, spake of lyes and ymagined disceate all the daye longe. As for me, I was like a deaf mā, and herde not: and as one that were domme, not openynge his mouth. I am become as a man that heareth not, and that can make no resistance with his mouth.

¶ For in the (O LORDE) is my trust, thou shalt heare me, O LORDE my God. My desyre is, y myne enemies triumphe not ouer me: for yf my fote slippe, they reioyse greatly against me. I am redy to suffre trouble, and my heuynesse is euer in my sight. For I cōfesse my wickednesse, & my synne greueth me.

But myne enemies lyue, and are mightie: and they that hate me without a cause, are many in nombre. They that rewarde me euell for good, speake euell of me, because I folowe the thinge that good is. Forsake me not (O LORDE my God) O go not farre fro me. Haist the to helpe me, O LORDE my succoure.

The xxxvij. A psalme of Dauid.

¶ I SAYDE: I wil kepe my waies, that I offended not in my tonge. And so I shut my mouth, whyle the vngodly layed wayte for me. I helde my tonge, I was domme, I kepte sylence, yee euē from good wordes, but it was payne and grefe to me. My hert was hote within me, & whyle I was thus musynge, the fyre kyndled: so that I spake with my tonge. ¶ LORDE, let me knowe myne ende, and the nombre of my dayes: that I maye be certified what I wante. ¶ Beholde, thou hast made my dayes a spanne longe, and my life is as it were nothinge before the. O how wayne are all men lyuynge? Sela. Yee euery man walketh as it were a shadowe, and disquieteth himself in wayne: he heapeth vp riches,^d and can not tell to whom he gathereth them. And now LORDE, wherin shall I comforte me? my hope is in the. Delyuer me from all myne offences, and make me not a scorne vnto the foolish. I kepe sylēce, and open not my mouth, for thou hast done it. Turne thy plagis awaye fro me, for I am cōsumed thorow the feare of thy hāde. When thou punyshest man for synne, thou chastenest him: so that his beutie consumeth awaye, like as it were a mothe. O how wayne are all men?

B One depe calleth another with the voyce of thy whistles, "all thy wawes & water floudes are gone ouer me. The LORDE hath promised his louynge kyndnesse daylie, therefore wil I prayse him in the night season, and make my prayer vnto \hat{y} God of my life. I wil saye vnto God my stony rock: why hast thou forgotten me? why go I thus heuely, why the enimie oppresseth me? Why my bones are broken, & why myne enemies cast me in the tethe, daylie sayenge vnto me: where is now thy God? Why art thou so heuy (o my soule) & why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet thanke him for the helpe of his countenance, and because he is my God.

The xliij. Psalm.

A GEUER sentence vpon me (o God) & defende my cause agaynst the vnholly people: Oh delyuer me from the disceatfull & wicked man. For thou (o God) art my strength: why hast thou shot me from the? Why go I then so heuely, why the enimie oppresseth me? Oh sende out thy light & thy trueth, \hat{y} they maye lede me & brynge me vnto thy holy hill and to thy dwelling.

That I maye go in to the aulter of God, euen vnto the God which is my ioye & pleasure, & vpon the harpe to geue thākes vnto \hat{y} , o God, my God. Why art thou so heuy (o my soule) & why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet geue him thākes for \hat{y} helpe of his countenance, and because he is my God.

The xliij. A psalme of the childrē of Corah.

A WE haue herde with oure eares (o God) oure fathers haue tolde vs, what thou hast done in their tyme, of olde.

How thou hast dryūe out the Heithen with thy honde, & plāted thē in: how thou hast destroyed the nacions & cast thē out. For they gat not the londe in possession thorow their owne swerde, nether was it their owne arme that helped them. But thy right hāde, thyne arme & the light of thy countenance, because thou haddest a fauoure vnto them.

'Thou art \hat{y} kinge & my God, thou sendest helpe vnto Iacob. Thorow \hat{y} , wil we ouerthrowe oure enemies: & in thy name wil we treade them vnder, that ryse vp agaynst vs.

For I will not trust in my bowe, it is not my swerde \hat{y} shal helpe me. But it is thou that sauest vs frō oure enemies, and putttest them to confucion that hate vs. We will allwaye make oure boast of God, and prayse thy name for euer. Sela. But now thou forsakest vs, & putttest vs to confucion, and goest not forth with oure hoostes. 'Thou makest vs to turne oure backs vpon oure enemies, so that they which hate vs, spoile oure goodes. 'Thou lettest vs be eaten vp like shepe, & scatrest vs amonge the Heithen.

Thou sellest thy people for naught, & takest no moneye for them. Thou makest vs to be rebuked of oure neighbours, to be laughed to scorne and had in derision, of them that are rounde aboute vs. 'Thou hast made vs a very byrowde amonge the Heithen, & that the people shake their heades at vs. My cōfucion is daylie before me, & the shame of my face couereth me. For the voyce of the slaunderer & blasphemers, for the enimie and auenger. All this is come vpon vs, & yet haue we not forgotten the, ner behaued oure selues vnfaithfully in thy couenaunt. Oure hert is not turned backe, nether oure steppes gone out of thy waye. That thou smyttest vs so in the place of the serpēt, & couerest vs with \hat{y} shadowe of death. 'Yf we had forgotten the name of oure God, & holde vp oure hondes to eny straunge God: Shulde not God fynde it out? for he knoweth the very secretes of the hert. But for thy sake we are kyllid all the daie longe, 'and are counted as shepe apoynted to be slayne. Vp LORDE, why slepest thou? Awake, and cast vs not of for euer. Wherefore hydest thou thy face? wilt thou clene forget oure misery and oppressiō? For oure soule is brought lowe euen vnto the dust, and oure bely cleueth vnto the grounde. Arise o LORDE, helpe vs, and delyuer vs for thy mercie sake.

In oure troubles and aduersite, we haue founde, that God is oure refuge, oure strength and helpe. Therefore wil we not feare, though the earth fell, and though the hills were caried in to the myddest of the see.

Though the waters of the see raged & were neuer so troublous, & though the mountaynes shoke at the tēpest of the same. Sela.

For there is a floude, which with his ryuers reioyseth þe cite of God, the holy dwellynge of the most hyest. God is in þy myddest of her, therefore shall she not be remoued: for God helpeth her, & þy right early. The Heithen are

The xliiij. A psalme of the children of Corah.

^a O HEARE this, all ye people: pondre it well, all ye that dwell vpon the earth.

Hye & lowe, riche & poore, one with another.

My mouth shal speake of wysdome, and my hert shal muse of vnderstandinge. I wil encline myne eare to the parable, & shewe my darcke speach vpon the harpe. Wherefore shulde I feare the euell dayes, whē the wickednesse of my heles cōpaseth me rounde aboute? They that put their trust in their good, & boost them selues in the multitude of their riches. No man maye deliuer his brother, ner make agreement for him vnto God.

^b For it costeth more to redeme their soules, so that he must let that alone for euer. Yee though he lyue lōge, & se not y^e graue. For it shal be sene, y^e soch wyse mē shal dye & perishe together, as well as the ignoraunt and foolish, & leaue their goodes for other. Loke what is in their houses, it cōtinueth still: their dwellinge places endure from one generacion to another, & are called after their owne names vpon the earth. Neuerthelesse mā abyedeth not in soch honoure; but is cōpared vnto y^e brute beastes, & becōmeth like vnto thē.

This waie of theirs is very foolishnesse, & yet their posterite prayse it with their mouth.

^c Sela. They lye in the hell like shepe, death shal gnawe vpon them, & the righteous shal haue dominacion of them in the mornyng by tymes: their strēth shal consumē, & hell shal be their dwellinge. But God shal deliuer my soule from the power of hell, when he receaueth me. Sela. O be not thou afayed, whan one is made riche, & the glory of his house increased. For he shal cary nothinge awaye with him when he dyeth, nether shal his pompe folowe him. Whyle he lyueth, he is counted an happie man: & so lōge as he is in prosperite, mē speake good of him. But whē he foloweth his fathers generacion, he shal neuer se light eny more.

When a man is in honoure and hath no vnderstōdinge, he is compared vnto the brute beastes, and becommeth like vnto them.

^a THE LORDE euen the mightie God hath spokē, & called the worlde from the rysinge vp of the sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. Out of Sion apareth the glorious beutie of God. Oure God shal come, and not kepe sylence: there goeth before him a consuminge fyre, and a mightie tempest rounde aboute him. He shal call the heauens from aboute, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my sayntes together vnto me, those y^e set more by the couenaunt then by eny offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his righteousness, for God is iudge himself.

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reprove the not because of thy sacrifice, thy burntofferings are allwaie before me. I wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner gotes out of thy foldes. For all the beestes of the felde are myne, and thousandes of catell vpon the hilles.

HAUE mercy vpon me (o God) after thy goodnes, & accordinge vnto thy greate mercies, do awaye myne offences.

Wash me well from my wickednesse, & cleanse me from my synne.^a For I knowlege my fautes, and my synne is euer before me.

Agaynst the only, agaynst the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight: that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges,^b and shuldest ouer come when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the treuth, and hast shewed me secrete wysdome. ^cO reconcile me with Isope, and I shal be cleane: wash thou me, and I shalbe whyter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face from my synnes, and put out all my mysdedes. ^dMake me a cleane hert (o God) and renue a right sprete within me. Cast me not awaie from thy presence, and take not thy holy sprete from me. ^eO geue me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and establish me with thy fre sprete. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be conuerted vnto the. Delyuer me from bloudegyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy rightuousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

^fFor yf thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde geue it the: but thou delytest not in burntofferynges. The sacrifice of God is a troubled sprete, ^ga broken and a cōtrite hert (o God) shalt thou not despise. O be fauorable and gracious vnto Sion, that the walles of Ierusalem maye be buylded. For then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifice of rightuousnesse,^h with the burntofferynges and oblations: then shal they laye bullockes vpon thine altier.

The li. A psalme of Dauid.

WHY boastest thou thy self (thou Ty-raunt) that thou canst do myschefe? Where as the goodnesse of God endureth yet daylie. Thy tonge ymagineth wickednesse, and with lyes it cutteth like a sharpe rasoure. Thou louest vngraciousnesse more the good, to talke of lyes more then rightuousnesse. Sela. Thou louest to speake all wordes ⁱy maye do hurte, O thou false tōge. Therefore shal God cleane destroye the, smyte the in peces, plucke the out of thy dwellinge, and rote the out of the londe of the lyuinge. Sela.

The rightuous shal se this, & feare, and laugh him to scorne. ^kLo, this is the mā, ^ly toke not God for his strēth, but trusted vnto the multitude of his riches, & was mightie in his wickednesse. As for me, I am like a grene olyue tre in ^my house of God: my trust is in the tender mercy of God for euer & euer.

How cā they haue vnderstandinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bred, & call not vpon God? They are afayed, where no feare is: for God breaketh the bones of them that besege the: thou puttest them to confusion, for God despiseth them. The liiiij. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE my prayer (o God) and hyde not thy self fro my petition. Take hede vnto me and heare me, how piteously I mourne & cōplayne. The enemy crieth so, & the vngodly commeth on so fast: for they are mynded to do me some myschefe, so maliciously they set agaynst me. My herte is heuy within me, and the feare of death is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible drede hath ouerwhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a doue, that I might fle somewhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderness. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroie their tonges (o LORDE) and deuyde them, "for I se vnrightuousnes & strife in y cite. This goeth daye and night aboute the walles, myschefe and vyce are in the myddest of it.

Wickednesse is therin, disceate and gyle go not out of hir stretes. Yf it were myne enemye that reuyled me, I coude beare it: or yf one that ought me euell will dyd threaten me, I wolde hyde myself from him. "Let death come hastily vpon them, and let them go downe quick in to hell, for wickednes is amonge them in their dwellings.

As for me, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shall helpe me. In the eueninge, mornyng and at noone daye wil I mourne Neuerthelesse, whē I am afraied, I put my trust in the. I wil comforte my self in Gods worde, yee I wil hope in God, and not feare: What can flesh then do vnto me?

They vexē me daylie in my wordes: all y they ymagin, is to do me euell. They holde altogether, & kepe them selues close: they marck my steppes, how they maye catch my soule. But in vayne, for it shal escape the: and why? thou (o God) in thy displeasure shalt cast downe soch people. A BE mercifull vnto me (o God) be mercifull vnto me, for my soule trusteth in y: ^a ⁊ vnder the shadowe of thy wynges shal be my refuge, vntill wickednesse be ouerpast.

I call vnto God y most hyest, euē y God y shal helpe me vp agayne. He shal sende frō heauen, ⁊ saue me frō the reprofe of him that wolde swalowe me vp. Sela.

This shal God sende, for his mercy and faithfulness sake. I lye with my soule amonge the cruell lyons: euen amonge the children of men, whose tethe are speares and arowes, and their tonge a sharpe swerde.

B Set vp thy self (o God) aboute the heauē, and thy glory aboute all the earth. They haue layed a nett for my fete, ⁊ pressed downe my soule: they haue dygged a pyt before me, and are fallen in to it them selues.

Sela. ^a My hert is ready (o God) my hert is ready, to synge and geue prayse. Awake (o my glory) awake lute and harpe, I my self wil awake right early. A Yf youre myndes be vpon rightuousnesse in dede, then iudge the thinge that is right, o ye sonnes of men. But ye ymagin myschefe in youre hertes, and youre hondes deale with wickednesse. The vngodly are frowarde, euē from their mothers wombe: as soone as they be borne, they go astraie ⁊ speake lyes. Breake their teth (o God) in their mouthes, smyte the chaff bones of the lyons whelpes in sonder, o LORDE.

B That they maye fall awaye, like water y runneth a pace: and that when they shote their arowes, they maye be brokē. Let thē cōsume awaye like a snale, ⁊ like the vntymely frute of a woman, and let them not se

Or euer youre thornes be sharpe, the wrath shal take them awaye quicke, like a stormy wynde. ^a The rightuous shal reioyce when he seyth the vengeance, and shal wash his fete in the bloude of the vngodly. So that men shal saye: verely, there is a rewarde for y rightuous: doutles, there is a God that iudgeth the earth.

Beholde, they B speake (agaynst me) with their mouth, swerdes are vnder their lippes, for who reproueth thē? ^a But thou (o LORDE) shalt haue them in derision, thou shalt laugh all Heithē to scorne. My strēth do I ascrybe vnto the, for thou (o God) art my defender. God sheweth me his goodnesse plenteously, God letteth me se my desyre vpō myne enemies. Slaye thē not, lest my people forget it: but scatre thē abroad with thy power ⁊ put thē downe, o LORDE oure defence. For y synne of their mouth, for the wordes of their lippes, ⁊ because of their pryde, let thē be taken: ⁊ why? their preachinge is of cursynge ⁊ lyes. A GOD, thou \hat{y} hast cast vs out and scatred vs abroad, thou \hat{y} hast bene so sore displeased at vs, cōforte vs agayne. Galaad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strength of my heade, Iuda is my captayne. Moab is my washpote, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who wil lede me in to the stronge cite? Who wil bringe me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it, o God, thou \hat{y} hast cast vs out: ^cthou God, \hat{y} wentest not out with our hoostes? Blessed be the LORDE God, euen the God of Israel, which only doth wōderous thinges. And blessed be the name of his maiesty for euer, and all londes be fulfilled with his glory. Amen, Amen.

inges had wel nye slipte. And why? I was greued at ^aſ wicked, to se the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they played like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puſt vp in pryde, & ouerwhelmed with cruelte and vnrihtuousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, & their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therefore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auauntage. ^bTush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it? is there knowlege in the most hyst? Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospeire in the worlde, these haue riches in possession. Shulde I then cense my hert in wayne (thought I) ^c & wash my hondes in innocency? Wherefore shulde I be then punyshed daylie, & be chastened euery mornynge? Yee I had almost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thought I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I wete in to ^dſ Sanctuary of God, & considered the ende of these men. Thus my hert was greued, & it wente euen thorow my reynes.

The lxxij. A psalme of Asaph

O GOD, wherefore doest thou cast vs so cleane awaye? why is thy wrath so hate agaynst ^aſ shepe of thy pasture? O thynke vpon thy congregacion, whom thou hast purchased frō the begynnyng: the staff of thine inheritaunce, whom thou hast redemed, euen this hill of Sion wherin thou dwellest. The lxxvij. A psalme of Asaph.

HEARE my lawe (o my people) encline your eares vnto γ wordes of my mouth. ^aI wil open my mouth in parables, and speake of thinges of olde. Which we haue herde and knowne, and such as oure fathers haue tolde vs. That we shulde not hyde them from the children of the generacions to come: but to shewe the honoure of the LORDE, his might and wonderfull workes that he hath done. He made a couenaunt with Iacob, ^band gaue Israel a lawe, which he comaunded oure forefathers to teach their children. That their posterite might knowe it, and the children which were yet vnborne.

To the intent γ when they came vp, they might shewe their children the same. That they also might put their trust in God, τ not to forget what he had done, but to kepe his comaundementes. ^cAnd not to be as their forefathers, a frowarde and ouerthwarte generacion, a generacion that set not their herte a right, and whose sprete was not true towarde God. Like as the children of Ephraim, which beyng harnesssed and cariege bowes, turned them selues backe in the tyme of battayll. They kepte not the couenaunt of God, τ wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgat what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Maruelous thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egipte, euen in the felde of Zoan. ^dHe deuoyd the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. ^eIn the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloaued the hard rockes in the wilderness, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the greate deapth. He brought waters out of the stony rocke, so that they gushed out like the ryuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hiest in the wilderness. They tempted God in their hertes, and required meate for their lust. ^fFor they spake agaynst God and sayde: Yee yee, God shal prepare a table in the wyldernes, shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, that the watery streames gushed out, and the streames flowed withall: but how can he geue bred and prouyde flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth: so the fyre was kyndled in Iacob, and heuy displeasure agaynst Israel.

Because they beleued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he comaunded the cloudes aboue, and opened the dores of heauen. ^gHe rayned downe Manna vpon them for to eate, and gaue them bred from heauen. Then ate they angels fode, for he sent them meate ynough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. ^hHe made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and fethered foules like the sonde of γ see. He let it fall amoge their tētes roude aboute their habitaciōs. So they ate τ were fylled, for he gaue them their owne desyre. ⁱThey were not dyspoyned of their lust.

But whyle γ meate was yet in their mouthes: The heuy wrath of God came vpon the, slewe γ welthiest of the, τ smote downe γ chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, ^kand beleued not his woderous workes. Therefore their dayes were consumed in vanite, and sodenly their yeares were gone. When he slewe them, they sought him, and turned them early vnto God.

They thought then that God was their socoure, and that the hye God was their redeemer. Neuerthelesse, they dyd but flater him in their mouthes, and dissembled with him in their tonges. For their herte was not whole with him, nether continued they in his couenaunt. But he was so mercifull, that he forgave their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yee many a tyme turned he his wrath awaye, and wolde not suffre his whole displeasure to aryse. ^lFor he considered γ they were but flesh: euen a wynde that passeth awaye, and commeth not agayne. O how oft haue they greued him in the wilderness? How many a tyme haue they prouoked him in the deserte? They turned backe τ tempted God,

E and mouded the holy one in Israel. They thought not of his hūde, in \hat{y} daye when he delyuered them from the hande of \hat{y} enemye. How he had wrought his miracles in Egipte, and his wōders in the londe of Zoan. How he turned their waters in to bloude, so that they might not drynke of the ryuers.^a How he sent lyse amonge them, to eate them vp, and frogges to destroye them. How he gaue their frutes vnto the catirpiller, and their labour vnto the greshopper. ^bHow he bett downe their vynyards with hayle stones, and their Molbery trees with the frost. How he smote their catell with haylestones, and their flockes with hote thōder boltes. How he sent vpon them \hat{y} furiousnesse of his wrath, anger & displeasure: with trouble and fallinge in of euell angels. ^cWhen he made a waye to his fearfull indignaciō, and spared not their soules from death, yee and gaue their catell ouer to the pestilence. ^dWhen he smote all the firstborne in Egipte, the most principall and mightiest in \hat{y} dwellinges of Ham.

F But as for his owne people, he led them forth like shepe, and caried them in the wyl-dernesse like a flocke. He brought them out safely, that they shulde not feare, and ouerwhelmed their enemies with the see. He caried them vnto the borders of his Sanctuary: euen in to this hill, which he purchased with his right hande. ^eHe dyd cast out the Heithen before them, caused their londe to be deuoyded amonge them for an heretage, and made \hat{y} tribes of Israel to dwell in their tētes. For all this they tempted and displeased the most hye God, and kepte not his couenaunt. But turned their backes and fell awaye like their forefathers, startinge asyde like a broken bowe. And so they greued him with their hie places, & prouoked him with their ymages. When God herde this, he was wroth, and toke sore displeasure at Israel. ^fSo that he forsoke the tabernacle in Silo, euen his habitacion wherin he dwelt amonge men. ^gHe delyuered their power in to captiuyte, and their glory in to the enemies hōde. He gaue his people ouer in to the swerde, for he was wroth with his heretage.

The fyre consumed their yonge men, and their maydēs were not geuen to mariage.

Their prestes were slayne with the swerde, and there were no wyddowes to make lamentacion. So the LORDE awaked as one out of slepe, and like a giaunte refreshed with wyne. ^hHe smote his enemies in \hat{y} hynder partes, and put them to a perpetuall shame. He refused the tabernacle of Ioseph, and chose not the trybe of Ephraim. Neuerthelesse, he chose \hat{y} trybe of Iuda, eue the hill of Sion which he loued. ⁱAnd there he buylded his temple on hye, and layed \hat{y} foundation of it like \hat{y} grounde, that it might perpetually endure. ^jHe chose Dauid also his seruauēt, and toke him awaye from the shepe foldes. As he was followinge the yowes greate with yonge, he toke him, that he might fede Iacob his people, and Israel his inheritaunce. So he fed them with a faithfull and true hert, and ruled them with all \hat{y} diligence of his power.

 For lo, thy enemies make a murmuringe, put out of remembrance. For they haue cast their heades together with one consent, & are cōfederate agaynst the. The tabernacles of Hagarenes. Gebal, Ammon and Amalech:

 the Philistynes with them that dwell at Tyre.
 Assur also is ioyned vnto thē & helpe the

But do thou to them as vnto the Madian-ites, vnto Sisera and vnto Iabin by y^e broke of Cyson. Which perished at Endor, & became as the dōge of y^e earth. Make their prynces like Oreb and Zeeb: ^a Yee make all their prynces like as Zebea and Salmana.

Which saye: we wil haue the houses of God in possession. O my God, make them

 LORDE) y^e they maye seke thy name. Let Let thē be put to shame & perish. That they maye knowe, that thou art alone, that thy name is the LORDE, and that thou only art the most hyest ouer all the earth.

Beholde o God oure defence, loke vpon the face of thyne anoynted. For one daye in thy courte is better then a thousande: I had rather be a dore keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tentes of the vngodly. For the LORDE God is a light and defence, the LORDE wil geue grace &

The lxxxiij. A psalme of the children of Corah.

LORDE, thou barest a loue vnto thy captiuyte of Iacob. Thou diddest forgeue the offence of thy people,^a and couerdest all their synnes. Sela.

Thou tokest awaye all thy displeasure, & turnedest thy self from thy wrothful indignation. Turne vs then (o God oure Sauoure) & let thine anger cease from vs. Wilt thou be displeased at vs for euer? wilt thou stretch out thy wrath from one generacion to another?
 Wilt thou not turne agayne, & quyen vs, that thy people maye reioyse in the?

I wil herken what the LORDE God wil saie, for he shal speake peace vnto his people and to his sayntes, that they turne not them selues vnto foolishnes. For his saluacion is nye them that feare him, so that glory shal dwell in oure londe. Mercy and trueth are met together, rightuousnesse and peace kysse and rightuousnesse shal loke downe from

BOWE downe thine eare (o LORDE) and heare me, for I am cōfortles and poore. O kepe my soule, for I am holy: my God, helpe thy seruauant that putteth his trust in the. Be mercifull vnto me (o LORDE) for I call daylie vpon the. Cōforte the soule of thy seruauant, for vnto the (o LORDE) do I lift vp my soule. Geue eare LORDE vnto my prayer, and pondre my humble desyre. In the tyme of my trouble I call vpon the, for thou hearest me. Amonge the goddes there is none like the o LORDE, there is not one that cā do as thou doest. All nacions whom thou hast made, shall come and worshipec before the o LORDE, and shal glorifie thy name. For thou art greate, thou doest wonderous thinges, thou art God alone. Lede me in thy waye (o LORDE) that I maye walke in thy trueth: O let my hert delyte in fearynge thy name. I thanke the o LORDE my God, & wil prayse thy name for euer. For greate is thy mercy toward me, "thou hast deluyered my soule from y nethermost hell. O God, the proude are rysen agaynst me, and the cōgregation of y mightie seketh after my soule, & set not y before their eyes. The lxxviij. A psalme of the children of Corah.

O LORDE God my Sauyoure, I crie daye & night before the: Oh let my prayer entre in to thy presence, encline thine eare vnto my callynge. For my soule is full of trouble, & my life draweth nye vnto hell. I am cōtēd as one of thē that go downe vnto the pytte, I am euē as a mā that hath no strēgh. Fre amōge the deed, like vnto thē y lye in the graue, which be out of remembraūce, and are cutt awaye from thy honde. Thou hast layed me in the lowest pytte, in y darknesse and in the depe. Thy indignacion lieth hard vpon me, and thou vexest me with all thy floudes. Sela. Thou hast put awaye myne acquātaunce farre fro me, & made me to be abhorred of them: I am so fast in preson, that I can not get forth.

My sight fayleth for very trouble: LORDE, I call daylie vpō the, and stretch out my hondes vnto the. "Doest thou shewe wonders amonge the deed? Can the physiciās rayse them vp agayne, that they maye prayse the? "Maye thy louynge kyndnes be shewed in the graue, or thy faithfulnesse in destruccion? Maye thy wonderous workes be knowne in the darcke, or thy righteousnes in the londe where all thinges are forgottē?

Vnto the I crie (o LORDE) and early cōmeth my prayer before the. LORDE, why putttest thou awaye my soule? Wherefore hydest thou thy face fro me? My strength is gone for very sorrow and misery, with fearfulness do I beare thy burthens. Thy wrothfull displeasure goeth ouer me, the feare of the oppresseth me. For who is he amonge the cloudes, that maye be cōpared vnto the LORDE? ^a Yee what is he amonge the goddes, that is like vnto the LORDE? God is greatly to be feared in the councell of the sayntes, & to be had in reuerence of all the that are aboute him. O LORDE God of hostes, who is like vnto the in power? thy trueth is rounde aboute the. ^a Thou rulest the pryde of the see, thou stillest the waves therof, whē they arise. Thou breakest the proude, like one that is wounded, thou scatrest thine enemies abroad with thy mightie arme. The heauens are thine, the earth is thine: thou hast layed the foundaciō of the roude worlde and all that therein is. Thou hast made the north and the south, Tabor and Hermon shal reioyse in thy name. Thou hast a mightie arme, stronge is thy hande, and hye is thy right hande. Rightuousnes and equite is the habitation of thy seate, mercy and trueth go before thy face. Blessed is the people (o LORDE) that can reioyse in the, and walketh in the light of thy countenance. ^c Their delite is in thy name all the daye longe, and thorow thy rightuousnesse they shalbe exalted. For thou art the glory of their strength, & thorow thy fauoure shalt thou lift vp oure hornes. ^a The LORDE is oure defence, and the holy one of Israel is oure kynge. Thou spakest somtyme in visiōs vnto thy sayntes, and saydest: I haue layed helpe vpon one that is mightie, I haue exalted one chosen out of the people. ^a I haue founde Dauid my seruaunt, with my holy oyle haue I anoynted him. My honde shal holde him fast, and my arme shal strength him. The enemye shal not ouercome him, and the sonne of wickednesse shal not hurte him. I shal

My trueth also & my mercy shalbe with him, and in my name shal his horne be exalted. ^d I wil set his honde in the see,^e and his right honde in the floudes. He shal call me: thou art my father, my God, and the strength of my saluacion. And I wil make him my first-borne, hyer then the kinges of the earth.

My mercy wil I kepe for him for euermore, and my couenaunt shall stonde fast with him. His sede wil I make to endure for euer, yee and his Trone as the dayes of heauen. ^a But yf his childre forsake my lawe, and walke not in my iudgmentes. Yf they breake myne ordinaunces, and kepe not my commaundementes. I wil vyset their offences with the rodde, and their synnes with scourges. Neuerthelesse, my louynge kyndnesse wil I not vtterly take from him, ner suffre my trueth to fayle. My couenaunt wil I not breake, ner disanulle the thinge [†] is gone out of my lippes. I haue sworn once by my holynesse, that I wil not fayle Dauid. His sede shal endure for euer, and his seate also like as the Sonne before me. ^a He shal stonde fast for euermore as the Moone, and as the faithfull witnesse in heauen.

^e Sela. But now thou forsakest and abhorrest thyne anoynted, and art displeased at him. Thou hast turned backe the couenaunt of thy seruaunt, and cast his crowne to the grounde. Thou hast ouer throwne all his hedges,^a and brokē downe his stronge holdes. Al they that go by, spoyle him, he is become a rebuke vnto his neighbours. Thou settest vp the right hāde of his enemies, and makest all his aduersaries to reioyse. Thou hast taken awaye the strength of his swerde, and geuest him not victory in the battayll. Thou hast put out his glory, and cast his Trone downe to the grounde. The dayes of his youth hast thou shortened, and couered him with dishonoure. Sela.

A prayer of Moses the man of God.

^a LORDE, thou art oure refuge from one generacion to another. Before the mountaynes were brought forth, or euer the earth & the worlde were made, thou art God from euerlastinge and worlde with out ende. Thou turnest man to destruccion, Agayne, thou sayest: come agayne ye children of men. ^bFor a thousande yeares in thy sight are but as yesterdaye that is past, and like as it were a night watch.

^b As soone as thou scatrest them, they are euen as a slepe, and fade awaye sodenly like the grasse. ^cIn the mornynge it is grene and groweth vp, but in the euenynge it is cutt downe and wythered. For we come awaye in thy displeasure, and are asfrayed at thy wrothfull indignacion. Thou settest oure miszdedes before the, and oure secrete synnes in the light of thy countenance. For when thou art angrie, all oure dayes are gone, we brynge oure yeares to an ende, as it were a taylor that is tolde. The dayes of oure age are iij. score yeares & ten: & though men be so stronge that they come to iiij. score yeares, yet is their strength then but labour and sorowe: so soone passeth it awaye, & we are gone. But who regardeth the power of thy wrath, thy fearfull & terrible displeasure? ^cO teach vs to nombre oure dayes, that we maye applie ^doure hertes vnto wysdome.

Turne the agayne (o LORDE) at the last, and be gracious vnto thy seruantes. O satisfie vs with thy mercy, and that soone: so shal we reioyse and be glad all the dayes of oure life. Comforte vs agayne, now after the tyme that thou hast plagued vs, and for the yeares wherin we haue suffred aduersite.

Shewe thy seruantes thy worke, & their children thy glory. And the glorious maiesty of the LORDE oure God be vpon vs: O prospere thou the worke of oure hondes vpon vs, o prospere thou oure honyd worke.

He shal couer the vnder his wynges, that thou mayest be safe vnder his fethers: his faithfulnesse and trueth shal be thy shyld and buckler. So ſ̄ thou shalt not nede to be afrayed for eny bugges by night, ner for arowe that flyeth by daye.

^b For the pestilēce that creepeth in ſ̄ darcknesse, ner for the sicknesse ſ̄ destroyeth in the noone daye. A thousande shal fall besyde the, and tēn thousande at thy right honde, but it shal not come nye the. Yee with thynne eyes shalt thou beholde, and se the rewarde of the vngodly. For thou LORDE art my hope, thou hast set thy house of defence very hye. There shal no euell happen vnto the, nether shal eny plage come nye thy dwellinge. ^cFor he shall geue his angels charge ouer the, to kepe the in all thy wayes.

They shal beare the in their hondes, that thou hurte not thy fote agaynst a stone.

Thou shalt go vpō the Lyon and Adder, the yonge Lyon and the Dragon shalt thou treade vnder thy fete. Because he hath set his loue vpon me, I shal delyuer him: I shal defende him, for he hath knowne my name.

^dWhen he calleth vpon me, I shall heare him: yee I am with him in his trouble, wherout I wil delyuer him, and brynge him to honoure. With lōge life wil I satisfie him, & shewe him my saluacion.

O SYNGE vnto the LORDE a new A songe, ^m for he hath done maruelous thinges. With his owne right honde and with his holy arme hath he gotten the victory. The LORDE hath declared his sauynge health, and his rightuousnes hath he openly shewed in the sight of the Heithē.

ⁿ He hath remembered his mercy and trueth towarde the house of Israel: so that all the endes of the worlde se the sauynge health of oure God. Shewe youre self ioyfull vnto the LORDE all ye londes, synge, reioyse and geue thanks. ^p Prayse the LORDE vpon the harpe, synge to the harpe with a psalme of thankesgeynge. The xxiiij. Psalmc.

A THE LORDE is kynge, be the people neuer so vnpatient: he sytteth vpon the Cherubins, be the earth neuer so vnquiete. The LORDE is greate in Sion, & hye aboue all people. O let men geue thākes vnto thy greate & wonderful name, for it is holy. The kynges power loueth iudgment, thou preparest equite, thou executest iudgmēt & rightuousnes in Iacob. ^aO magnifie the LORDE oure God, fall downe before his fote stole, for he is holy. Moses & Aaron amonge his prestes, & Samuel amonge such as call vpō his name: these called vpon the LORDE, & he herde thē. ^bHe spake vnto thē out of the cloudy piler, for they kepte his testimonies, & the lawe that he gaue them.

Thou herdest thē (o LORDE oure God) thou forgauest thē o God, & punyshedst their owne inuencions. O magnifie the LORDE oure God, and worshipec him vpō his holy hill, for the LORDE oure God is holy.

The xxiij. Psalmc.

A O BE ioyfull in God^d (all ye lōdes) serue the LORDE with gladnes, come before his presence with ioye. Be ye sure, ^ethe LORDE he is God: It is he ^fthat hath made vs, & not we oure selues: we are but his people, & the shepe of his pasture. O go youre waye in to his gates thē with thankesgeuyng, & in to his courtes with prayse: be thāktfull vnto him, & speake good of his name. ^gFor the LORDE is gracious, his mercy is euerlasting, and his truth endureth from generation to generation.

The c. Psalmc. A thākesgeuyng of Dauid.

A MY songe shalbe of mercy and iudgment, yee vnto the^h (o LORDE) wil I synge. O let me haue vnderstandinge in the waye of godlynesse, vntill the tyme that thou come vnto me: & so shal I walke in my house with an innocent herte. I wil take no wicked thinge in honde, I hate the synne of vnfaithfulnesse, it shal not cleue vnto me. A forward herte shal departe from me, I wil not knowe a wicked personne.

Who so preuely slaundreth his neyghboure, him wil I destroye: Who so hath a proude loke & an hye stomacke, I maye not awaye with him. Myne eyes shal loke for such as be faithfull in the londe, ⁱthey maye dwell with me: and who so ledeth a godly life, shal be my seruauant. There shall no disceatfull personne dwell in my house, he that telleth lyes shal not tary in my sight. I shal soone destroye all the vngodly of the londe, that all wicked doers maye be roted out of the cite of the LORDE.

The ci. Psalmc.

HEARE my prayer^k (o LORDE) and let A my crye come vnto the. Hyde not thy face from me in the tyme of my trouble: enclyne thine eares vnto me when I call, O heare me, and that right soone. For my dayes are consumed awaye like smoke, & my bones are brent vp as it were a fyre brande.

My hert is smytte downe and wythered like grasse, so that I forget to eate my bred.

^lFor the voyce of my gronyng, my bone wil scarce cleue to my flesh. I am become like a Pellicane in the wildernes, and like an Oule in a broken wall. I wake, and am euen B as it were a sparow sittinge alone vpon the house toppe. Myne enemies reuyle me all the daye longe, they laugh me to scorne, and are sworne together against me. I eate ashes with my bred, and mengle my drynke with wepyng. And that because of thy indignacion and wrath, for thou hast taken me vp, and cast me awaye. My dayes are gone like a shadowe, and I am wythered like grasse. But thou (o LORDE) endurest for euer, and thy remembraunce thorow out all generacions. Arise therefore and haue mercy vpon Sion, ^mfor it is tyme to haue mercy vpon her, yee the tyme is come. And whyⁿ thy seruantes haue a loue to hir stones, & it pitieth them to se her in the dust. For He loketh downe from his Sanctuary, out of the heauen doth the LORDE beholde the earth.

That he maye heare the mournynge of soch as be in captiuyte, and delyuer the children of death. That they maie preach the name of the LORDE in Sion, and his worshippe at Ierusalem. The ciiij. A psalme of David.

PRAYSE the LORDE (o my soule) & all that is within me prayse his holy name. Prayse the LORDE o my soule, & forget not all his benefites. Which forgeueth all thy synnes, and healeth all thy infirmities. "Which saueth thy life from destruction, and crowneth the with mercy & louynge kyndnesse. Which satisfieth thy desyre with good thinges, makinge the yonge and lusty as an Aegle. The LORDE executeth rightuousnesse and iudgment, for all them y^e suffre wronge. He shewed his wayes vnto Moses, and his workes vnto the children of Israel. "The LORDE is full of compassion and mercy, longe sufferinge, and of greate goodnesse. He wil not alwaye be chydynge, nether wil he kepe his anger for euer.

He hath not dealt with vs after oure synnes, ner rewarded vs accordinge to oure wickedneses. "For loke how hye the heauē is in comparison of the earth, so greate is his mercy also towarde them that feare him.

Loke how wyde the east is from the west, so farre hath he set oure synnes from vs.

Yee like as a father pitieth his owne children, euen so is the LORDE mercifull vnto the that feare him. "For he knoweth wherof we be made, he remembreth that we are but dust. That a man in his tyme is but as is grasse, & flourisheth as a floure of the felde.

For as soone as the wynde goeth ouer it, it is gone, and the place therof knoweth it nomore. But the mercifull goodnesse of y^e LORDE endureth for euer and euer, "vpon them y^e feare him, and his rightuousnesse vpon their childers children. Soch as kepe his couenaunt, and thinke vpon his commaundementes to do them. The LORDE hath prepared his seate in heauē, and his kyngdome ruleth ouer all. O prayse the LORDE ye angels of his, ye that be mightie in strēth, fulfillingge his commaundement, that mē maye heare the voyce of his wordes. These dyd his tokens amoge them, and wonders in the londe of Ham. b He sent darcknesse and it was darcke, for they were not obedient vnto his worde.

f He turned their waters in to bloude, and slewe their fishe. Their londe brought forth frogges, f yee euen in their kynges chambers. O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for a he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. b Who can expresse f noble actes of the LORDE, or shewe forth all his prayse? That we might se the pleasure of thy chosen, that we might reioyse in the gladnesse of thy people, and geue thanks with thine enheritaunce. b We haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Oure fathers regarded not thy wonders in Egipte, they kepte not thy greate goodnesse in remēbraunce: but were dishobediēt at the see, euē at the reed see. Neuertheles, he helped the for his names sake, that he might make his power to be knowne. He rebuked the reed see, and it was dried vp: b so he led the thorow the depe as in a wilderness. As for those f troubled them, the waters ouerwhelmed the, there was not one of the left. b Then beleued they in his worde, and songe prayse vnto him. A frutefull londe maketh he baren, for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein. Agayne, he maketh the wildernes a stondeinge water, and water sprynges of a drye ground. There he setteth the hongrie, that they maye buylde them a cite to dwell in. That they maye sowe their grōude, plante vnyardes, to yelde them frutes of increase. He blesseth them, so that they multiplie exceedingly, and suffreth not their cattell to decrease. Whē they are minished & brought lowe thorow oppressiō, thorow eny plage or trouble. Though he suffre thē to be euell intreated thorow tyrautes, or let them wandre out of the waye in the wilderness: Yet helpeth he the poore out of misery (at the last) and maketh him an housholde like a flocke of shepe. The righteous wil cōsidre this and reioyse, the mouth of all wickednesse shall be stopped. Who so is wyse, and pondreth these things well, shall vnderstonde the louynge kyndnesses of the LORDE.

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

O GOD, my hert is ready to synge, & to geue prayse. ^aAwake (o my glory) awake lute & harpe, I my self wil awake right early. I wil geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) amonge the people, I wil synge prayses vnto the amonge the Heithē.

^bFor the greatnesse of thy mercy is higher then the heauens, and thy faithfulness reacheth vnto the cloudes. Set vp thy self (o God) aboue the heauē, & thy glory aboue all the earth. That thy beloued maye be deluyered: helpe then with thy right hande, & heare me. God hath spoken in his Sanctuary^c (which thinge reioyseth me.) I will deuyde Sichem, and mete out the valley of Suchoth. Galaad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strēth of my heade, Iuda is my captaine. Moab is my wash potte, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who wil lede me in to the stronge cite? Who wil brynge me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it (o God) which hast cast vs out: thou God, ^dthou wentest not forth with oure hoostes? O be thou oure helpe in trouble, for vayne is the helpe of man. Thorow God we shall do greate actes, for it is he ^ethou shalt treade downe oure enemies.

HOLDE not thy tōge, o God of my prayse. ^aFor the mouth of the vngodly, yee and the mouth of the disceatfull is opened vpon me, and speake agaynst me with false tōges. They compase me aboute with wordes of hatred, & fight agaynst me without a cause. For the loue that I had vnto them, they take now my contrary parte, but I geue myself vnto prayer.

Thus they rewarde me euell for good, & hatred for my good will. ^bSet an vngodly man to be ruler ouer him, & let Satan stonde at his right hande. Let them be allwaye before the LORDE, but as for the memoriall of them selues, let it perish from out of the earth. And that because his mynde was not to do good, but persecuted the poore helplesse, and him that was vexed at the herte, to slaye him. His delite was in cursynge, and therefore shall it happē vnto him: he loued not blessinge, and that shall be farre frō him. He clothed him self with cursynge like as with a rayment: yee it wente in to his bowels like water, and like oyle in to his bones. Let it be vnto him as the cloke that he hath vpon him, and as the gyrdle that he is gyrded withall. Let it thus happen from the LORDE vnto myne enemies, and to those that speake euell agaynst my soule. But deale thou with me (o LORDE God) acordinge vnto thy name, for swete is thy mercy. O delyuer me, for I am helplesse & poore, & my herte is wounded within me. I go hence like ŷ shadowe that departeth, and am dryuen awaye as ŷ greshoppers. My knees are weake thorow fastinge, my flesh is dried vp for want of fatnesse. I am become a rebuke vnto them, they loke vpō me^a and shake their heades. Helpe me o LORDE my God, oh saue me for thy mercies sake. That they maye knowe, how that this is thy hande, and that thou hast done it. Though they curse, yet blesse thou: and let them be cōfounded, that ryse vp agaynst me, but let thy seruauent reioyse. Let myne aduersaries be clothed with their owne shame, as with a cloake.

As for me, I wil geue thanks vnto the LORDE with my mouth, and prayse him amonge the multitude. ^bFor he stondest at the right hande of the poore, to saue him from such as condemne his soule.

The cix. A psalme of Dauid.

THE LORDE sayde vnto my LORDE: ^cSyt thou on my right hande, vntill I make thine enemies thy fote stole.

The LORDE shal sende the rodde of thy power out of Sion, be thou ruler euen in ŷ myddest amonge thine enemies. In the daye of thy power shal thy people offre the frewill

The LORDE vpon thy right honde, shal smyte euen kynges in the daye of his wrath. He shal be iudge amōge the Heithen, he shal fyll them with deed bodies, and smyte in sonder the heades euer dyuerse countres. The cix. Psalme. Halleluia.

IWIL geue thanks vnto the LORDE with ^emy whole herte: secretly amonge the faithfull, and in the congegacion. The workes of the LORDE are greate,^f sought out of all thē that haue pleasure therin. His worke is worthy to be prayssed and had in honoure, and his rightuousnesse endureth for euer. The mercifull & gracious LORDE hath so done his marvelous workes, ŷ they ought to be had in remēbraūce. ^gHe geueth meate vnto thē ŷ feare him, he is euer myndfull of his couenaūt.

He sheweth his people the power of his workes, that he maye geue them the heretage of the Heithen. The workes of his hōdes are verite & iudgment, all his cōmaundemētes are true. They stonde fast for euer & euer,^h & are done in trueth & equite. He sent redemption vnto his people, he hath commaunded his couenaunt for euer, holy & reuerent is his name. ⁱThe feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, a good vnderstandinge haue all they that do thereafter: the prayse of it endureth for euer.

Blessed be the name of the LORDE, frō this tyme forth for euermore. The LORDES name is worthy to be prayed, ^cfrō the rysinge vp of the Sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. The LORDE is hye aboue all Heithen, and his glory aboue the heauē. Who is like vnto the LORDE oure God, ^dꝑ hath his dwellinge so hye, which humbleth himself, to beholde that is in heauen and earth? ^eWhich taketh vp the symple out of the dust, and lifteth the poore out of the myre. That he maye set him amonge the prynces, euen amonge the prynces of his people. Which maketh the baren woman to kepe house, and to be a ioyfull mother of children. Halleluya.

The cxiij. Psalme.

A WHEN Israel came out of Egipte, & the house of Iacob ^ffrom amonge that straunge people. Iuda was his Sactuary, Israel his dominion. ^gThe see sawe that, and fled, Iordan turned backe. The mountaynes skipped like rammes, & the litle hilles like yonge shepe. What ayled the (o thou see) that thou fleddest? and thou Iordan, that thou turnedest backe? Ye mountaynes, that ye skipped like rammes? and ye litle hilles, like yonge shepe? The earth trembled at the presence of the LORDE, at the presence of the God of Iacob. ^hWhich turned the harde rocke in to a stondinge water, & the flynt stone in to a sprynginge well.

B Not vnto vs (o LORDE) not vnto vs, but vnto thy name geue the prayse, for thy louinge mercy and faithfulness. Wherefore shal the Heithen saye: ⁱwhere is now thy God?

As for oure God, he is in heauen, he doth what soeuer it pleaseth him. Their ymages are but syluer and golde, euen the worke of mens hōdes. ^jThey haue mouthes, and speake not: eyes haue they, but they se not.

They haue eares, and heare not: noses haue they, but they smell not. They haue handes and handle not, fete haue they, but they can not go, nether can they speake thorow their throte. They that made them, are like vnto them, and so are all soch as put their trust in them. But let Israel trust in ꝑ LORDE, for he is their sucoure & defence. Let the house of Aaron put their trust in ꝑ LORDE, for he is their sucoure & defence. They that feare the LORDE, let thē put their trust in the LORDE, ^kfor he is their sucoure and defence. The LORDE is mynde full of vs, & blesseth vs: he blesseth ꝑ house of Israel, he blesseth ꝑ house of Aaron. Yee he blesseth all them that feare the LORDE, both small & greate. The LORDE encrease you more & more: you, and youre childrē. For ye are ꝑ blessed of the LORDE, which made heauen & earth. All the whole heauens are the LORDES, but the earth hath he geuē vnto ꝑ childrē of men. ^lThe deed prayse not the (o LORDE) nether all they that go downe in to sylence. But we will prayse the LORDE, from this tyme forth for euermore. Halleluya.

The cxiij. Psalme.

I AM wel pleased, ꝑ the LORDE hath ^mherde ꝑ voyce of my prayer. That he hath enclyned his eare vnto me, therefore wil I call vpon him as longe as I lyue. ⁿThe snares of death copased me rounde aboute, the paynes of hell gat holde vpon me, I founde trouble and heuynesse. Then called I vpon ꝑ name of the LORDE: (o LORDE, deliuer my soule. Gracious is ꝑ LORDE & righteous, yee oure God is mercifull.

The LORDE preserueth ꝑ symple, I was brought downe, and he helped me. Turne agayne then vnto thy rest (o my soule) for the LORDE hath geuen the thy desyre.

The xrb. Psalme.

This psalme do the Hebrues ioyne vnto it that goeth before, and it is with them the cxvi. psalme.

I BELEUED, and therefore haue I spokē, but I was sore troubled. I sayde in my haist: All men are lyers.

What rewarde shal I geue vnto ȝ LORDE, for all the benefites ȝ he hath done vnto me? I wil receaue the cuppe of saluaciō, and call vpon the name of the LORDE.

I wil paye my vowes in the presence of all his people, right deare in the sight of ȝ LORDE is the death of his sayntes. O LORDE, I am thy seruauit, I am thy seruauit, and the sonne of thy handmayden, thou hast broken my bondes in sonder. I wil offre the sacrifice of thankes geuyng, and wil call vpon the name of the LORDE. I wil paye my vowes vnto the LORDE in the sight of all his people, in the courtes of the LORDES house, euē in the myddest of the, o Ierusalem. Halleluya.

The xrbj. Psalme.

O PRAYE the LORDE all ye Gentiles, laude him all ye people. For his mercifull kyndnes is euer more and more towarde vs, and the trueth of the LORDE endureth for euer. Halleluya.

The xrbij. Psalme.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. Let Israel now confesse, ȝ his mercy endureth for euer. Let the house of Aaron now confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. Yee let thē now that feare the LORDE, confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. I called vpon the LORDE in trouble, and the LORDE herde me at large. The LORDE is my helper, I wil not feare what man doeth vnto me. The LORDE is my helper, and I shal se my desyre vpon myne enemies. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put any confidence in man. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put eny confidēce in prynces. All Heithen compassed me rounde aboute, but in the name of the LORDE wil I destroye thē.

They kepte me in on euery syde, but in the name of the LORDE, I wil destroye them.

They came aboute me like bees, and were as hote as the fyre in the thornes, but in the name of the LORDE I wil destroye them.

They thrust at me, that I might fall, but the LORDE was my helpe. The LORDE is my strength, and my songe, and is become my saluacion. The voyce of ioye and myrth is in the dwellynges of ȝ rightuous, for ȝ right hande of the LORDE hath gottē the victory.

The right hande of the LORDE hath the preemynence, the right hāde of the LORDE hath gottē the victory. I wil not dye, but lyue, and declare the workes of the LORDE.

The LORDE hath chastened and correcte me, but he hath not geuen me ouer vnto death.

Open me the gates of rightuousnes, ȝ I maye go in there thorow, and geue thākes vnto the LORDE. This is the dore of the LORDE, the rightuous shall entre in thorow it.

I thanke the, ȝ thou hast herde me, and art become my saluaciō. The same stone which the buylders refused, is become the heade stone in the corner. This was the LORDES doinge, and it is maruelous in oure eyes. This is the daye which the LORDE hath made, let vs reioyse and be glad in it. Helpe now o LORDE, o LORDE sende vs now prosperite.

Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the LORDE, we wish you good lucke, ye that be of the house of the LORDE. God is the LORDE, and hath shewed vs light: O garnish the solempne feast with grene braunches, euē vnto the hornes of ȝ aulter. Thou art my God, and I wil thanke the: thou art my God, and I wil prayse the. O geue thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.

Ⓢ Thy worde is a lanterne vnto my fete & a light vnto my pathes. *I haue sworne & am stedfastly purposed, to kepe the iudgmētes of thy rightuousnesse. I am troubled aboue measure, quyenke me (o LORDE) acordinge vnto thy worde. Let the frewillofferings of my mouth please the (o LORDE) & teach me thy iudgmētes. My soule is allwaye in my hōde, yet do not I forget thy lawe. The vngodly haue laied a snare for me, but yet swarue not I frō thy cōmaundemētes. Thy testimonies haue I claymed as myne heretage for euer: & why? they are the very ioye of my herte. I applye myne herte to fulfill thy statutes allwaye, euen vnto the ende.

SAMECH.

Ⓢ I hate ſ̄ vngodly, but thy lawe do I loue. Thou art my defence & shyld, my trust is in thy worde. Awaye from me ye wicked, I wil kepe the commaundementes of my God.

O stablish me acordinge vnto thy worde, ſ̄ I maye lyue, & let me not be disapoynted of my hope. Holde thou me vp, & I shall be safe: yee I shal euer be talkynge of thy statutes. Thou treadest downe all thē ſ̄ departe from thy statutes, for they ymagin but disceate. Thou putttest awaye all the vngodly of the earth like drosse, therfore I loue thy testimonies. My flesh trēbleth for feare of the, and I am afayed of thy iudgmētes.

AIN.

Ⓢ I deale with the thinge ſ̄ is laufful & right, O geue me not ouer vnto my oppressours.

Be thou suertie for thy seruaut to do him good, that the proude do me no wronge.

Myne eyes are waysted awaye with lōkyng for thy health, & for ſ̄ worde of thy rightuousnesse. O deale with thy seruaut acordinge vnto thy louynge mercy, and teach me thy statutes. I am thy seruaut, O graunte me vnderstōdinge, that I maye knowe thy testimonies. It is tyme for the (o LORDE) to laye to thine hōde, for they haue destroyed thy lawe. For I loue thy cōmaundemētes aboue golde and precious stone. Therefore holde I straight all thy commaundemētes, and all false wayes I vterly abhorre.

PE.

Thy testimonies are wonderfull, therfore doth my soule kepe them. *When thy worde goeth forth, it geueth light and vnderstōdinge, eue vnto babes. I opē my mouth & drawe in my breth, for I desyre thy commaundemētes. O loke thou vpon me, and be mercifull, as thou vvest to do vnto those ſ̄ loue thy name. Ordre my goings after thy worde, that no wickednesse raigne in me. O delyuer me from the wrōgeous dealinges of mē, and so shal I kepe thy commaundemētes. Shewe the light of thy countenance vnto thy seruaut, and lerne me thy statutes. Myne eyes gusse out with water, because men kepe not thy lawe.

ZADI.

Rightuous art thou (o LORDE) & true is thy iudgmēt. The testimonies that thou hast commauded, are excedinge rightuous and true. *My zeale hath euen consumed me, because myne enemies haue forgotten thy wordes. Thy worde is tried to the vttemost, & thy seruauante loueth it. I am small and of no reputaciō, yet do not I forget thy cōmaundementes. Thy rightuousnesse is an euerlastinge rightuousnes, and thy lawe is true. Trouble and heynesse haue takē holde vpō me, yet is my delite in thy commaundementes. The rightuousnes of thy testimonies is euerlastinge, o graunte me vnderstōdinge, and I shal lyue.

COPH.

I call with my whole herte, heare me (o LORDE) I wil kepe thy statutes. Yee euen vpō the do I call, helpe me, and I shal kepe thy testimonies. Early in ſ̄ mornynge do I crie vnto the, for in thy worde is my trust. Myne eyes preuēte ſ̄ night watches, ſ̄ I might be occupied in thy wordes. Heare my voyce (o LORDE) acordinge vnto thy louynge kyndnesse, quyenke me acordinge as thou art wōt. They drawe nye ſ̄ of malice persecute me, & are farre frō thy lawe. Be thou nye at hōde also (o LORDE) for thy promises are faithfull.

As concernynge thy testimonies, I haue knowne euer sens the begynnynge, that thou hast grounded them for euer.

Greate is thy mercy (o LORDE) quyenke me as thou art wont. Many there are that trouble me, and persecute me, yet do not I swarue frō thy testimonies. It greueth me, when I se, that the transgressours kepe not thy lawe. Considre (LORDE) how I loue thy cōmaundementes. O quyenke me with thy louinge kyndnesse. Thy worde is true from euerlastinge, all the iudgmentes of thy righteousness endure for euermore.

LORDE, I call vpon the: haist the vnto me, and consider my voyce, whē I crie vnto the. ^aLet my prayer be set forth in thy sight as the incēse, and let the liftinge vp of my hādes be an euenynge sacrifice. ^bSet a watch (o LORDE) before my mouth, yee a watch at the dore of my lippes. O let not myne hert be enclnyed to eny euell thīge, to be mynded as the vngodly or wicked men, lest I eate of soch thinges as please thē.

Their iudges stōble at the stone, yet heare they my wordes, ^cthey be ioyfull. Oure bones lye scatered before ^dfy pytt, like as when one graueth and dyggeth vp the grounde. The cxli. A psalme of Dauid.

ICRIE vnto the LORDE with my voyce, yee euē vnto the LORDE do I make my supplicacion. I poure out my complainyte before him, and shewe him of my trouble. When my sprete is in heuynesse, for thou knowest my path: in the waye where in I walke, haue they preuely layed a snare for me. I loke vpon my right honde & se, there is no man that wil knowe me. I haue no place to fle vnto, no man careth for my soule. Therefore do I crie vnto the (o LORDE) and saye: thou art my hope and my porcion, in the londe of the luyunge. Cōsidre my complainyte, for I am brought very lowe. Oh delyuer me fro my persecuters, for they are to stronge for me: Brynge my soule out of preson, that I maye geue thākes vnto thy name: which thinge yf thou wilt graūte me, then shal the rightuous resorte vnto my cōpany.

The cxliij. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE my prayer (o LORDE) considere my desyre: answer me for thy treuth & rightuousnesse sake. ^aAnd entre not in to iudgment with thy seruauent, for in thy sight shal no man luyunge be iustified. ^bFor the enemie persecuteth my soule, he smyteth my life downe to the grounde, he layeth me in the darcknesse, as the deed men of the worlde. Therefore is my sprete vexed within me, and my herte within me is desolate. Yet do I remēbre the tymes past, ^cI muse vpō all thy workes, yee I exercise my self in the workes of thy hondes. ^dI stretch forth my hondes vnto the, my soule crieth vnto the out of the thyrstie londe. Sela. Heare me (o LORDE) and that soone, for my sprete waxeth faynte: hyde not thy face fro me, lest I be like vnto thē that go downe in to the graue. Oh let me heare thy louynge kyndnesse by tymes in the mornynge, for in the is my trust: shewe thou me the waye that I shulde walke in, for I lift vp my soule vnto the. Delyuer me (o LORDE) fro myne enemies, for I resorte vnto the. ^e Teach me to do the thinge that pleaseth thee, for thou art my God: let thy louynge sprete lede me forth vnto the londe of rightuousnesse. Quycckē me (o LORDE) for thy names sake, and for thy rightuousnesse sake brynge my soule out of trouble. And of thy goodnesse scater myne enemies abroad, and destroye all them that vexe my soule, for I am thy seruauent.

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

I WIL magnifie the (o my God & kynge) I wil prayse thy name for euer & euer. Euery daye wil I geue thanks vnto the, and prayse thy name for euer and euer. Greate is the LORDE, & maruelous worthy to be prayed, there is no ende of his greatnesse. One generacion shal prayse thy workes vnto another, and declare thy power. As for me I wil be talkige of thy worshippe, thy glory, thy prayse and wōderous workes.

So that men shal speake of the might of thy maruelous actes, and tell of thy greatnes.

The memoriall of thy abundaunt kyndnes shal be shewed, and mē shal synge of thy righteousness. The LORDE is gracious and mercifull, longe sufferynge & of greate goodnesse. The LORDE is louyng vnto euery man, and his mercy is ouer all his workes. All thy workes prayse the (o LORDE) and thy sayntes geue thanks vnto the. They shewe the glory of thy kyngdome, and talke of thy power. That thy power, thy glory

The LORDE vpholdeth all such as shulde fall, and lifeth vp all those that be downe. The eyes of all wayte vpon the, and thou geuest them their meate in due season. Thou openest thine hāde, and fyllest all thynges lyuynge with plenteousnesse. The LORDE is righteous in all his wayes, & holy in all his workes. The LORDE is nye vnto all them that call vpon him, yee all such as call vpon him faithfully.

He fulfilleth the desyre of them that feare him, he heareth their crie, and helpeth them.

The LORDE preserueth all them that loue him, but scattereth abroad all the vngodly.

My mouth shal speake the prayse of the LORDE, And let all flesh geue thanks vnto his holy name for euer and euer. Halleluya.

The Prouerbes of Salomon.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The wysdome of God calleth vs by the mouth of Salomō, exorteth vs, and geueth vs warnynge to eschue the wicked: whose vngodly cōuersacion in worde and worke, and punyshment also of the same, is here describyed.

Chap. II.

How wisdom maye be gotten, and what profit commeth of it.

Chap. III.

He exorteth us to the feare of God and to pacience: he commendeth wysdome, & requyrenth us to cleue vnto the same.

Chap. IIII.

A fatherly exortacion vnto wisdom, with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the mēbres of oure body fro euell.

Chap. V.

He exorteth vnto wysdōe, and to beware of harlottes: he telleth what harme maye folowe therout, whē men medle with soch: he teacheth men, louyngly to cleue vnto their married wyues, and describeth the ende of the vngodly.

Chap. VI.

He warneth men to beware of suertishipe, exorteth the slouthfull to laboure, sheweth the wikednesse of false tonges, and requyrenth men to beware of aduoutry, because it is more perloous then theft or felony.

Chap. VII.

He exorteth vnto wisdome, sheweth the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt happeneth vnto soch as encline to the prouocacios and desyres of the flesh.

Chap. VIII.

Wysdome calleth men swetely vnto her, and telleth them what treasure and power she hath. A cōmendacion and prayse of wisdome, wherout euery mā is exorted to cleue vnto her.

Chap. IX.

Wysdome crieth vpō the ignoraūt, and promiset them greate thinges. The foolish maner of a light woman.

Chap. X.

From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are described many swete, louely and wyse sentences, which teach men wysdome and what profit commeth of it: Agayne, how men maye auoyde foolishnesse, and the hurte therof.

Chap. XXXI.

Wysdome warneth vs to beware of euell women, and describeth the cōuersacion, maner, & behaouore of an honest married wyfe.

THESE are the prouerbes of Salomon the sonne of Dauid kyng of Israel: to lerne wysdome, nurtoure, vnderstandinge, prudence, rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstandinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal cōme by more wysdome: and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstonde a parable, and the interpretacion therof: the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speaches of the same. ^aThe feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome. But fooles despyse wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

A MY sonne, heare thy fathers doctryne, and forsake not the lawe of thy mother: for that shal brynge grace vnto thy heade, & shal be a cheyne aboute thy necke. My sonne, cōsente not vnto synners,^a yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let us laye wayte for bloude, & lurke preuely for the innocēt wythout a cause: let us swalowe thē vp like fyre hell,^b let us deuoure thē quicke and whole, as those that go downe in to the pytt. So shal we fynde all maner of costly riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyle. Cast in thy lot amonge us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou with them, re-frayne thy fote frō their wayes. For their fete rūne to euell, & are haistie to shed bloude. But in vayne is fyre net layed forth before the byrdes eyes. Yee they thē selues laye wayte one for anothers bloude, and one of thē wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all soch as be couetous, that one wolde rauysh anothers life.

Wysdome crieth without,^c & putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before fyre congregation in fyre open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow fyre cite, sayenge: O ye childrē, how lōge wil ye loue childyshnesse? how longe wil fyre scorners delyte in scornynge, & fyre vnwyse be enemies vnto knowlege? O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstōde my wordes.

C Seinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: I haue stretched out my honde, and no mā regarded it, but all my cōcels haue ye despyed, and set my correcciōs at naught. Therefore shal I also laugh in youre destruccion, and mocke you, when fyre thinge that ye feare cōmeth vpon you: euen whē fyre thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in sodenly like a storme, and youre misery like a tempest: yee whā trouble and heynesse cōmeth vpon you. Then shal they call vpō me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And fyre because they hated knowlege, and receaued not fyre feare of fyre LORDE, but abhorred my counsell, and despyed my correccion. Therefore shal they eate fyre frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled with their owne counceils: for fyre turnynge awaye of fyre vnwyse shal slaye thē, & fyre prosperite of fooles shalbe their owne destrucciō. But who so harkeneth vnto me, shal dwell safely,^d and haue ynough without eny feare of euell.

The ij. Chapter.

MY sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, & kepe my cōmaudemētes by the, that thine eare maye herken vnto wysdome, applie thine herte then to vnderstōdinge. For yf thou criest after wysdome, & callest for knowlege: yf thou sekest after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: Thē shalt thou vnderstōde fyre feare of the LORDE, and fynde fyre knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geueth wysdome,^e out of his mouth commeth knowlege and vnderstōdinge. He preserueth fyre welfare of the rightuous, and defendeth them fyre walke innocently: he kepeth them in fyre right path, and preserueth fyre waye of his sayntes. Then shalt thou vnderstōde rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite, yee and euery good path. Yf wysdome entre in to thine herte, and thy soule delyte in knowlege: then shal counsell preserue the, and vnderstōdinge shal kepe the. That thou mayest be delyuered frō fyre euell waye, and from the man fyre speaketh frowarde thinges. From soch as leaue the hie strete, and walke i fyre wayes of darcknesse: which reioyse in doynge euell, and delyte i wicked thinges: whose wayes are croked, and their pathes slaundersous.

C That thou mayest be delyuered also from the straunge woman, and from her that is not thine owne: which geueth swete wordes, forsaketh the huszbande of hir youth, and forgetteth the couenaunt of hir God. For hir house is enclyned vnto death, and hir pathes vnto hell. All they that go in vnto her, come not agayne, nether take they holde of the waye of life.

That thou mayest walke in fyre good waye, and kepe the pathes of the rightuous. For the iust shal dwell in the londe, and the innocentes shal remayne in it: but the vngodly shalbe roted out of fyre londe, and the wicked doers shalbe taken out of it.

So shalt thou fynde fauoure and good vnderstandinge in y sight of God and men. Put thy trust in y LORDE with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstandinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordre thy goinges. ^aBe not wyse in thine owne conceate, but feare y LORDE and departe from euell: so shal thy nauel be whole, and thy bones stronge.

^bHonoure the LORDE with thy substance, a with y firstlinges of all thine increase: so shal thy barnes be fylled with plenteousnesse, and thy presses shal flowe ouer with swete wyne. My sonne, despyse not the chastenyng of y LORDE, nether faynte when thou art rebuked of him. For whō the LORDE loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet delyteth in him euen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wysdome, a opteyneth vnderstandinge, for the gettinge of it is better then eny marchaundise of syluer, a the profit of it is better then golde. Wysdome is more worth thē precious stones, a all y thinges y thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, a vpon hir left hande is riches a honoure.

Hir wayes are pleasaunt wayes, and all hir pathes are peaceable. She is a tre of life ^d to them that laye holde vpon her, and blessed are they that kepe her fast.

^cWith wysdome hath y LORDE layed the fōndacion of y earth, a thorow vnderstandinge hath he stablished y heauē. Thorow his wysdome y depthes breake vp, a y cloudes droppe downe the dew. My sonne, let not these thinges departe from thyne eyes, but kepe my lawe and my counsell: so shal it be life vnto thy soule, a grace vnto thy mouth.

Then shalt thou walke safely in thy waye, a thy fote shal not stamble. Yf thou slepest, thou shalt not be afrayed, ^ebut shalt take thy rest a slepe sweetly. Thou neddest not to be afrayed of eny sodane feare, nether for the violent russhinge in of the vngodly, when it commeth.

Saye not vnto thy neyghboure: go thy waye a come agayne, to morow wil I geue the: where as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neyghboure, seyng he hopeth to dwell in rest by the. Stryue not lightly with eny man, where as he hath done y no harme. ^fFolowe not a wicked man, and chose none of his wayes: for the LORDE abhorreth the frowarde, but his secrete is amonge the righteous. The curse of the LORDE is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellings of the righteous.

As for the scornefull, he shal laugh thē to scorne, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. The wyse shal haue honoure in possession, but shame is the promociō that fooles shal haue.

The iiii. Chapter.

HEARE (O ye children) the fatherly exhortaciō, a take good hede, that ye maye lerne wysdome. Yee I shal geue you a good rewarde, yf ye wil not forsake my lawe. Get the wysdome, get the vnderstandinge, forget not y wordes of my mouth, a shrēke not from them. Forsake her not, and she shal preserue the: loue her, and she shal kepe the. The chefe poynte of wysdome is, that thou be wyllynge to opteyne wysdome, and before all thy goodes to get the vnderstandynge. Make moch of her, ^hand she shal promote the: Yee yf thou embracest her, she shal brynge the vnto honoure.

She shal make the a gracious heade, and garnish the with y crowne of glory. Heare my sonne, and receaue my wordes, that the yeares of thy life maye be many. I wil shewe the y waye of wysdome, and lede the in the right pathes. So that yf thou goest therin, there shal no straytnesse hynder the: and when thou runnest, thou shalt not fall. Come not in the path of the vngodly, "and walke not in the waye of the wicked.

Eschue it, ⁊ go not therin: departe asyde, ⁊ passe ouer by it. For they can not slepe, excepte they haue first done some myschefe: nether take they eny rest, excepte they haue first done some harme. For they eate the bred of wickednesse, and drike the wyne of robbery. The path of the righteous shyneth as the light, and is euer brighter ⁊ brighter vnto the perfecte daye. But ⁊ waye of the vngodly is as the darknesse, wherin mē fall, or they be awarre.

My sonne, marcke my wordes, and enclyne thine eare vnto my saynges. Let them not departe from thine eyes, kepe them euen in the myddest of thine herte. For they are life vnto all those that finde the, and health vnto all their bodies. Kepe thine hert with all diligence, for there vpon hangeth life. Put awaye from the a frowarde mouth, and let the lippes of slaunder be farre from the. Let thine eyes beholde the thinge ⁊ is right, ⁊ let thine eye lyddes loke straight before the. Pōdre the path of thy fete, so shal all thy wayes be sure. "Turne not asyde, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte, but witholde thy fote from euell.

The 6. Chapter.

MY sonne, geue hede vnto my wysdome, ⁊ bowe thine eare vnto my prudēce: ⁊ thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe nurtoure.

For the lippes of an harlot are a droppinge hony combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at ⁊ last she is as bitter as worm-wod, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir steppes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vnstedfast are hir wayes, that thou canst not knowe them. Heare me therefore (o my sonne) and departe not frō the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye ⁊ dores of hir house. That thou geue not thine honoure vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell. That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, ⁊ that thy labours come not in a straunge house. Yee that thou mourne not at the last (when thou hast spent thy body and goodes) and then saye: Alas, why hated I nurtoure? why dyd my hert despyse correccion? Wherefore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, ⁊ hekened not vnto them that in-fourmed me? I am come almost in to all mysfortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Drinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne spriges. Let thy welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, ⁊ not straungers with the. Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louynge is the hynde, and frendly is the Roo: "let her brestes alwaye satisfie the, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another womā? For euery mā's wayes are open in the sight of the LORDE, and he pōdereth all their goings. The wickednesses of the vngodly shal catch himself, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greate foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

The vi. Chapter.

MY sōne, yf thou be suertie for thy negh-boure, ⁊ thou hast fastened thine hōde with another mā: yee thou art boude with thine owne wordes, and taken with thine owne speach. Therfore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come ī to thy neighbours daunger. Go thy waye then soone, ⁊ intreate thy neghboure: let not thyne eyes slepe, ner thine eye lyddes slomber. Sauē thy self as a doo frō ⁊ honde, ⁊ as a byrde frō the hōde of the fouler. Go to the Emmet (thou slogarde) cōside hir wayes, ⁊ lerne to be wyse. She hath no gyde, no teacher, no leder: yet in the sommer she prouideth hir meate, ⁊ gathereth hir foode together ī ⁊ haruest. How lōge wilt thou slepe, thou slogish mā? Whā wilt thou aryse out of thy slepe? There be sixe thynges, which the LORDE hateth, & the seuenth he vtterly abhorreth: ^aA proude loke, a dyssemblynge tonge, hādes that shed innocent bloude, an herte ^bȝ goeth aboute with wicked ymaginaciōs, ^cfete that be swift in rennyng to do myschefe, a false wyt-nesse ^dȝ bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amonge brethren. My sōnne, kepe thy fathers cōmaundemētes, & forsake not ^eȝ lawe of thy mother. Put thē vp together in thine herte, and bynde thē aboute thy necke. That they maye lede the where thou goest, preserue the when thou art aslepe, & ^fȝ when thou awakest, thou mayest talke of thē (^gFor the commaundement is a lanterne, and the lawe a light: yee chastenyng & nurtoure is ^hȝ waye of life) that they maye kepe the frō the euell woman, ⁱ& from the flatteryng tonge of the harlott: ^jȝ thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be takē with hir fayre lokes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bred, but a married woman wil hunt for ^kȝ precious life. Maye a man take fyre in his bosome, and his clothes not be brent? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so euer goeth in to his neighbours wife, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. ^lMen do not vtterly despyse a thefe, that stealeth to satisfie his soule, when he is hongerie: but yf he maye be gotten, he restoreth agayne seuen tymes asmoch, or els he maketh recompence with all the good of his house. But who so cōmitteth aduourtrie with a womā, he is a foole, and bryngeth his life to destruccion. He getteth him self also shame & dishonoure, soch as shal neuer be put out. For the gelousy & wrath of the mā will not be itreated, notwithstanding thou woldest ofre him greate gistes to make amendes, he will not receaue them.

For out of the wyndowe of my house I loked thorow the trelies, & behelde the simple people: & amonge other yonge folkes I spyed one yonge foole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye toward the harlottes house in the twyght of the euenyng, when it begāne now to be night and darcke. And beholde, there mett ^ehim a womā in an harlottes apparell (a disceatfull, wāton & an vnstedfast womā: whose fete coude not abyde in ^fȝ house, now is she without, now ^gȝ stretes, & lurketh ^hȝ euery corner) she caught ⁱȝ yōge mā, kyssed him & was not ashamed, saycge: I had a vowe to paye, & this daye I performe it. Therefore came I forth to mete the, that I might seke thy face, and so I haue founde the. I haue deckte my bed with coueringes & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrr, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye together, & take oure pleasure till it be daye light. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the bagg of moneye with him, who can tell whē he cōmeth home? ^jThus with many swete wordes she ouercame him, and with hir flatteryng lippes she wanne him.

Immediatly he foloweth her, as it were an oxe led to the slaughter (and like as it were to the stockes, where fooles are punyshed) so longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir darte: like as yf a byrde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parrell of his life lyeth there vpō. Heare me now therefore (o my sonne) and marcke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandre in hir wayes, & be not thou disceaued in hir pathes. For many one hath she wōded and cast downe, yee many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Hir house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

Stondeth she not in the hye places in the stretes & wayes? doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childre of mē) lift I vp my voyce. Take hede vnto knowlege o ye ignoraūt, be wyse in herte o ye fooles. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate matters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that be right. For my throte shal be talkynge of y^e trueth, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynnesse. All the wordes of my mouth are rightuous, there is no frowardnesse ner falsede therin. They are all playne to soch as wil vnderstode, & right to the that fynde knowlege. Receaue my doctrine therfore and not syluer, & knowlege more then fyne golde. For wysdome is more worth then precious stones, yee all the thinges that thou cāst desyre, are not to be compared vnto it.

B I wysdome haue my dwellynge with knowlege, and prudent counsell is myne owne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and y^e eschuyng of euell. As for pryde, disdayne, an euell waye, & a mouth that speaketh wicked thiges, I vtterly abhorre the. I can geue counsell, and be a gyde: I haue vnderstandinge, I haue strength.

Thorow me, kynges reigne: ^bthorow me, prices make iust lawes. Thorow me, lordes beare rule, and all iudges of y^e earth execute iudgmēt. I am louynge vnto those that loue me, and they that seke me early, shal fynde me.

Riches & honoure are with me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is better the golde & precious stone, & myne encrease more worth then fyne syluer. I walke in y^e waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudgment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that loue me, & to encrease their treasure.

C The LORDE himself had me in possessiō in the begynnynge of his wayes, or euer he beganne his workes afore tyme. ^dI haue bene ordered frō euerlastige, & frō y^e beginnyng or euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes ner springes of water. Before the foundations of y^e mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. ^eFor when he made the heauens, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordre: whan he hanged the cloudes aboue: whan he fastened the sprynges of the depe: ^fWhan he shutt the see within certayne bowndes, that y^e waters shulde not go ouer their marckes. When he layed the foundations of the earth, I was with him, ordryng all thinges, delytyng daylie & reioysynge allwaye before him. As for the roude cōpose of his worlde, I make it ioyfull, for my delyte is to be amōge the children of men.^g

Therfore harken vnto me (o ye children) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nurtoure, be wyse, and refuse it not. Blessed is y^e man that heareth me, watchinge daylie at my gates, & geuyng attendance at the postes of my dores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal optayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The ix. Chapter.

WYSDOME hath buylded herself an house, and hewen out seuen pilers: she hath slaughted, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crie vpō the hiest place of the cite: Who so is ignoraūt, let him come hither. And to the vnwise she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bred, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. For-sake ignoraūce, and ye shal lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstandinge.

Who so reproueth a scornfull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, stayneth himself.

Reproue not a scorner, lest he owe the euell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil loue the. ^hGeue a discrete man but an occasion, & he wilbe the wyser: teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, ⁱ& the knowlege of holy thinges is vnderstandinge. For thorow me thy dayes shalbe prolonged, and the yeares of thy life shal be many. Yf thou be wyse, thy wysdome shal do thy selfe good: but .yf thou thynekst scorne therof, it shalbe thine owne harme. A foolish restlesse woman, full of wordes, and

The i. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

A WYSE sonne maketh a glad father, but ^a an vndiscrete sonne is the heuynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wickedly gotten, profit nothinge, but rightuousnesse delyuereth from death. ^b The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth ^γ vngodly frō his desyre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quicke laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Sommer, is wyse: but he that is slogish in haruest, bringeth himself to confucion. Louynge and fauorable is the face of the rightuous, but ^γ fore heade of the vngodly is past shame, and presumptuous. ^c The memoriall of the iust shall haue a good reporte, but the name of the vngodly shal styrke. A wyse man wil receaue warnynge, but a foole wil sooner be smytten in the face. ^d He that leadeth an innocent life, walketh surely: ^e but who so goeth a wrōge waye, shalbe knowne. He ^f ^γ wyneketh with his eye, wil do some harme: but he that hath a foolish mouth, shalbe beaten. The mouth of a rightuous man is a well of life, but ^γ mouth of the vngodly is past shame, & presumptuous. Euell will stereth vp strife, ^g but loue couereth ^h multitude of synnes.

In ⁱ ^γ lippes of him ^j ^γ hath vnderstōdinge a mā shal fynde wysdome, but ^k ^γ rodde belōgeth to ^γ backe of ^γ foolish. Wyse mē laye vp knowlege, but ^γ mouth of ^γ foolish is nye destrucciō. The rich mās goodes are his strōge holde, but pouerte oppresseth the poore.

The rightuous laboureth to do good, but the vngodly vseth his increase vnto synne.

^l To take hede vnto ^γ chastenynge of nurture, is ^γ waye of life: but he that refuseth to be reformed, goeth wrōge. Disemblynge lippes kepe hatred secretly, and he that speaketh eny slaunder, is a foole. Where moch bablinge is, there must nedes be offence: he that refrayneth his lippes, is wysest of all. An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothinge worth. The lippes of the rightuous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne foly. ^m The blessinge of the LORDE maketh rich mē, as for careful trauaile, it doth nothinge therto. A foole doth wickedly & maketh but a sporte of it: neuertheles it is wysdome for a man to bewarre of soch.

The thinge that the vngodly are afrayed of, shal come vpon them, but the rightuous shal haue their desyre. The vngodly is like a tempest that passeth ouer & is nomore sene, but the rightuous remayneth sure for euer. As vyneger is to the teth, and as smoke is vnto ⁿ ^γ eyes, euē so is a slogish personne to them that sende him forth. The feare of ^o LORDE maketh a lōge life, but ^p ^γ yeares of ^γ vngodly shal be shortened. The pacient abydinge of the rightuous shalbe turned to gladnesse, but the hope of the vngodly shal perish. The waye of the LORDE geueth a corage vnto ^q ^γ godly, but it is a feare for wicked doers. The rightuous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, ^r but ^γ vngodly shal not remayne in the londe. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. The lippes of the rightuous are occupied in acceptable thinges, but the mouth of the vngodly taketh them to the worst.

The ii. Chapter.

A FALSE balaunce is an abhominacion vnto the LORDE, ^s but a true weight pleaseth him. Where pryde is, there is shame also and confucion: but where as is lowlynes, there is wysdome. The innocent dealyng of the iust shal lede them, but the vnfaithfulnesse of the despyers shalbe their owne destruction. ^t Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeance, but rightuousnesse delyuereth frō death. The rightuousnes of ^u ^γ innocent ordreth his waye, but the vngodly shal fall in his owne wickednesse. The rightuousnesse of the iust shal delyuer them, but the despyers shalbe taken in their owne vngodlynesse. When an

B vngodly man dyeth, his hope is gone, the confidence of riches shal perish. The righteous shalbe deluyered out of trouble, & the vngodly shal come in his steade. Thorow f mouth of f dyssembler is his neyghboure destroyed, but thorow knowlege shal the iust be deluyered. ^aWhen it goeth well with the righteous, the cite is mery: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealth, the cite prospereth: but whan the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bryngeth vp a slaunder of his neyghboure, but a wyse man wil kepe it secrete. ^bA dyssembleringe person wil discouer preuy thinges, but he that is of a faithfull hert, wil kepe counsell. ^cWhere no good counsell is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can geue counsell, there is wealth. ^dHe that is suertye for a straunger, hurteth himself: but he that medleth not with suerteshippe, is sure. A gracious womā manteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne ryches. He f hath a gentle liberrall stomacke, is mercifull: but who so hurteth his neyghboure, is a tyraūt.

The laboure of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth rightuousnes, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as rightuousnes bryngeth life, euē so to cleue vnto euell, bryngeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a fayned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndefyled. It shal not helpe f wicked, though they laye all their hondes together, but the sede of the righteous shalbe preserued. A fayre woman without discrete maners, is like a rynge of golde in a swynes snoute. The iust laboure for peace and trāquylite, but the vngodly for disquyetnesse.

^eSome man geueth out his goodes, and is the richer, but f nygarde (hauynge ynough) wil departe from nothinge, and yet is euer in pouerte. ^fHe that is lyberall in geuynge, shal haue plenty: and he that watereth, shal be watered also himself. Who so hoordeth vp his corne, shalbe cursed amonge the people: but blessinge shal light vpon his heade that selleth it. He that laboureth for honesty fyndeth his desyre: but who so seketh after myschefe, it shal happē vnto him. He that trusteth in his riches, shal haue a fall,

Who so maketh disquyetnesse in his owne house, he shal haue wynde for his heretage, and the foole shal be seruauant to the wyse.

The frute of the righteous is as the tre of life, a wyse man also wynneth mens soules. ^hYf f rightuous be recōpēsed vpō earth, how moch more thē the vngodly & f synner?

The xij. Chapter.

WHO so loueth wysdome, wil be content to be reformed: but he that hateth to be reprovēd, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORDE,ⁱ but f wicked wyl he condemne. A man cā not endure in vngodlynesse, but f rote of f righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir huszbonde: but she that behaueth herself vnonestly, is a corrupcion in his bones. The thoughtes of f righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkynge of the vngodly is, how they maye laye wayte for bloude, but the mouth of f righteous wil deluyere them. Or euer thou canst turne the aboute,^k the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stōde.

A man shalbe commended for his wysdome, but a foole shal be despysed. A simple man which laboureth and worketh,^l is better thē one that is gorgious and wanteth bred.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his catell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes. ^mHe that tilleth his lōde, shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he f foloweth ydylnes, is a very foole. The desyre of f vngodly hunteth after myschefe, but the rote of the righteous bryngeth forth frute. ⁿThe wicked falleth in to the snare thorow f malyce of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of parell. Euery man shal enioye good acordinge to the innocency of his mouth, and after the workes of his hādes shal he be rewarded. Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wyl be couceled. A foole vttereth his wrath in all the haist, but a discrete man forgeueth wronge. He that hath vnderstōdinge, can hyde his wysdome: but an vndiscrete herte telleth out his foolishnesse. A diligēt hande shal beare rule, but the ydle shal be vnder tribute. Heuynesse discourageth ^b herte of man, but a good worde maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberrall vnto his neghboure, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceaue them selues. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge those that do all thinges with aduysement, there is wysdome. Hastely gottē goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe tarienge for a thinge that is dyfferred, greueth ^d herte: but when the desyre cometh, it is a tre of life. Who so despyseth the worde, destroyeth himself: but he that feareth the cōmaundement, shal haue peace. The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstondinge geueth fauoure, but harde is the waye of the despyers. A wyse man doth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his foly. An vngodly mesaūger bryngeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassaitoure is wholsome. He that thinketh scorne to be reformed, commeth to pouerte and shame: but who so receaueth correccion, shal come to honoure. When a desyre is brought to passe, it delyteth the soule: but fooles abhorre him that eschueth euell. He that goeth in the company of wyse men, shal be wyse: but who so is a cōpanyō of fooles, shal be hurte. Myschefe foloweth vpon synners, but the rightous shal haue a good rewarde. Which their childers childrē shal haue in possessiō, for ^e the riches of the synner is layed vp for ^f iust. There is plenteousnesse of fode in the feldes of the poore, ^g shalbe increased out of measure. ^h He that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne: but who so loueth him, holdeth him euer in nurtoure. The rightous eateth, and is satisfied, but ⁱ bely of the vngodly hath neuer ynough.

The xiiij. Chapter.

^a A WYSE womā vpholdeth hir house, but a foolish wife plucketh it downe.

Who so feareth the LORDE, walketh in the right path: ^b regardeth not him that abhorreth the wayes of the LORDE. In the mouth of the foolish is the boostinge of lordshipe, but ^c lippes of ^d wyse wilbe warre of soch. Where no oxen are, there the crybb is emptie: but where the oxen laboure, there is moch frute. A faithfull wytnesse wyl not dyssemble, but a false recorde wil make a lye.

A scornfull body seketh wyszdome, ^e fyndeth it not: but knowlege is easy to come by, vnto him that wil vnderstonde. ^f Se ^g thou medle not with a foole, ^h do as though thou haddest no knowlege. B synne, but there is fauourable loue amōge the rightuous. The herte of him that hath vnderstandinge wil nether dispare for eny sorow, ner be to presumptuous for eny sodane ioye.

The houses of the vngodly shalbe ouerthrowne, but the tabernacles of y^e righteys shal florishe. ^aThere is a waye, which some men thinke to be right, but the ende therof ledeth vnto death. The herte is sorowfull euen in laughter, and the ende of myrth is heuynesse. An vnfaithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mā wyl bewarre of soch. An ignoraūt body beleueth all thinges, but who so hath vnderstandinge, loketh well to his goinges. A wyse man feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An vnpacient man handeleth foolishly, but he that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.

C The ignoraūt haue foolishnes in possessiō, but the wyse are crowned with knowlege.

The euell shal bowe them selues before y^e good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the dores of the rightuous. The poore is hated euen of his owne neighbours, but the riche hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neighbour, doth amysse: ^bbut blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that ymagin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpō good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulness. Diligēt labourer bryngeth riches, but where many wayne wordes are, truly there is scarcenesse.

Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse, but the ignoraunce of fooles is very foolishnesse. A faithfull wytnesse deluyeth soules, but a lyar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a strōge holde, for vnto his he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoyde the snares of death. The increase and prosperite of the comons is the kynges honoure, but the decaye of the people is the confusiō of the prynce. Pacience is a token of wisdome, but wrath and haistie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A mery herte is the life of the body, but rancoure consumeth awaye the bones. ^cHe that doth a poore man wrōge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.

The vngodly is afraied of euery parell, but the rightuous hath a good hope euē in death. Wysdome resteth in the herte of him that hath vnderstandinge, and he wyll teach them that are vnlernd. ^dRightuousnes setteth vp the people, but wyckednesse bryngeth folke to destruction. A discrete seruauant is a pleasure vnto y^e kyng, but one y^e is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wrath.

The xlv. Chapter.

A ^eSOFTE aswere^f putteth downe displeasure, but frowarde wordes prouoke vnto anger. A wyse tonge commendeth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbeth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in euery place, both vpon y^e good and badd. A wholsome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a broken mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correccion, but he y^e taketh hede when he is reprovved, shal haue y^e more vnderstōdinge.

In the house of the rightuous are greate riches, but in the increase of the vngodly there is mysordre. A wyse mouth poureth out knowlege, but y^e herte of the foolish doth not so. ^gThe LORDE abhorreth y^e sacrifice of the vngodly, but the prayer of the rightuous is acceptable vnto him. The waye of the vngodly is an abhominaciō vnto y^e LORDE, but who so foloweth righteousnes, him he loueth. He that forsaketh y^e right strete, shalbe sore punyshed: ^hwho so hateth correccion, falleth in to death. The hell with hir payne is knowne vnto the LORDE, how moch more then the hertes of men?

ⁱA scornewfull body loueth not one y^e rebuketh him, nether wil he come amōge y^e wyse. ^jA mery herte maketh a chearfull countenance, but an vnquyet mynde maketh it heuy. A wyse herte wil seke after knowlege, but y^e mouth of fooles medleth with foolishnesse. All the dayes of the poore are miserable, but a quyet herte is as a cōtynuall feast. ^kBetter is a litle with the feare of the LORDE then greate treasure, for they are not without sorowe. Better is a meace of potage with loue, then a fat oxe with euell will.

slouthfull is full of thornes, but f strete of the rightuous is well clenſed. A wyſe ſonne maketh a glad father,^a but an vndiſcrete body ſhameth his mother. A foolle reioyſeth in fooliſh thinges, but a wyſe man loketh well to his owne goinges. Vnaduysed thoughtes ſhal come to naught, but where as are men f can geue counsell, there is ſtedfaſneſſe. O how ioyfull a thinge is it, a man to geue a conuenient anſwere? O how pleaſaunt is a worde ſpoken in due ſeaſon? The waye of life ledeth vnto heauē, f a man ſhulde bewarre of hell beneth.

The LORDE wyl breake downe f houſe of f proude, but he ſhal make faſt f borders of f wyddowe. The LORDE abhorreth f ymaginacions of f wicked, but pure wordes are pleaſaunt vnto him. The couetous man wrutteth vp his owne houſe, but who ſo hateth rewardes, ſhal lyue. A rightuous mā muſeth in his mynde how to do good, but f mynde of the vngodly ymagineth, how he maye do harme. The LORDE is farre from the vngodly, but he heareth f prayer of the rightuous. Like as f clearneſſe of f eyes reioyſeth f herte, ſo doth a good name fede f bones. The eare f harkeneth vnto wholeſome warnynge, and enclyneth therto, ſhall dwell amonge f wyſe. He that refuseth to be reformed, deſpyſeth his owne ſoule: but he that ſubmytteth himſelf to correccion, is wyſe.

The xvi. Chapter.

THE feare of f LORDE is f right ſcyēce of wyſydome, and lowlyneſſe goeth before honour. A man maye well purpoſe a thinge in his harte, but f anſwere of f tonge cōmeth of f LORDE. ^aA mā thinketh all his waies to be clene, but it is f LORDE f fashioneth f myndes. ^cCommytte thy workes vnto f LORDE, and loke what thou deuſeſt, it ſhal proſpere. The LORDE doth all thinges for his owne ſake, yee f when he kepeth f vngodly for f daye of wrath.

The LORDE abhorreth all presumptuous f proude hertes, there maye nether ſtrength ner power eſcape. With lounge mercy f faithfulneſſe ſynnes be forgeuen, and who ſo feareth f LORDE eſchueth euell. When a mans wayes pleaſe f LORDE, he maketh his very enemies to be his frendes. Better is it to haue a litle thinge with rightuousneſſe, the greате rentes wrongeouſly gotten. ^dA mā deuſeth a waye in his herte, but it is f LORDE f ordreth his goinges. When f prophecy is in f lippes of f kynge, his mouth ſhal not go wrōge in iudgment. ^eA true measure f a true balaūce are f LORDES, he maketh all weightes. It is a greате abhominaciō when kynges are wycked, for a kynges ſeate ſhulde be holden vp with righteouſneſſe.

Righteous lippes are pleaſaunt vnto kynges, and they loue him f ſpeaketh f trueth.

The kynges diſpleaſure is a meſſaunger of death, but a wyſe man wyl pacifie him.

The cherefull countenaūce of f kynge is life, and his lounge fauoure is as the euenynge dewe. ^fTo haue wyſydome in poſſeſſion is better then golde, and to get vnderſtondynge, is more worth then ſyluer. The path of f righteous eſchueth euell, f who ſo loketh well to his wayes, kepeth his owne ſoule.

Presumptuousneſſe goeth before deſtruccion, and after a proude ſtomake there foloweth a fall. Better it is to be of humble mynde with the lowly, then to deuſe f ſpoyles with f proude. He f handleth a matter wyſely, opteyneth good: f blessed is he, ^g f putteth his truſt in f LORDE. Who ſo hath a wyſe vnderſtondynge, is called to counsell: but he f can ſpeake fayre, getteth more riches. Vnderſtondynge is a well of life vnto him f hath it, as for f chaſtenynge of foolles, it is but fooliſhneſſe. The herte of the wyſe enfourmeth his mouth, and amendeth f doctryne in his lippes.

Fayre wordes are an hony combe, a reſreſhynge of f mynde, f health of f bones.

^hThere is a waye f men thinke to be right, but the ende therof leadeth vnto death. A troublous ſoule diſquyeteth hir ſelfe, for hir owne mouth hath brought her therto. An vngodly perſonne ſtereth vp euell, and in his lippes he is as an whote burnynge fyre.

A frowarde body cauſeth ſtrife, and he f is a blabbe of his tonge, maketh deuſyſion amonge prynces. A wicked mā begyleth his neighbour, f ledeth him f waye f is not good.

He that wynceth with his eyes, ymagineth myſchefe: and he f byteth his lippes, wyl do

The xviij. Chapter.

BETTER is a drye morsell with quyetnesse, thē a full house and many fatt catell with stryfe. ^b A discrete seruauēt shal haue more rule then the sonnes ^y haue no wysdome, and shal haue like heretage with the brethren. ^c Like as syluer is tried in the fyre and golde in the fornace, euen so doth the LORDE proue the hertes. A wicked body holdeth moch of false lippes, ^τ a dyssemblynge persone geueth eare to a disceitfull tōge. ^d Who so laugheth ^y poore to scorne, blasphemeth his maker: and he ^y is glad of another mans hurte, shal not be vnpunished. Childers children are a worshippe vnto the elders, and the fathers are the honoure of the children. An eloquent speech becōmeth not a foole, a dyssemblynge mouth also besemeth not a prynce. Liberalite is a precious stone vnto him that hath it, for where so euer he becōmeth, he prospereth. Who so couereth another mans offence, seketh loue: but he ^y discloseth the faute, setteth frendes at variaunce. One reprove only doth more good to him ^y hath vnderstōdinge, then an C. stripes vnto a foole. A sedicious personne seketh myschefe, but a cruell messaunger shal be sent agaynst him. It were better to come agaynst a she Bere robbed of hir whelpes, then agaynst a foole in his foolishnes. ^e Who so rewardeth euell for good, the plage shal not departe frō his house. ^f He ^y soweth discorde ^τ strife, is like one ^y dyggeth vp a water broke: but an open enemie is like the water ^y breaketh out ^τ rēneth abrode. The LORDE hateth as well him ^y iustifieth ^y vngodly, as him ^y condemneth the innocēt. What helpeth it to geue a foole money in his hōde, where as he hath no mynde to bye wysdome? He is a frende that allwaye loueth, ^g and in aduersite a man shal knowe who is his brother. Who so promiseth by the hande, ^τ is suertie for another, he is a foole. He ^y loueth strife, delyteth in synne: ^τ who so setteth his dore to hye, seketh after a fall. Who so hath a frowarde herte, opteyneth no good: and he ^y hath an ouerthwarte tonge, shal fall in to myschefe. An vnwyse body bryngeth him selfe in to sorowe, and ^y father of a foole can haue no ioie. ^h A mery herte maketh a lusty age, but a sorowfull mide dryeth vp ^y bones. The vngodly taketh giftes out of the bosome, to wraist the wayes of iudgment. ⁱ Wyszdome shyneth in ^y face of him ^y hath vnderstōdinge, but ^y eyes of fooles wandre thorow out all lōdes. ^j An vn-discrete sonne is a grefe vnto his father, and heuynesse vnto his mother ^y bare him. To punysh ^y innocent, and to smyte ^y prynces ^y geue true iudgmēt, are both euell. He is wyse and discrete, ^k ^y tempereth his wordes: ^l and he is a mā of vnderstōdinge, ^m ^y maketh moch of his sprete. ⁿ Yee a very foole (when he holdeth his tonge) is counted wyse, and to haue vnderstōdinge, when he shutteth his lippes.

The xviij. Chapter.

WHO so hath pleasure to sowe discorde, ^a piketh a quarell in euery thinge. A foole hath no delyte in vnderstōdinge, but only in those thinges wherin his herte reioyseth. Where vngodlynes is, there is also diszdayne: ^τ so there foloweth shame ^τ dishonoure. The wordes of a mā mouth are like depe waters, and the well of wyszdome is like a full streame. ^b It is not good to regarde ^y personne of the vngodly, or to put backe ^y righteous in iudgmēt. A fooles lippes are euer brawlinge, and his mouth prouoketh vnto batayll. A fooles mouth is his owne destruccio, and his lippes are ^y snare for his owne soule. The wordes of a slaunderer are very wōdes, and go thorow vnto the ynnmost partes of the body. Who so is slouthfull and slacke in his laboure, is ^y brother of him ^y is a waister. The name of ^y LORDE is a stronge castell, ^c ^y righteous flyeth vnto it, and shalbe saued. But ^y rich mā's goodes are his stronge holde, yee he taketh them for an hye wall rōude aboute him. that geueth sentēce in a matter before he heare it, is a foole, and worthy to be confounded. A good stomacke dryueth away a mā's disease, but whā ȝ sprete is vexed, who maye abyde it? A wyse herte laboureth for knowlege, and a prudent eare seketh vnderstandinge. Liberalite bryngeth a man to honoure and worshippe, τ setteth him amonge great men.

C The righteous accuseth hī self firste of all, yf his neighbour come, he shal fynde him. The lot pacifieth ȝ variaūce, τ parteth ȝ mightie asunder. The vnite of brethren is stronger then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace. A mans bely shalbe satisfied with the frute of his owne mouth, and with the increase of his lippes shal he be fylled. Death and life stonde in the power of the tonge, he that loueth it, shal enioye the frute therof. "Who so fyndeth a wife fyndeth a good thyng, τ receaueth an wholsome benefite of the LORDE. The poore maketh supplicacion and prayeth mekely, but the riche geueth a rough answer.

A frende that delyteth in loue, doth a man more frēdshipec, and sticketh faster vnto him then a brother.

The xij. Chapter.

*B*ETTER is the poore ^athat lyueth godly, thē the blasphemers that is but a foole. Where no discretion is, there the soule is not well: and who so is swifte on fote, stumbleth hastily. Foolishnesse maketh a man to go out of his waye, τ then is his herte vnpatient agaynst the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forsakē of his owne frendes. "A false wytnesse shal not remaine vnpunished, and he that speaketh lyes shal not escape. The multitude hāgeth vpō greates men, τ euery man fauoureth him that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all his brethren: yee his owne frendes forsake him, τ he that geueth credēce vnto wordes, getteth nothinge. He that is wyse, loueth his owne soule: and who so hath vnderstandinge, shal prospere. A false wytnesse shal not remaine vnpunished, τ he ȝ speaketh lyes shal perishe. Delicate ease becōmeth not a foole, moch more vnseemly is it, a bonde man to haue ȝ rule of prynces. A wyse man putteth of displeasure, τ it is his honoure to let some fautes passe.

"The kynges disfaoure is like ȝ roaringe of a Lyō, but his frēdshipec is like the dewe vpō ȝ grasse. "An vndiscrete sonne is ȝ heuynes of his father, τ a braulynge wife is like the topp of an house, where thorow it is euer droppynge. House τ riches maye a mā haue by ȝ heretage of his elders, /but a discrete womā is the gifte of the LORDE. Slouthfulnes bryngeth slepe, τ an ydell soule shal suffer hōger. Who so kepeth the cōmaudemēt, kepeth his owne soule: but he ȝ regardeth not his waye, shal dye. He ȝ hath pitie vpon the poore, lēdeth vnto ȝ LORDE: τ loke what he layeth out, it shalbe payed him agayne. Chastē thy sonne whyle there is hope, but let not thy soule be moued to slaye hī. For greates wrath bryngeth harme, therefore let him go, and so mayest thou teach him more nurtoure. O geue eare vnto good counsell, τ be content to be reformed, that thou mayest be wyse hereafter. "There are many deuices in a mā's herte, neuertheles the cōcell of ȝ LORDE shal stōde. It is a mans worshippe to do good, τ better it is to be a poore mā, then a dyssembler. The feare of the LORDE preserueth the life, yee it geueth plēteousnes, without the visitaciō of any plage. ^aA slouthfull body shuteth his honde in to his bosome, so ȝ he can not put it to his mouth. Yf thou smyttest a scornefull personne, the ignoraūt shal take better hede: τ yf thou reprobust one ȝ hath vnderstandinge, he wil be ȝ wyser. He ȝ hurteth his father or shuteth out his mother, is a shamefull τ an vnworthy sonne. My sonne, heare nomore the doctrine ȝ leadeeth the awaye from the wordes of vnderstandinge.

A false wytnes laugheth iudgmēt to scorne, τ the mouth of the vngodly eateth vp wickednes. Punyshmentes are ordered for the scornefull, and stripes for fooles backes.

The xij. Chapter.

*W*YNE is a voluptuous thinge, τ drōckenness causeth sedicion: ^awho so delyteth therein, shal neuer be wyse. A slouthfull body wyl not go to plowe for colde, therefore shal he go abegginge in Sommer, and haue nothinge. Wyse counsell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstandinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithfull mā? Who so ledeth a godly and an innocent life, ^ahappie shal his children be, whom he leaueth behynde him.

B A kynge that sytteth in iudgment, and loketh well aboute him, dryueth away all euell. Who can saye: ^bmy hert is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abhominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his conuersacion, whether his workes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare τ the sight of \S eye, \S LORDE hath made thē both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto pouerte: but opē thine eyes, τ thou shalt haue bred ynough. It is naught, It is naught (saye men) whan they haue it, but whan it is gone, they geue it a good worde.

C A mouth of vnderstōdinge is more worth then golde, many precious stones, and costly Jewels. Take his garment that is suertie for a straunger, τ take a pledge of him for \S vnknowne mans sake. Euery mā liketh the bred that is gotten with disceate, but at the last is mouth shalbe fylled with grauell.

Thorow counsell the thinges that men deuysse go forwarde: τ with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Meddle not with him that bewrayeth secretes, and is a slaunderer, and disceaueth with his lippes.

^dWho so curseth his father and mother, his light shalbe put out in the myddest of darcknesse. The heretage that cometh to haistely at the first, shal not be prayسد at the ende. B Saye not thou: I will recompence euell, but put thy trust in the LORDE, τ he shal defende \S . The LORDE abhorreth two maner of weightes, and a false balaunce is an euell thinge. The LORDE ordreth euery mā's goinges, for what is he, that vnderstondeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man to blaspheme that which is holy, ^e τ then to go aboute with vowes. A wyse kynge destroyeth

The xxi. Chapter.

THE kynges hert is in the hande of the LORDE, ^g'like as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whither so euer he wyll. Euery man thinketh his owne waye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth \S hertes. ^hTo do rightuousnesse and iudgmēt is more acceptable to the LORDE the sacrifice.

A presumptuous lōke, a proude stomacke, τ the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuyses of one that is diligent, brynge plenteousnes: but he \S is vnaduyssed, commeth vnto pouerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches with \S disceatfulness of his tonge, he is a foole, τ like vnto them that seke their owne death. The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruccion, for they wolde not do the thyng that was right. The wayes of the forwarde are straunge, ⁱ'but \S workes of him \S is cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a corner vnder \S house toppe, then with a brawlinge woman in a wyde house.

When the scornfull is punyshed, the ignoraunt take \S better hede: τ when a wyse man is warned, he wil receaue the more vnderstandinge. The rightuous enfourmeth the house of the vngodly, but \S vngodly go on still after their owne wickednesse. Who so stoppeth his eare at the crieg of the poore, ^khe shal crie himself and not be herde. A preuy rewarde pacifieth displeasure, and a gifte in the bosome stilleth furiousnesse.

The iust delyteth in doynge the thyng that is right, but the workers of wickednesse abhorre the same. The man that wandreth out of the waye of wysdome, shal remayne in the cōgregacion of \S deed. He \S hath pleasure in bankettes, ^lshal be a poore man: Who so delyteth in wyne and delicates, shal not be riche. The vngodly shalbe geuen for the righteous, ⁊ the wicked for the iust.

It is better to dwell in a wyldernes, ^a the with a chydunge and an angrie woman. In a wyse mans house there is greate treasure and plenteousnesse, but a foolish body spendeth vp all. Who so soloweth righteousness and mercy, fyndeth both life, righteousness and honoure. A wyse man wynneth the cite of the mightie, and as for the strength [⁊] they trust in, he bryngeth it downe. Who so kepeth his mouth and his tonge, ^b the same kepeth his soule from troubles. He [⁊] is proude ⁊ presumptuous, is called a scornfull mā, which in wrath darre worke maliciously.

The voluptuousnesse of the slouthfull is his owne death, for his hādes wyll not labour.

He coueteth and desyreth all the daye longe, but the righteous is allwaye geuyng ⁊ kepeth nothinge backe. ^c The sacrifice of the vngodly is abhominacion, for they offere the thinge [⁊] is gotten with wickednes. ^d A false wytnesse shal perishe, but he [⁊] wilbe content to heare, shal allwaye haue power to speake himself. An vngodly man goeth forth rashly, but the iust refourmeth his owne waye.

There is no wysdome, ^e there is no vnderstandinge, there is no counsell agaynst the LORDE. The horse is prepared agaynst [⁊] daye of battayll, but the LORDE geueth the victory.

The rrij. Chapter.

A GOOD name is more worth then greate riches, ^f and lounge fauoure is better then syluer and golde. Whether riches or pouerte do mete vs, it commeth all of God. A wyse man seyeth the plage and hydeth himself, but the foolish go on still and are punished. The ende of lowlynes ⁊ the feare of God, is riches, honoure, prosperite and health. Speares and snares are in [⁊] waye of the forwarde, but he [⁊] wil kepe his soule, let him fle frō soch. Yf thou teachest a childe in his youth what waye he shulde go, he shall not leaue it when he is olde. The rich ruleth the poore, and [⁊] borower is seruaut to [⁊] lender. He [⁊] soweth wickednesse, shal reape sorowe, ⁊ the rodde of his plage shal destroye him. ^g A lounge eye shalbe blessed, for he geueth of his bred vnto [⁊] poore. Cast out [⁊] scornfull man, and so shal strife go out with him, yee variaunce and slaunders shal cease. Who so delyteth to be of a clene herte and of gracious lypes, ^h kynge shal be his frende.

The eyes of [⁊] LORDE preserue knowlege, but as for [⁊] wordes of [⁊] despyteful, he bryngeth them to naught. The slouthfull body sayeth: there is a lyō with out, I might be slayne in [⁊] strete. The mouth of an harlot is a depe pytt, ⁱ wherin he falleth that [⁊] LORDE is angrie withall. Foolishnes sticketh in the herte of [⁊] lad, but [⁊] rod of correcion driueth it awaye. Who so doth a poore man wronge to increase his owne riches, geueth (comōly) vnto the rich, and at the last commeth to pouerte himself. My sonne, bowe downe thine eare, and herken vnto the wordes of wysdome, applye thy mynde vnto my doctryne: for it is a pleasaunt thinge yf thou kepe it in thine herte, and practise it in thy mouth: that thou mayest allwaye put thy trust in the LORDE. Haue not I warned [⁊] very oft with counsell and lerninge? [⁊] I might shewe [⁊] the treuth, and that thou with the verite mightest answer them [⁊] laye eny thinge against [⁊]? Se [⁊] thou robbe not [⁊] poore because he is weake, and oppresse not [⁊] simple in iudgment: for [⁊] LORDE himself wyl defende their cause, and do violence vnto them [⁊] haue vsed violence.

Make no frēdschipe with an angrie wyllfull man, and kepe no company with [⁊] furious: lest thou lerne his wayes, and receaue hurte vnto thy soule. ^k Be not thou one of them [⁊] bynde their hande vpō promyse, and are suertie for dett: for yf thou hast nothinge to paye, they shal take awaye thy bed from vnder the. ^l Thou shalt not remoue the lande marcke, which thy fore elders haue sett. owne self, be not ouer gredy of his meate, for meate begyleth and disceaueth.

Take not ouer greate trauayle and labour to be riche, beware of soch a purpose. Why wilt thou set thine eye vpon ȝ thinge, which sodenly vanisheth away? For riches make them selues wynges, and take their flight like an Aegle in to ȝ ayre. Eate not thou with ȝ enuyous, and desyre not his meate, for he hath a maruelous herte. He sayeth vnto ȝ: eate and drynke, where as his herte is not with ȝ. Yee ȝ morsels that thou hast eaten shalt thou perbreake, and lese those swete wordes. Tel nothings in to ȝ eares of a foole, for he wyl despise the wysdome of thy wordes. Remoue not ȝ olde lande marke, and come not within ȝ felde of the fatherlesse: For he ȝ deliuereth them is mightie, euen he shal defende their cause agaynst the.

B Applie thine herte vnto lernynge, and thine eare to the wordes of knowlege. Witholde not correccon from ȝ childe, for yf thou beatest him with the rodde, he shal not dye therof. Thou smyttest him with the rodde, but thou delyuerest his soule from hell. My sonne, yf thy herte receaue wysdome, my herte also shal reioyce: yee my reynes shal be very glad, yf thy lypes speake the thinge ȝ is right. Let not thine herte be gelous to folowe synners, but kepe ȝ still in the feare of the LORDE all the daye lōge: for the ende is not yet come, and thy pacient abydinge shal not be in vayne. My sonne, geue eare ȝ be wyse, so shal thine hert prospere in the waye. Kepe no company with wyne bebbers and ryotous eaters of flesh: for soch as be dronckardes and ryotous, shal come to pouerte, ȝ he that is geuen to moch slepe, shal go with a ragged cote. Geue eare vnto thy father that begat the, and despise not thy mother whan she is olde. Laboure for to get ȝ treuth: sell not away wysdome, nourtoure ȝ vnderstōdinge (for a righteous father is maruelous glad of a wyse sonne, ȝ delyteth in hī) so shal thy father be glad, and thy mother that bare the, shal reioyce. My sonne, geue me thyne herte, and let thine eyes haue pleasure in my wayes. For an whore is a depe graue, and an harlot is a narow pytt. She lurketh like a thefe, and those that be not aware she brigeth vnto her. Where is wo? where is sorow? where is strife?

where is braulynge? where are woundes without cause? where be reed eyes? Euen amonge those that be euer at the wyne, and seke out where the best is. Loke not thou vpon the wyne, how reed it is, and what a coloure it geueth in the glasse.

It goeth downe softly, but at the last it byteth like a serpēt, and styngeth as an Adder.

So shal thine eyes loke vnto straunge women, ȝ thine herte shal muse vpon frowarde thinges. Yee thou shalt be as though thou slepte, in ȝ myddest of ȝ see, or vpō ȝ toppe of the mast. They wounded me (shalt thou saie) but it hath not hurte me, they smote me, but I felt it not. Whē I am wel wakened, I wil go to ȝ drynke agayne.

The xiiii. Chapter.

BE not thou gelous ouer wicked mē, ȝ desyre not thou to be amonge them.

For their herte ymagineth to do hurte, ȝ their lippes talke of myschefe. Thorow wysdome an house shalbe buylded, ȝ with vnderstōdinge it shalbe set vp. Thorow discrecion shal ȝ chābers be fylled with all costly ȝ pleasaunt riches. A wyse mā is strōge, yee a mā of vnderstōdinge is better, thē he ȝ is mightie of strēgh. For with discrecion must warres be takē in honde, and where as are many ȝ can geue counsell, there is ȝ victory. Wysdome is an hie thinge, yee eue to ȝ foole, for he darre not opē his mouth in ȝ gate. He ȝ ymagineth myschefe, maye wel be called an vngracious personne. The thoughte of ȝ foolish synne, ȝ ȝ scornfull is an abhominacion vnto mē. Yf thou be ouersene ȝ negligēt in tyme of nede, thē is thy strēgh but small. Delyuer thē ȝ go vnto death, ȝ are led awaie to be slaine, ȝ be not negligēt therin. Yf thou wilt saye: I knowe not of it. Thynkest thou ȝ he which made ȝ hertes, doth not cōsidre it? ȝ ȝ he which regardeth thy soule, seith it not? Shal not he recōpence euery man acordinge to his workes? My sonne, thou eatest hony ȝ swete hony cōbe, because it is good ȝ swete in thy mouth. Euen so shall ȝ knowlege of wysdome be vnto thy soule, as soone as thou hast gottē it. And there is good hope, yee thy hope shal not be in vayne. Laye no preuy waite wickedly vpon ȝ house of ȝ rightuous, ȝ disquiete not

The xrb. Chapter.

^g THESE also are Salomons prouerbes, which the men of Ezechias kinge of Iuda gathered together. It is the honour of God to kepe a thinge secrete, ^h but ſy kinges honour is to search out a thinge. The heauen is hie, ſy earth is depe, and ſy kinges hert is vnsearcheable. Take ſy drosse from ſy syluer, & there shalbe a cleane vessell therof.

Take awaye vngodlinesse frō ſy kyng, & his seate shalbe stablished with rightuousnes.

Put not forth thy self in ſy presence of ſy kyng, & prease not in to ſy place of greates men.

Better it is ſy it be sayde vnto ſy: 'come vp hither, then thou to be set downe in ſy presence of ſy prync, whom thou seyst with thine eyes. ⁱ Be not haistie to go to the lawe, lest happlie thou ordre thy self so at ſy last, ſy thy neighbour put ſy to shame. Handle thy matter with thy neighbour himself, & discour not another mans secrete: lest when men heare therof, it turne to thy dishonoure, & lest thine euell name do not cease. A worde spoken in due season, is like apples of golde in a syluer dyshe.

The correccion of the wyse is to an obedient eare, a golden cheyne and a lewel of golde. Like as the wynter coole in the haruest, so is a faithfull messaunger to him that sent him, & refreszeth his masters mynde.

C Who so maketh greates boastes & geueth nothinge, is like cloudes & wynde without rayne. ^j With pacience maye a prync be pacified, & with a soft tonge maye rigorousnes be brokē. Yf thou findest hony, eate so moch as is sufficiēt for ſy: lest thou be ouerfull, & per breake it out agayne. Withdraw thy foote frō thy neighbours house, lest he be weery of the, and so abhorre the. Who so beareth false wytnesse agaynst his neighbour, he is a very speare, a swearde & a sharpe arowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of nede, is like a rotten toth and a slippery foote. Who so syngeth a songe to a wicked herte, clotheth hī with ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chalke. Yf thine enemye hunger, fede him: ^k yf he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shalt thou heape coales of fyre vpō his heade, and the LORDE shal rewarde the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euen so doth an earnest sober countenance a back byters tonge. It is better to syt in a corner vnder the rose, ^l then with a braulynge woman in a wyde house. A good reporte out of a farre countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a sprynge ſy is destroyed.

The xxvi. Chapter.

LIKE as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in haruest: euen so is worshipe vnsemy for a foole. Like as y byrde and the swalowe take their flight and fle here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shal not light vpon a man. ^aVnto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a byrdle, and a rodde to the fooles backe. Geue not the foole an answer after his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make y foole an answer to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne cōceate. He is lame of his fete, yee droncken is he in vanite, that cōmitteth eny thinge to a foole. Like as it is vnsemy thīge to haue legges & yet to halte, euē so is a parable in y fooles mouth.

He y setteth a foole in hye dignite, y is euē as yf a man dyd cast a precious stone vpō y galous. A parable in a fooles mouth, is like a thorne y pricketh a droncken man in y hande. A man of experience discerneth all thinges well, but who so hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite, euen so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne afresh. Yf thou seyest a man y is wyse in his owne conceate, there is more hope in a foole then in hi. ^aThe slouthfull sayeth: there is a leoparde in y waye, and a lyon in y myddest of the stretes. Like as the dore turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euen so doth the slouthfull welter himself in his bedd. ^aThe slouthfull body thrusteth his hōde in to his bosome, and it greueth him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh him self wyser, then vij. men that sytt and teach.

Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one y taketh a dogg by y eares. Like as one shuteth deadly arowes and dartes out of a prey place, euen so doth a dyssembler with his neighbour, And then sayeth he: I dyd it but in sporte. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out: ^aand where the bacbyter is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kyndle heate, and wodd y

fyre: euen so doth a braulinge felowe stere vp variaunce. A slaunders wordes are like flattery, but they pearse y inwarde partes of y body. Vnymous lippes & a wicked herte, are like a potsherde couered with syluer drosse. An enemie dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ymagineth myschefe: but whā he speaketh fayre, beleue him not, for there are seuen abhominaciōs in his herte. Who so kepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malyce shal be shewed before the whole congregacion. ^aWho so dyggeth vp a pytt, shal fal therin: and he y weltreth a stone, shal stamble vpon it hymself.

A dyssembleynge tonge hateth one that rebuketh him, and a flaterige mouth worketh myschefe.

The xxvij. Chapter.

MAKE not thy boost of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what maye happen todaye. Let another mā prayse the, & not thine owne mouth: yee other folkes lippes, and not thyne. ^aThe stone is heuy, and the sonde weightie: but a fooles wrath is heuier then they both. Wrath is a cruell thīge, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde envye? ^aAn open rebuke is better, then a secrete loue. Faithfull are the woundes of a louer, but y kysses of an enemie are disceatfull. He that is full, abhorreth an hony combe: but vnto him that is hōgrie, euery sower thinge is swete. He that oft tymes flytteth, is like a byrde y forsaketh hir nest. The herte is glad of a swete oyntment and sauoure, but a stomacke that cā geue good counsell, reioyseth a mans neighbour. ^aThyne owne frende and thy fathers frende se thou forsake not, but go not in to thy brothers house in tyme of thy trouble.

Better is a frende at hōde, then a brother farre of. My sonne, be wyse, and thou shalt make me a glad herte: so that I shal make answer vnto my rebukers. The xxiij. Chapter.

¶ THE vngodly flyeth no man chasyng him,^a but the righteous stondestiff as a lyon. Because of synne y londe doth oft chaunge hir pryncce: but thorow men of vnderstandinge & wysdome a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressinge another by violence, is like a contynual rayne that destroyeth y frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse y vngodly: but such as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. ^bWicked men discerne not the thinge y is right, but they that seke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. ^cA poore man ledyng a godly life, is better then the riche that goeth in frowarde wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is a childe of vnderstandinge: but he y fedeth ryotous men, shameth his father. Who so increaseth his riches by vaughte & wynnyng, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. ^dHe that turneth awaye his eare from hearinge y lawe, his prayer shalbe abhorred. Who so ledeth y righteous in to an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pytt, but y iust shal haue the good in possession.

The rich man thynketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstandinge, cā perceaue him wel ynough. ^eWhen righteous men are in prosperite, the doth honoure flourish: but when the vngodly come vp, y state of men chaungeth. He that hydeth his synnes, shall not prosper: but who so knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shall haue mercy. Well is him that stōdeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischefe. Like as a roaringe lyon and an hongrie beer, euen so is an vngodly pryncce ouer the poore people.

Where the pryncce is without vnderstandinge, there is greate oppression & wronge: but yf he be soch one as hathet couetousnesse, he shal longe raigne. ^fHe that by violēce sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a renagate vnto his graue, and no man shal be able to succoure him. ^gWho so leadeth a godly and an innocēt life, shalbe safe: but he that goeth frowarde wayes, shall once haue a fall. He y tylleth his londe,^h shal haue plenteuousnesse of bred: but he that foloweth ydilnesse, shal haue pouerte ynough. A faithfull man is greatly to be commēded, but he that maketh to moch haist for to be riche, ⁱshal not be vngiltie. To haue respecte of personnes in iudgment is not good: And why? he will do wronge, yee euen for a pece of bred. ^jHe that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that pouerte shall come vpon him. He that rebuketh a man, shall fynde more fauoure at y last, thē he that flatreth him. Who so robbeth his father and mother,^k and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a murtherer.

He that is of a proude stomacke, stereth vp strife: but he that putteth his trust in y LORDE, shalbe well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that dealeth wisely, shalbe safe. ^lHe that geueth vnto the poore, shal not wante: but he that turneth awaye his eyes from such as be in necessite, shall suffre greate pouerte himself.

The xxx. Chapter.

A HE that is stiffnecked & wyll not be reformed, shal sodenly be destroyed with out eny helpe. ^a Where \hat{y} rightuous haue the ouer hande, \hat{y} people are in prosperite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, there \hat{y} people mourne. Who so loueth wyszdome, maketh his father a glad man: ^b but he \hat{y} kepeth harlots, spēdeth awaye \hat{y} he hath. With true iudgment \hat{y} kynge setteth vp the londe, but yf he be a man \hat{y} taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flatreth his neghboure, layeth a nette for his fete. The synne of \hat{y} wicked is his owne snare, but \hat{y} righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous considreth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderstandynge. Wicked people brynge a cite in decaye, but wyse men set it vp agayne. Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. The bloudesthyrstie hate the rightuous, but the iust seke his soule. A foole poureth out his sprete altogether, but a wyse man kepeth it in till afterwarde.

Yf a prynce delyte in lyes, all his seruantes are vngodly. The poore and the lender mete together, the LORDE lighteneth both their eyes. ^c The seate of the kinge \hat{y} faithfully iudgeth the poore, shal continue sure for euermore. The rodde and correccion mynistr wyszdome, but yf a childe be not loked vnto, be bryngeth his mother to shame. When the vngodly come vp, wickednesse increaseth: but the rightuous shall se their fall. Nurtoure thy sonne with correccion, and he shal comforte the, yee he shal do the good at thine hert. Where no prophet is, there the people perishe: but well is him that kepeth the lawe. A seruaūt wil not be the better for wordes, for though he vnderstonde, yet wil he not regarde them.

Yf thou seyst a man that is haistie to speake vnaduysed, thou mayest trust a foole more then him. He that delicately bryngeth vp his seruaunt from a childe, shal make him his master at length. An angrie man stereth vp strife, and he that beareth euell wyll in his mynde, doth moch euell. ^d After pryde cometh a fall, but a lowly sprete bryngeth greate worship. Who so kepeth company with a thefe, hateth his owne soule: he heareth blasphemies, & telleth it not forth.

He that feareth men, shal haue a fall: but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, shal come to honoure. Many there be that seke \hat{y} prynces fauoure, but euery mans iudgment commeth from the LORDE.

The rightuous abhorre the vngodly: but as for those that be in \hat{y} right waye, \hat{y} wicked hate them.

The xxx. Chapter.

THE prophecie of a true faithfull man, who God hath helped, whom God hath cōforted & norished. For though I am \hat{y} leest of all, & haue no māns vnderstōdige (for I neuer lerned wyszdome) yet haue I vnderstōdige & am well enfourmed in godly thinges. Who hath clymmed vp i to heauen? Who hath come downe from thence?

Who hath holden \hat{y} wynde fast in his hāde? Who hath cōprehended \hat{y} waters in a garment? Who hath set all the endes of \hat{y} worlde? What is his name, or his sonnes name? Canst thou tell? ^a All the wordes of God are pure & cleane, for he is a shyld vnto all them, that put their trust in him. Put thou nothinge therefore vnto his wordes, lest he reprove the, and thou be founde as a liar.

Two thinges I requyre of the, that thou wilt not denye me before I dye. Remoue fro me vanite and lyes: geue me nether pouerte ner riches, only graunte me a necessary luyunge. ^b Lest yf I be to full, I denye \hat{y} , & saye: what felowe is \hat{y} LORDE? And lest I beinge constrained thorow pouerte, fall vnto stealinge, and forswear the name of my God.

Accuse not a seruaunt vnto his master, lest he speake euell of the also, and thou be hurte. He that bryngeth vp an euell reporte vpō the generacion of his father and mother, is not worthy to be commended.

The generacion that thynke them selues cleane, shal not be clenسد from their fylthy-nesse. There are people \hat{y} haue a proude loke, and cast vp their eye lyddes. This peoples tethe are swerdes, and with their chaft bones they consume and deuoure the symple of the earth, and the poore from amonge mē.

This generacion (which is like an horsleche) hath two daughters: \hat{y} one is called, fetch hither: the other, brynge hither.

There be thre thinges that are neuer satisfied, and the fourth saieth neuer hoo. ^c The hell, a womans wombe, and the earth hath neuer water ynough. As for fyre, it sayeth neuer: hoo. "Who so laugheth his father to scorne, and setteth his mothers commaundement at naught: the rauens pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yonge Aegles.

^a There be three thynges to hye for me, and as for the fourth, it passeth my knowlege.

The waye of an Aegle in ȝ ayre, ȝ waye of a serpent ouer ȝ stone, ȝ waye of a shippe in ȝ see, ȝ ȝ waye of a mā with a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyfe ȝ breaketh wedlocke, which wypeth hir mouth like as whā she hath eatē, ȝ sayeth: As for me, I haue done no harme.

Ț Thorow three thynges the earth is disquieted, ȝ the fourth maye it not beare: Thorow a seruāūt ȝ beareth rule, thorow a foole ȝ hath greate riches, thorow an ydle houswife, ȝ thorow an handmayden ȝ is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thynges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wyszdome they excede the wyse. "The Emmettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in ȝ haruest.

The conyes are but a feble folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet go they forth together by heapes. The spyder laboureth with hir hādes, ȝ ȝ in ȝ kynges palace.

There be three thynges ȝ go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the gooddiest of all. A Lyon which is kyng of beastes, ȝ geueth place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāme: And a kyng ȝ goeth forth with his people.

Yf thou be so foolish to magnifie thy self, or medlest with eny soch thyng, thē laye thine hāde vpon thy mouth. Who so chyrneth mylck, maketh butter: he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife.

The rrii. Chapter.

Ȧ THESE are the wordes of Kyng Lamuel, ȝ ȝ lesson ȝ his mother taught him. My sonne, thou sonne of my body: O my deare beloued sonne, geue not ouer thy substaunce ȝ mynde vnto women, which are the destrucciō euē of kynges. O Lamuel, geue kinges no wyne, geue kynges ȝ prynces no stronge drynke: lest they beinge drunken forget the lawe, ȝ regarde not ȝ cause of the poore, ȝ of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condemned to death, ȝ wyne vnto those ȝ mourne: that they maye drynke it, ȝ forget their misery ȝ aduersite. Be thou an aduocate ȝ stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dōme ȝ sucourles. With thy mouth defende ȝ thyng ȝ is lauffull and right, and ȝ cause of ȝ poore and helplesse.

Who so fyndeth an honest faithful womā, ȝ she is moch more worth thē perles. The herte of hir husbände maye safelye trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyles.

She wil do him good ȝ not euel all ȝ dayes of hir life. She occupieth woll ȝ flax, ȝ laboureth gladly with hir handes. She is like a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth hir vytayles from farre. She is vp in ȝ night season, to prouyde meate for hir housholde, ȝ foode for hir maydens. She considreth lōde, ȝ byeth it, and with the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrdeth hir loynes with strength, and courageth hir armes. And yf she perceaue that hir houswifrie doth good, hir candle goeth not out by night. She layeth hir fyngers to the spyndle, ȝ hir hande taketh holde of ȝ rocke.

She openeth hir hande to ȝ poore, yee she stretcheth forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not ȝ the colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir housholde folkes are duple clothed. She maketh hir self fayre ornamētes, hir clothēge is whyte sylke ȝ purple. Hir huszbāde is moch set by in ȝ gates, whē he sytteth amonge ȝ rulers of ȝ londe. She maketh cloth of sylke ȝ selleth it, and de-lyuereth a gyrdle vnto ȝ marchaūt.

Strēgth and honoure is hir clothinge, ȝ in the latter daye she shal reioyce. She openeth hir mouth with wyszdome, ȝ in hir tōge is the lawe of grace. She loketh wel to the wayes of hir housholde, ȝ eateth not hir bred with ydilnes. Hir children arise ȝ call hir blessed, ȝ hir husbānde maketh moch of her. Many daughters there be ȝ gather riches together, but thou goest aboute thē all. As for fauoure, it is disceatfull, and beutie is a vayne thyng: but a woman that feareth the LORDE, she is worthy to be prayseed. Geue her of the frute of hir handes, and let hir owne workes prayse her in the gates.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

All thinges (yf a mā wyl cōsidre them wel) are but vanite. Neuertheles amōge them all there is nothige weaker and more vnstedfast, then man him self.

Chap. II.

In this chapter (and in the other also) he maketh oft tymes mēcion of the wordes and cōuersaciō of the vngodly: that by this meanes he maye the better cause men to despyse all creatures, in respecte of the only euerlastinge God.

Chap. III.

Euery thinge bath a tyme. There is no thige, but God hath put tedyousnesse and trauayle in it, to exercise men withall. What so euer a man enioyeth of his laboure, the same is a gift of God, geuen to the intent that men shulde feare him.

Chap. IIII.

A cōsideracion of diuerse thinges. There is nothinge so excellent and hye, but yf it do not the deuty and office where vnto it is ordered, it shalbe brought lowe.

Chap. V.

Agaynst foolish and temerarious vowes. Let no man maruayle that so moch euell is done, for the wicked are many. Agaynst the riche and agaynst riches.

Chap. VI.

Agaynst those riche mē that darre not enioye their riches: how mad and foolish they be.

Chap. VII.

No man knoweth what is for to come. How worthy a thige it is to haue a good name. The profit of wysdome.

Chap. VIII.

Of the obediēce which men owe vnto God and to their heades. The lōge sufferance of God is not to be despised. It is not possible for eny mā, to cōprehende the workes that be in the worlde.

Chap. IX.

Like thinges happen vnto all men: therfore with myrth and thankfulness shulde men enioye the giftes of God. Wysdome passeth all thinges.

Chap. X. XI.

In these two chapters are many wyse and profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of euery man.

Chap. XII.

In this chapter the preacher sheweth his whole meanynge, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the concludion, that there is nothyng stedfast and durable but God himself, whō men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmaundementes before their eyes euen from their youth vp.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the Preacher, the sonne of Dauid, kynge of Ierusalem.

hath a mā, of all the laboure y^e he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generaciō passeth awaye, another commeth, but the earth abyedeth still. The Sōne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, y^e he maye there ryse vp agayne. The wynde goeth towarde ſouth, & fetcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, & so turneth in to himselfe agayne. ^aAll floudes runne in to the see, & yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, & no mā can expresse them. ^bThe eye is not satisfied with sight, the eare is not fylled with hearinge.

B The thinge ſhath bene, cōmeth to passe agayne: & ſhath bene done, is done agayne, there is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge agoe in the tymes ſhath bene before vs. The thinge ſhath is past, is out of remēbrance: Euē so the thinges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vpon amōge thē that come after. I myself ſhath Preacher, beyng kynge of Israel & Ierusalē, applyed my mynde to seke out & search for the knowlege of all thinges ſhath are done vnder heauē. Soch trauayle & labour hath God geuē vnto ſhath childrē of mā, to exercise thē selues therin.

C Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sōne, & lo, they are all but vanite & vexacion of mynde. The croked can not be mayde straight, & the fautes cā not be nōbred. I cōmoned with myne owne herte, sayēge: lo, I am come to a greate estate, and haue gottē more wysdome, thē all they ſhath haue bene before me in Ierusalem. Yee my hert had greate experiēce of wysdome & knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: ſhath I might knowe what were wysdome & vnderstōdinge, what were erreure & foolishnes. And I perceaued ſhath this also was but a vexacion of mynde: for where moche wysdome is, there is also greate trauayle & disquietnes: & ſhath more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

The ij. Chapter.

A THĒ sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moche that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art madd, and to myrth: what doest thou?

So I thought in my herte, to withdrawe my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wysdome, and to comprehendē foolishnes, vntill the tyme that (amonge all ſhath thinges which are vnder ſhath Sonne) I might se what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

^dI made gorgious fayre workes, I buylded me houses, and planted vynyards: I made me orchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. ^eI made poles of water, to water ſhath grene and frutefull trees withall. I bought seruantes and maydēs, and had a greate housholde. As for catell and shepe, I had more substaunce of them, then all they ſhath were before me in Ierusalem. I gathered syluer & golde together, euen a treasure of kynges & londes.

I prouided me syngers and womē which B coude playe of instrumentes, to make men myrth and pastime. I gat me drynkyng cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) I was greater & in more worshippe, then all my predecessours in Ierusalē. For wysdome remayned with me: & loke what so euer myne eyes desyred, I let them haue it: & wherin so euer my herte deliyted or had eny pleasure, I withhelde it not frō it. Thus my hert reioyced in all ſhath I dyd, and this I toke for the porcion of all my trauayle. But whan I considered all the workes ſhath my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therein: lo, all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, & nothinge of eny value vnder ſhath Sonne. Then turned I me to considre wysdome, erreure and foolishnesse (for what is he amonge men, that might be compared to me ſhath kynge in soch workes?) and I sawe, that wysdome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole goeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

C Then thought I in my mynde: Yf it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what nedeth me then to labour eny more for wysdome? So I confessed within my harte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembraunce as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as ſhath foole. Thus begāne I to be weery of my life, in so moche that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite & vexacion of mynde: Yee I was weery of all my labour, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, because I shulde be fayne to leaue them vnto another man, that cometh after me: for who knoweth, whether he shalbe a wyse mā or a foole? And yet shal he be lorde of all my labours, which I with soch wysdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

¶ So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all soch trauayle, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for so much as a man shulde weery him self with wysdome, with vnderstandinge and opportunitie, and yet be fayne to leaue his labours vnto another, y^e neuer swett for them. This is also a vayne thinge and a greate misery. For what getteth a mā of all y^e labour & trauayle of his mynde, y^e he taketh vnder the Sonne, but heynesse, sorowe & disquyetnes all y^e dayes of his life? In so moch that his herte can not rest in the night. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his soule to be mery in his labour? Yee I sawe that this also was a gifte of God: "For who maye eate, drynke, or brynge eny thinge to passe without him? And why? he geueth vnto mā, what it pleaseth him: whether it be wysdome, vnderstandinge, or gladnesse. But vnto the synner he geueth weerynes and sorow, that he maye gather and heape together y^e thinge, y^e afterwarde shalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaseth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very disquietnesse and vexaciō of mynde.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ EVERY thinge hath a tyme, yee all that is vnder the heauen, hath is conuenient season. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. ^a There is a tyme to plāte, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, y^e is planted: A tyme to slaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to daunce: A tyme to cast awaye stones, and a tyme to gather stones together: A tyme to embrace, & a tyme to refrayne from embracing: A tyme to wyne, and a tyme to lese: A tyme to spare, and a tyme to spende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to sowe together: ^a A tyme to kepe sylence, and a tyme to speake: A tyme to loue, & a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a mā els (that doth eny thinge) but weerynesse and labour? For as touching the trauayle and carefulnesse which God hath geuen vnto mē, I se that he hath geuen it them, to be exercised in it. All this hath he ordered maruelous goodly, to euery thinge his due tyme. He hath plāted ignorance also in the hertes of men, y^e they shulde not fynde out y^e grounde of his workes, which he doth from y^e beginninge to y^e ende. So I perceaued, y^e in these thinges there is no-thinge better for a man, thē to be mery & to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all y^e a man eateth & drynketh, yee what so euer a mā enioyeth of all his labour, y^e same is a gift of God. I cōsidered also y^e what so euer God doth, it cōtinueth for euer, & y^e nothinge can be put vnto it ner takē from it: & y^e God doth it to y^e intent, y^e men shulde feare him. "The thinge y^e hath bene, is now: & the thinge y^e is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Morouer, I sawe vnder y^e Sonne, vngodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, & iniquite in steade of rightuousnesse.

Then thought I in my mynde: God shal separate the rightuous from the vngodly, & then shal be the tyme & iudgmēt of all coun-cels & workes. I cōmoned with myne owne herte also cōcernynge the childre of men: how God hath chosen them, and yet letteth thē apeare, as though they were beastes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beastes, & as the one dyeth, so dyeth y^e other: yee they haue both one maner of breth, so y^e (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are subdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of dust, so shal they all turne vnto dust agayne.

"Who knoweth the sprete of man y^e goeth vpwarde, and the breth of the beest y^e goeth downe in to the earth? Wherefore I perceauē, y^e there is nothinge better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his labour, for that is his porcion. But who wil brynge him to se the thinge, that shal come after him?

The iiii. Chapter.

¶ SO I turned me, and considered all the violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the teares of soch as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde deliuer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherefore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then such as be alyue: yee him that is yet vnborne to be better at ease thē they both, because he seith not the miserable workes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all traually and diligence of labour was hated of euery man. This is also a vaine thinge, and a vexacion of mynde. The foole foldeth his handes together, & eateth vp his owne flesh. One handfull (saith he) is better with rest, thē both 33 33 handes full with labour and traually. Morouer, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauynge nether childe ner brother: yet is there no ende of his careful traually, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, & saye:) For whom do I take such traually? For whose pleasure do I thus consume awaye my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therefore two are better then one, for they maye well enioye the profit of their labour. Yf one of them fall, his companion helpeth him vp agayne: But wo is him that is alone, for yf he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be ouercome, but two maye make resistaunce: A threefolde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyng wyse, is better then an olde kinge, that doteth, and can not bewarre in tyme to come. C C Some one commeth out of preson, & is made a kyng: & another which is borne in the kyngdome, commeth vnto pouerte. And I perceaued, 33 33 yf all men lyuynge vnder the Sonne, go with the seconde childe, that commeth vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their ioye the greater thorow him. This is also a vayne thinge and a vexacion of mynde. When thou comdest in to the house of God, kepe thy fote, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare: 33 33 that is better then the offeringes of fooles, for they knowe not what euell they do.

The b. Chapter.

2 2 BE not hastie with thy mouth, & let not thine hert speake eny thige rashly before God. For God is in heauen, & thou vpon earth, therefore let thy wordes be fewe. For where moch carefulnesse is, there are many dreames: & where many wordes are, there men maye heare fooles. Yf thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke to performe it. As for foolish vowes, he hath no pleasure in them. Yf thou promyse eny thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shuldest promise, and not paye. Vse not thy mouth to cause thy flesh for to synne, 2 2 yf thou saye not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in yf faute.

For thē God wil be angrie at thy voyce, and destroye all yf workes of thine handes.

And why? where as are many dreames & many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: 2 2 but loke yf thou feare God. Yf thou seyst the poore to be oppressed and wrongeously dealt withall, so yf equite & the right of the lawe is wraisted in the londe: maruell not thou at soch iudgmēt, for one greates mā kepeth touch with another, and the mightie helpe thē selues together. The whole londe also with the felde and all that is therin, is in subieccion and bondage vnto yf kinge.

He that loueth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so delyteth in riches, shal haue no profit therof. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them awaye. And what pleasure more hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouringe man slepeth swetely, whether it be litle or moch that he eateth: 33 33 but the abundance of the riche wil not suffre him to slepe.

Yet is there a sore plague, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepthe to the hurte of him yf hath them in possession.

For oft times they perishe with his greates misery and trouble: and yf he haue a childe, it getteth nothinge. Like as he came naked out of his mothers wombe, so goeth he thither agayne, and carieth nothinge awaye with him of all his labour. This is a miserable plague, C C yf he shal go awaye euen as he came. helpeth it him then, [†] he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darcke, with greate carefulness, sicknesse & sorow.

“Therefore me thinke it a better and a fayrer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his laboure, [†] he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God geueth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his laboure: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The vi. Chapter.

THERE is yet a plage vnder [†] Sonne, & it is a generall thinge amonge mē: when God geueth a man riches, goodes & honoure, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desyre: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spēdeth them. This is a vayne thinge & a miserable plage. Yf a man begett an hundred children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in nombre, and yet can not enioye his good, nether be buried: as for him I saye, that an vntymely byrth is better then he. For he cometh to naught, & goeth his waye in to darcknes, and his name is forgotten. Morouer, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of no rest nether here ner there: Yee though he lyued two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the laboure that a man taketh, is for himself, and yet his desyre is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the foole? What helpeth it the poore, that he knoweth to walke before the lyuynge? The sight of the eyes is better, then that the soule shulde so departe awaye. Howbeit this is also a vayne thinge and a disquietnesse of mynde. What is more excellent then man? yet can he not in the lawe get the victory of him that is mightier the he: A vayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but what hath a man els?

The vij. Chapter.

FOR who knoweth what is good for man lyuynge, in [†] dayes of his vayne life, which is but a shadowe? Or, who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? ^a A good name is more worth then a precious oyntment, and the daye of death is better thē [†] daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mournynge, then in to a banquet house. For there is the ende of all men, and he that is lyuynge, taketh it to herte. It is better to be sory then to laugh, for whē the countenance is heuy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of [†] wyse is in the mournynge house, but the hert of the foolish is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, ^c then to heare the songe of fooles. For the laughynge of fooles is like [†] crackynge of thornes vnder a pott. And [†] is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnynge. The pacient of sprete is better then the hie mynded. Be not haistely angrie in thy mynde, for wrath resteth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that [†] dayes of [†] olde tyme were better, then they [†] be now? for that were no wyse question. Wyszdome is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wyszdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wyszdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Considre the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Vse well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of mysfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

These ij. thiges also haue I cōsidred in [†] tyme of vanite: [†] the iust man perisheth for his rightuousnes sake, & the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therefore be thou nether to rightuous ner ouer wyse, ^d [†] thou perish not: be nether to vnrightuous also ner to foolish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, & not to let [†] go out of thy hande. For he [†] feareth God shal escape them all.

“Wyszdome geueth more corage vnto the wyse, then ten mightie men of the citie: for there is not one iust vpō earth, [†] doth good, & sinneth not. Take not hede vnto euery worde \hat{y} is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruuaunt curse the: for thine owne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokē euell by other men. All these thinges haue

 I proued because of wyszdome: ^cfor I thought to be wyse, but she wente farther from me then she was before, yee α so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to seke out sciēce, wisdom and vnderstandinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erroure of dotinge fooles. And I founde, ^bthat a woman is bytter then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are cheynes.
 Who so pleaseth God shal escape from her,
 but the synner will be taken with her.

Beholde (sayeth \hat{y} preacher) this haue I diligently searched out α proued, \hat{y} I might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge
 all. ^cLo, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust α right, but they seke dyuerse sotylties, where as no man hath wyszdome α vnderstōdinge, to geue answer there vnto.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME maketh a mā's face to shyne, ^dbut malice putteth it out of fauoure. Kepe the kynges commaundemēt (I warne the) α the ooth \hat{y} thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistie to go out of his sight, α se thou cōtynue in no euell thinge:
 for what so euer it pleaseth him, \hat{y} doeth he.
 Like as when a kyng geueth a charge, his commaundement is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou? ^eWho so kepe the commaundement, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunitie and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulness α sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyll tell him? Nether is there eny mā \hat{y} hath power ouer \hat{y} sprete, to kepe stil \hat{y} sprete, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, nether maye vngodlynes deluyuer him \hat{y} medleth withall.

B All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto euery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lordshipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene \hat{y} vngodly^f brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch \hat{y} they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye α greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistly punyshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offendeth an hundreth tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with thē that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the vngodly, it shall not be well with him, nether shal he prologe his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shall he be that feareth not God.

Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There C be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly: Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of \hat{y} righteous.
 This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therfore I commende gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his laboure all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne.
 When I applied my mynde to lerne wyszdome, and to knowe the traualle that is in the worlde (and that of soch a fashion, \hat{y} I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner night) I vnderstode of all \hat{y} workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto \hat{y} workes that are done vnder \hat{y} Sonne: and though he bestowe his laboure to seeke them out, yet can he not reach vnto thē: yee though a wyse man wolde vndertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

The ix. Chapter.

FOR all these thinges purposed I in my A mynde to seke out. The righteous and wyse yee and their workes also are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth with the right-uous as with the vngodly: ^gwith the good α cleane as with the vncleane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not: like as it goeth with the vertuous, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is afraied to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges \hat{y} come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, & madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

35 And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyk dogg (saye they) is better the a deed lion: for they that be lyuynge, knowe \hat{y} they shall dye: but they \hat{y} be deed, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgottē, so \hat{y} they be nether loued, hated ner envyed: nether haue they eny more parte in \hat{y} worlde, in all \hat{y} is done vnder the Sonne. Go thou thy waye then, eate thy bred with ioye, & drynke thy wyne with gladnesse, for thy workes please God. Let thy garmētes be all waye whyte,^a & let thy heade want no oyntmēt. ^bVse thy self to lyue ioyfully with thy wife whom thou louest, all \hat{y} daies of thy life (which is but vayne) \hat{y} God hath geuē the vnder the Sonne, all \hat{y} dayes of thy vanite: for \hat{y} is thy porcion in this life, of all thy laboure & trauayle \hat{y} thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so euer thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amōge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, counsell, knowledge ner wysdome.

So I turned me vnto other thinges vnder \hat{y} Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift: in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to fedyng, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll: to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be connyng: but that all lyeth in tyme & fortune. ^cFor a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fyshe are takē with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched with the snare: Euē so are men taken in the perilous tyme, when it commeth sodenly vpon them.

36 This wysdome haue I sene also vnder \hat{y} Sōne, & me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, & a few mē within it: so there came a greate kynge & beseged it, & made greate bulworkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which with his wysdome delyuered the cite: yet was there no body, \hat{y} had eny respecte vnto soch a symple man. Then sayde I: wysdome is better then strength. ^dNeuertheles, a symple mans wysdome is despyed, & his wordes are not herde. A wise mans counsell that is folowed in sylence, is farre aboute the crienge of a captaine amōge fooles. For wysdome is better then harness: ^ebut one vnthrif alone destroyeth moch good.

The x. Chapter.

DEED flyes \hat{y} corruppe swete oyntment & 37 make it to styncke, are somthinge more worth then the wysdome & honoure of a foole. A wyse mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooler hert is vpon the left. A dotinge foole thinketh, \hat{y} euery mā doth as foolishly as himself. Yf a principall sprete be geuē the to beare rule,^f be not negligēt thē in thine office: for so shal greate wickednesse be put downe, as it were with a medecyne. Another plage is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely, \hat{y} ignoraunce \hat{y} is comonly amonge prynces: in \hat{y} a foole sytteth in greate dignite, & the rich are sett downe beneth: I se seruantes ryde vpon horses, & prynces goinge vpon their fete as it were seruantes. ³⁸But he \hat{y} dygeth vp a pytt, shall fall therin himself: & who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal byte him. Who so remoueth stones, shall haue trauayle withall: and he that heweth wod, shalbe hurt therwith.

When an yron is blont, and \hat{y} poynt not sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wysdome folowe diligence. A babler of his tonge is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge. The wordes out of a wyse mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnynge of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclusion? The laboure of \hat{y} foolish is greuous vnto thē, while they knowe not how to go in to the cite.

Wo be vnto the (O thou realme and londe) 39 whose kynge is but a childe, and whose prynces are early at their banquettes. But well is the (O thou realme and londe) whose kinge is come of nobles, and whose prynces eate in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thorow slouthfulnesse the balkes fall downe, and thorow ydle hādes it rayneth in at the house. Meate maketh men to laugh,^a and wyne maketh them mery: but vnto money are all things obedient. Wysh the kynge no euell in thy thought, and speake no hurte of ȝ ryche in thy preuy chambre: for a byrde of the ayre shal betraye thy voyce, and with hir fethers shal she bewraye thy wordes.

The xi. Chapter.

S ENDE thy vytayles ouer the waters, and so shalt thou fynde thē after many yeaeres. Geue it awaye amonge seuen or eight, for thou knowest not what misery shal come vpō earth. Whē the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth. And whē ȝ tre falleth, (whether it be towarde the south or north) in what place so euer it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth ȝ wynde, shal not sowe: and he that hath respecte vnto the cloudes, shal not reape. Now like as thou knowest not the waye of the wynde, ner how ȝ bones are fylled in a mothers wombe: Euen so thou knowest not the workes of God, which is the workemaster of all.

Cease not thou therfore with thy handes to sowe thy sede, whether it be in ȝ mornyng or in the euenyng: for thou knowest not whether this or that shal prospere, & yf they both take, it is the better. The light is swete, & a pleasaunt thinge is it for the eyes to loke vpon the Sonne. Yf a man lyue many yeaeres, and be glad in them all, let him remembre the dayes of darknesse, which shal be many: & when they come, all thinges shal be but vanite. Be glad then (O thou yonge man) in thy youth, and lat thine hert be mery in thy yonge dayes: folowe the wayes of thine owne hert, and the lust of thine eyes: but be thou sure, that God shal bringe the in to iudgment for all these thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

P UT awaye displeasure out of thy hert, & remoue euell from thy body: for childe-

hode and youth is but vanite. Remembre thy maker in thy youth, or euer the dayes of aduersite come, and or the yeaeres drawe nye, when thou shalt saye: I haue no pleasure in them: before the Sonne, ȝ light, ȝ Moone and the starres be darkened, and or the cloudes turne agayne after the rayne: when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and when the stronge men shal bowe them selues: when the Myllers stonde still because they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shal waxe dymme: whan the dores in the stretes shal be shutt, and whan ȝ voyce of the Myller shal be layed downe: whan men shall ryse vp at the voyce of the byrde, and whan all ȝ daughters of musyck shalbe brought lowe: whan men shal feare in hye places, and be afrayed in the stretes: whan the Almonde tre shalbe despysed, the greshopper borne out, and whan greate pouerte shall breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go aboute the stretes. Or euer the syluer lace be taken awaye, and or the golden bende be broken: Or the pott be broken at the well, & the whele vpon the Cisterne: Or ^ddust be turned agayne vnto earth from whence it came, and or the sprete returne vnto God, which gaue it. ^eAll is but vanite (sayeth the preacher) all is but playne vanite.

The same preacher was not wyse alone, but taught the people knowlege also: he gaue good hede, sought out the groude and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of trueth. ^fFor the wordes of ȝ wyse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherwith men are kepte together: for they are geuen of one shepherde onely. Therfore bewarre (my sonne) that aboute these thou make the not many & innumerable bokes, nor take dyuerse doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body withall.

Lat vs heare the concludon of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe his comaundementes, for that toucheth all men: For God shall iudge all workes and secrete thinges, whether they be good or euell.

Cantica Canticorum.

The first Chapter.

A O THAT thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, & that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. "Thy name is a swete smellynge oyntment, therefore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

The kynge hath brought me in to his preuy chambre. We wil be glad & reioyce in the, we thynke more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

B I am black (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes,^a and as the hanginges of Salomon: but yet am I faire & welfaoured withal. Maruell not at me $\frac{y}{f}$ I am so black, & why? $\frac{y}{f}$ Sonne hath shyned vpō me. For whan my mothers childrē had euell wil at me, they made me $\frac{y}{f}$ keper of the vynyarde. Thus was I fayne to kepe a vynyarde, which was not myne owne.

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loueth) where thou fedest, where thou retest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companions.

Yf thou knowe not thy self (o thou fayrest amōge women) thā go thy waye forth after $\frac{y}{f}$ fotesteppes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede thy goates besyde $\frac{y}{f}$ shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary for the (my loue) with myne hoost & with my charettes, which shal be no fewer then Pharaos.^c

C Then shal thy chekes & thy neck be made fayre, & hanged with spāges & goodly iewels: a neck bande of golde wil we make $\frac{y}{f}$ with syluer bottoms. When the kynge sytteth at the table, he shal smell my Nardus: for a bōdell of Myrre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cypers, or of the vynyardes of Engaddi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

"O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well faoured art thou? Oure bed is decte with floures, $\frac{y}{f}$ sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, & oure balkes of Cypressse.

The ij. Chapter.

I AM the floure of the felde, and lylie of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters.

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He bryngeth me in to his wyne seller, and loueth me specially well. Refresh me with grapes, cōforte me with apples, for I am sick of loue. His left hāde lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) by the Roes & hyndes of the felde, $\frac{y}{f}$ ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

Me thynke I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there commeth he hoppinge vpon $\frac{y}{f}$ mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roo or a yonge hart. Beholde, he stondest behynde oure wall, he loketh in at the wyndowe, & pepeth thorow the grate.

The floures are come vp in the felde, the twystringe tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle doue is herde in oure londe. The fyge tre bryngeth forth hir fyges, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

C O stōde vp my loue, my beutyfull, and come (my doue) out of the caues of the rockes, out of the holes of the wall: O let me se thy countenance and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. Gett vs the foxes, yee the litle foxes that hurte & vyne, for oure vyne beare blossoms.

^a My loue is myne, and I am his, (which fedeth amōge the lylies) vntill the daye breake, and till the shadowes be gone. Come agayne preuely (o my beloued) like as a Roo or a yonge harte vnto the mountaynes.

The iij. Chapter.

A BY night in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loueth: yee diligently sought I him, but I founde him not. I wil get vp (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all & stretes wil I seke him whom my soule loueth, but whan I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute & cite, founde me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loueth?

So whan I was a litle past them, I fōude him whom my soule loueth. I haue gotten holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go, vntill I brynge him in to my mothers house, and in to hir chambre that bare me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) by the Roes and hyndes of the felde, ^b that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

B Who is this, that commeth out of & wyl-dernesse like pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myrre, frankencense and all maner spyes of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboute Salomōs bedsteade there stonde LX. valeaunt men of the mightie in Israel. They holde swerdes euery one, & are experte in warre. Euery man hath his swerde vpō his thee, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bed-steade of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the coueringe of golde, & seate of purple, & grounde pleasauntly pauer for the daughters of Ierusalem.

Go forth (o ye daughters of Sion) and be-holde kynge Salomon in the crowne, wherwith his mother crowned him in the daye of his mariage, and in the daye of the gladnesse of his hert.

The iij. Chapter.

O HOW fayre art thou^c (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within. ^d Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clypped, which go first vp from the washing place: where euery one beareth two twyns, and not one vnfrutefull amōge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured rybende, thy wordes are louely: thy chekes are like a peece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyed hyd within. Thy neck is like the tower of Dauid buylded with bulworkes, wher vpon there hāge a thousande sheldes, yee all the weapē of the gĩautes. Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes, which fede amōge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myrre, and to the hyll of frankynsense: till the daye breake, and till the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spot is there in the.

B Come to me from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus: come soone the next waye from the toppe of Amana, from the toppe of Sanir and Hermon, from the Lyons dennes and from the mountaynes of & leopards. Thou hast wōided my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one cheyne of thy neck. O how fayre and louely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse? Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the hony combe, yee mylck and hony is vnder thy tonge, and the smell of thy garmentes is like the smell of frankynsense.

C Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water spryng, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradise of pōgranates with swete frutes: as Cyresse, Nardus, Saffron,

Calmus, and all the trees of Libanus: Myrre, Aloes, and all the best spyses. Thou art a well of gardens, a well of luyngge waters, which renne downe from Libanus. Vp thou northwynde, come thou southwynde, and blowe vpō my gardē, that the smell therof maye be caried on euery syde: Yee that my beloued maye come in to my garden, & eate of the frutes and apples that growe therin.

The b. Chapter.

COME in to my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myrre with my spyce, I wil eate my hony and my hony cōbe, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylk. Eate (o ye frendes) drynke and be mery, o ye beloued.

As I was a slepe, & my hert wakyngge, I herde the voyce of my beloued, whā he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue, my doue, my derlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and y^e lockes of my hayre are full of the night droppes.

I haue put off my cote, how cā I do it on agayne? I haue washed my fete, how shal I fyle them agayne? But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued towarde him: so that I stode vp to open vnto my beloued. My hādes dropped with Myrre, & the Myrre ranne downe my fyngers vpon y^e lock. Neuerthelesse whā I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

Now like as afore tyme whan he spake, my hert coude no longer refrayne: Euen so now I sought hī, but I coude not fynde him: I cried vpon him, neuerthelesse he gaue me no answere. So the watchmen that wente aboute the cite, fōude me, smote me, and wounded me: Yee they that kepte the walles, toke awaye my garmēt fro me. I charge you therfore (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) yf ye fynde my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for loue.

Who is thy loue aboue other louers, O thou fayrest amonge wemen? Or, what can thy loue do, more then other louers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my loue, he is whyte and reade coloured, a synguler personne amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are bussshed, browne as the euenynge: His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the water brokes, washen with mylck, and remaynyng in a plenteous place: His chekes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaryes plāte all maner of swete thinges: His lippes droppe as the floures of the most pryncipall Myrre, his hādes are full of golde rynges and precious stones. His body is as the pure yuery, decte ouer with Saphyres: His legges are as the pilers of Marbell, sett vpon sokettes of golde: His face is as Libanus, and as the bewty of the Cedre trees: His throte is swete, yee he is alltogether louely. Soch one is my loue (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) soch one is my loue.

Whither is thy loue gone thē (o thou fayrest amonge wemē) whither is thy loue departed, that we maye seke him with the?

The bi. Chapter.

MY loue is gone downe in to his garden, vnto y^e swete smellinge beddes, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather floures. My loue is myne, and I am his, which fedeth amonge the lilies.

Thou art pleasaunt (o my loue) euen as louelynesse itself, thou art fayre as Ierusalem, glorious as an armye of men with their baners. (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for they make me to proude.) Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of goates vpon y^e mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe y^e be clypped, which go out of the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, & not one vnfrutefull amōge them. Thy chekes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes y^e which lyeth hid within. There are thre score quenes, foure score concubynes, and yonge wemē without nombre. But one is my doue, my derlyngge. She is the onely beloued of hir mother, & deare vnto her that bare her. Whā the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: Yee the quenes and concubines praysed her. What is she this, that pepeth out as the mornynge? fayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armye of men with their banners?

I wente downe in to the nutt garden, to se what grew by the brokes, to lōke yf the vnyarde flourished, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of the prynce of my people made me sodenly afayed. Turne again, turne againe (O thou Sulamite) turne again, turne againe, that we maye loke vpon the.

The vij. Chapter.

WHAT pleasure haue ye more in y^e Sula-mite, than when she daunseth amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaunt are thy treadings with thy shues, thou prynces daughter? Thy thees are like a fayre iewell, which is wrought by a connyng workmaster: Thy nauell is like a rounde goblett, which is neuer without drynke: Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, sett aboute with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes:
Thy neck is as it were a tower of uery:
Thyne eyes are like y^e water poles in Hesebon, besyde the porte of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which loketh toward Damascus: That heade that stondest vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like the kynges purple folden vp in plates.

O how fayre and louely art thou (my derlyng) in pleasures? Thy stature is like a date tre, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clymme vp in to the date tre, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes also shalbe as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrels like the smell of apples, and thy throate like the best wyne.

This shalbe pure & cleare for my loue, his lippes and teth shal haue their pleasure.
There wil I turne me vnto my loue, and he shal turne him vnto me. O come on my loue, let vs go forth in to the felde, and take oure lodginge in the vyllages. In the mornynge wil we ryse by tymes, and go se the vynyarde:
yf it be sponge forth, yf the grapes be growne, & yf the pomgranates be shott out. There wil I geue the my brestes: There shal the Mandraboras geue thei smell besyde oure dores: There (o my loue) haue I kepte vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and olde.

The vij. Chapter.

O THAT I might fynde the without & kysses y^e, whom I loue as my brother which suckte my mothers brestes: & that thou woldest not be offended, yf I toke the and brought the in to my mothers house: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spiced wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. "His left hande lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, tyll she be content herself. What is she this,
that cometh vp from the wildernes, and leaneth vpon hir loue? I am the same that waked the vp amonge the aple trees, where thy mother beare y^e, where thy mother brought the in to the worlde.

O set me as a seale vpō thine hert, and as a seale vpon thine arme: for loue is mightie as the death, & gelousy as the hell. Hir coales are of fyre, and a very flamme of the LORDE:
so y^e many waters are not able to quench loue, nether maye y^e streames drowne it. Yee yf a man wolde geue all the good of his house for loue, he shulde counte it nothinge.

When oure loue is tolde oure yonge sister, whose brestes are not yet growne, what shal we do vnto her? Yf she be a wall, we shal buyld a syluer bollworke there vpon: Yf she be a tower, we shal festen her with bordes of Cedre tre.

Yf I be a wall, & my brestes like towres, & then am I as one that hath founde fauoure in his sight.

Salomon had a vynyarde at Baal Hamon, this vynyarde deliuered he vnto the keepers:
y^e euery one for the frute therof shulde geue him a thousande peces of syluer. But my vynyarde (o Salomon) geueth the a thousande, and two hundredth to y^e keepers of the frute.

Thou that dwellest in the gardens, O let me heare thy voyce, that my companions maye herken to the same. O get the awaye (my loue) as a roo or a yonge hert vnto the swete smellinge mountaynes.

THIS is the prophecy of Esay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Iuda and Ierusalem: In the tyme of Osias, Ioathan, Ahas, and Ezechias kynges of Iuda.

The first Chapter.

HEARE o heauen, herken o earth,^a for the LORDE speaketh: I haue no-rished ⁊ brought vp children, and they are fallen awaye fro me. An oxe knoweth his lorde, and an Asse his masters stall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no vnderstandinge. Alas for this synful people, which are experte in blasphemies, a frawerde generacion, vnnatural children. ^b They haue forsaken the LORDE, they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherefore shulde ye be plagued eny more? For ye are euer fallinge awaye.
 The whole heade is sick, and the herte is very heuy. ^c From the sole of the foote vnto the heade, there is no whole parte in all youre body: but all are woundes, botches, sores and strypes, which can nether be helped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with eny oyntment.

^d Youre londe lieth waist, youre cities are brent vp, youre enemies deuoure youre londe, and ye must be fayne to stonde, and loke vpon it: and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Morouer ^e y daughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vynyarde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a beseged citie. And excepte the LORDE of 33
 hostes had left vs a fewe alyue: ^f we shulde haue bene as Sodoma, ⁊ like vnto Gomorra.

^g Heare the worde of the LORDE ye tyrauntes of Sodoma: and herken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra.
 Why offre ye so many sacrifices vnto me?
 I am discontent for the brentoffringes of wethers, and with ^h y fatnesse of fedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the bloude of bullockes, lambes and gootes. When ye apeare before me, who requyrenth you to treade within my porches? Offre me no mo oblations, for it is but lost labour. ⁱ I abhorre youre incense.

I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, youre Sabbathes and solempne dayes. ^a Your fastinges are also in vayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen fro my very harte. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out youre hondes, ^b yet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

C Wash you, make you cleane, ^c put awaye youre euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, de-lyuer the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complaynte come before you. Now go to (saith the LORDE) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though youre synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shall they not be like whyte woll? Is it not so? Yf ye be lounge ^d obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. ^e But yf ye be obstinate and rebellious, ye shalbe deuoured with the swerde: for thus the LORDE hath promised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the righteous citie (which was full of equite) is become vnfaithfull as an whore? righteousness dwelt in it, but now murthur. Thy Siluer is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myxte with water. Thy prynces are traytours and companions of theues. ^f They loue giftes altogether, and folowe rewardes. As for the fatherles, they helpe him not to his right, nether wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therefore speaketh the LORDE God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah I must ease me of myne enemies, and a venge me vpon the. And therefore shal I laye my honde vpon thee, and burne out thy drosse from the fynest and purest, and put out all thy leade, ^g and set thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from ^h begynnynge. ⁱ Then shalt thou be called the righteous citie, the faithful citie. But Sion shalbe redemed with equyte, and hyr captiuyte with righteousness. For the transgressours and vngodly, and such as are become vnfaithfull vnto the

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oke-trees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardes that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as an oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, ^j and as a garden that hath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to drie strawe, ^k and he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER this is the worde that was ^l opened vnto Esaye the sonne of Amos, vpon Iuda and Ierusalem. It will be also in processe of tyme: ^m That the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shalbe ⁿ chefe amōge hilles, and exalted aboue al litle hilles. ^o And al heithē shal prease vnto him and the multitude of people shall go vnto him, speakinge thus one to another: ^p vp, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of ^q God of Iacob: ^r he maye shewe us his waye, ^s and ^t we maye walke in his pathes. For ^u lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swerdes and speares, to make sythes, cycles ^v and sawes therof.

And therefore get y^e soone in to some rock, "and hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from y^e glory of his Magestie. Which casteth downe y^e high lokes of presumptuous personnes, "and bryngeth lowe the pryde of mā, and he only shall be exalted in y^e daye. For the daye of y^e LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde & presumptio, vpon all thē that exalte thē selues, and shal bringe them all downe: vpō all high & stoute Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all costly towres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thinge y^e is glorious and pleasaunt to loke vpon.

"And it shall bringe downe the pryde of man, "and laye mans presumptuousnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the victory in that daye. "But the Idols shal utterly be roted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, "and in to caues of the earth, from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from the glory of his magesty: "what tyme as he shal make him vp to shake the earth. Then, thē shal mā cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which he neuertheles had made to honour thē) vnto Molles and Backes: that he maye the better crepe in to the caues and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from y^e sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesty.

The iij. Chapter.

EVERY man can eschue a persone moued in anger, for what doth he wyselý? Euen so shal y^e LORDE of hostes take awaye frō Ierusalē & Iuda, all possessiōs & power, all meat and drinke, y^e captayne and the soudyare, y^e iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of fiftie yeare olde, and the honorable: the Senatours, and men of vnderstandinge: the masters of crafes and oratours. And I shal geue you children to be youre prynces (saith the LORDE) and babes shall haue the rule of you. "One shall euer be doinge violence and wronge to another. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Yee one shal take a frende of his owne kynred by y^e bosome, and saye: thou hast clothinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and parell.

Then shall he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Morouer, there is nether meate ner clothinge in my house, make me no rueler of the people. For Ierusalem and Iuda must decaye, because that both their wordes and counsels are agaynst the LORDE, they prouoke the presence of his magesty vnto anger. The chaunginge of their countenance bewrayeth them, yee they declare their owne synnes them selues, as the Sodomites, & hyde thē not. Wo be vnto their soules, for they shalbe heuely rewarded. Then shal they saye: O happie are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies. "But wo be to y^e vngodly and vnrightuous for they shalbe rewarded after their workes. O my people, rybaudes oppresse y^e, and women haue rule of the.

O my people, thy leders deceaue the, and "trede out the waye of thy footsteppes. "The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stondesth to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senatours and prynces of his people, "and shal saye thus vnto them: It is ye that haue burnt vp my vyngarde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wherefore do ye oppresse my people, and marre y^e faces of the innocentes? thus shal the God of hostes reuyle them.

Morouer thus saith y^e LORDE: Seinge the daughters of Sion are become so proude, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with vayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycely with their fete: Therefore shal the LORDE shaue the heades of the daughters of Sion, and make their bewtie bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgiousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cheynes, partlettes, and colares, bracelettes and hooues, y^e goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymēt, brushshes and headbandes, rynges and garlādes, holy daye clothes and vales, kerchues and pyennes, glasses and smockes, bonettes and taches.

And in steade of good smell there shalbe styncy amonge them. And for their gyrdles there shalbe lowse bondes. And for wellset hayre there shalbe baldnesse. In steade of a stomacher, a sack cloth, and for their bewty wythrednesse and sonneburnynge. Their husbondes and their mightie men shall perish with the swerde in batell.

The iiii. Chapter.

AT that tyme shall their gates mourne and complayne, and they shal syt as desolate folk vpon the earth. Then shal seuen wyues take holde of one man, and saye: we will laye all oure meat and clothinge together in comon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprove maye be take from us. "After that tyme shal the braunch of y LORDE be beutiful and mightie, and y frute of the earth shalbe fayre and pleasaunt^b for those Israelites that shall springe therof. Then shall the remnaunt in Sion and the remnaunt at Ierusalem be called^c holy: namely al such as are written amonge the luyunge at Ierusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shall wash awaye the desolacion of the daughters of Siō, ad poure the bloude out from Ierusalē, with y wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Morouer vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregacion, shal the LORDE prouyde a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shynninghe of a flammyng fyre by night, for all their glory shalbe preserued. And Ierusalem shall be a tabernacle for a shadowe because of hete in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The v. Chapter.

NOW well than, I will syngye my beloued frende a songe of his vnyearde. "My beloued frende hath a vyneyearde in a very frutefull plenteous grounde. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therin. And afterwarde when he loked y it it shulde bringe him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Cytizens of Ierusalem and whole Iuda:) Iudge I praye you betwixte me: and my wyngardinge. "What more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Wherefore then hath it geuen thornes, where I loked to haue had grapes of it.

Well, I shall tell you how I will do with my vynyarde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe y wall, that it maye be troden vnder fote. I will laye it waist, that it shall nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thornes and breares. I wil also forbyd y cloudes, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vynyarde of the LORDE of hoostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Iuda his fayre plantinge. Of these he loked for equitye, but se there is wronge: for rightuousnesse, lo, It is but misery.

Wo to you that ioynе one house to another, and bringe one londe so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more grounde. "Wil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hoostes rowneth me thus: i myne eare: shal not many greater and more gorgious houses be so waist, that no man shall dwell in the? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sede shal geue but three.

Wo be vnto them that ryse vp early to vse them selues in dronkynnes, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companies are harpes and lutes, ^f tabrettes and pipes, and wyne. But they regarde not the worke of the LORDE, ^e and cōsidre not the operaciō of his hondes. Therefore cometh my folk also in captiuyte, ^a because they haue no vnderstandynge. Their glory shalbe myxte with hūger, and their pryde shalbe marred for thurst. Therefore gapeth hel, and openeth hyr mouth marvelous wyde: that pryde, boostinge and wisdomē, with such as reioyse therin, maye descende in to it.

"Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude laye downe. But the LORDE of hoostes, y holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equitye and rightuousnesse after this maner. Then shal y lambes eate their apoynted foder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. Wo vnto vayne persones, that drawe wickednes vnto the, as it were with a coorde: and synne, as it were with a cart rope. Which vse to speake on this maner: let him make haist now, and go forth with his worke, that we maye se it.

 Let the counsell of ꝑ holy one of Israel come, and drawe nie, ꝑ we maye knowe it.

¶ Wo vnto them that call euell good, and good euell: which make darcknesse light, & light darcknesse, ꝑ make sower swete, and swete sower. Wo vnto them that are wyse in their owne sight, and thinke them selues to haue vnderstōdinge. ¶ Wo vnto them, ꝑ are connyng men to suppe out wyne, and experte to set vp drōkēnesse. ¶ These gyue sentence with the vngodly for rewardes, but condemne the iust cause of the righteous.

¶ Therefore, like as fyre licketh vp the strawe, and as the flame cōsumeth the stubble: Euen so (when their root is ful,) their blossome shal vanish awaye like dust or smoke, ¶ for they despyse the lawe of the LORDE of hoostes, and blaspheme the worde of the holy maker of Israel.

Therefore is the wrath of the LORDE kyn-dled also agaynst his people, and he shaketh his honde at them: yee he shal smyte so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carcases shal lye in the opē stretes, like myre. ¶ After all this, the wrath of God shal not cease, but he shal stretch his hōde wyder. And he shal gyue a tokē vnto a straunge people, ¶ and call vnto them in a farre countre: and be-holde, they shal come hastily with spede.
 There is not one faynt nor feble amonge them, no not a slogish nor sleperry parson.

¶ There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, ner lowse the lachet of his shue. Their arrowes are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hoofes are like flynt, and their cart wheles like a stormy wynde.
 Their crie is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons whelpes. They shal roare, and hātch vp the praye, and no man shal recouer it or get it from thē. In that daye they shalbe so feare vpon them, as the see. And yf we loke vnto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe.
 Yf we loke to heauen: beholde, it shalbe darck with careful desperacion.

The vi. Chapter.

¶ IN the same yere ꝑ kynge Osias dyed, I sawe the LORDE^a sittinge vpon an high and glorious seate, and his trayne fylled ꝑ palace. From aboue flakred the Seraphins, wherof euery one had sex wynges. With twayne ech couered his face, with twayne his fete, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner:

 holy, holy, holy is the LORDE of hoostes.
 The whole worlde is ful of his glory. Yee the geastes and dorechekes moued at their crienge, and the house was ful of smoke.
 Then I sayde: O wo is me. For I was astonished: that I (which am a man of vn-clene lippes, and dwell amonge people ꝑ hath vncleane lippes also:) Shulde se ꝑ Kynge and LORDE of hoostes with myne eyes.

Then flewe one of the Seraphins vnto me, hauinge a hote cole in his honde, which he had taken from the aulter with the tonges, and touched my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touched thy mouth, & thy vnrightousnes is taken awaye, and thy synne forgeuen. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takinge advysement on this maner: Whom shall I sende, and who wilbe oure messaunger? Thē I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: ye shall heare in dede, but ye shal not vnderstonde, ¶ ye shal plainely se, and not perceaue. Harden the harte of this people, stoppe their eares, and shut their eyes, that they se not with their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnderstonde not with their hartes, and conuerte and be healed.

Then spake I: LORDE, how longe? he answered: vntil the cities be vtterly without inhabitours, and ꝑ houses without men, till the lōde be also desolate, and lye vnbuylded.
 For the LORDE shal take the men farre awaye, so that the londe shal lye waist. Ne-uertheles, the tenth parte shal remayne therin, for it shal conuerte and be fruteful. And likewise as the Terebyntes and Oketrees bringe forth their frutes, so shal the holy sede haue frute.^f

Israel: wente vp toward Ierusalem to besege it (but wanne it not.) Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, y Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herte quaked (yee and y hertes also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Iasub) at the heade of y ouer pole, in the fote path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thy self and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokynge fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Romelies sonne: because that the Kyng of Siria Ephraim and Romelies sonne haue wekedly conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Iuda, vexe the, and brynge them vnder vs, and set a Kyng there, euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saieth the LORDE God ther to, It shall not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the head cite of y Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threscore yeaere, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chefe cite of Ephraim is Samaria, but the head of Samaria is Romelies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.^a Morouer, God spake vnto Ahas, sayenge: requyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depth beneth or towarde y hight aboue. The sayde Ahas: I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then heare to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therefore the LORDE shal geue you a token of him self: Beholde, a virgin shal coceau and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. Butter and hony shal he eate, y he maye knowe the euel, and chose y good. But or euer that childe come to knowlege, to eschue the euel and chose the good: The londe (that thou art so afrayde for) shalbe desolate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vpō thy fathers house (such as neuer came sence the tyme y Ephraim departed from Iuda) thorow y kyng of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whistle for the flyes y are aboute the water of Egipte, and for y Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in y vowtes of stone, vpon all grene thinges, and in all corners.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shaue the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beerd clene of, with the rasoure that he shall paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with y kyng of the Assirians. At the same tyme shall a man lyue with a cowe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundance of mylck, he shal make butter and eat it. So that euery one which remaineth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluerlinges) shalbe turned to brears and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arowes and bowes, so shal all the londe become brears and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are hewen downe, thou shalt not come vpō them, for feare of brears and thornes. But the catel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

The liiij. Chapter.

MOROUER the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Immediately I called vnto me faithful wytnesses: Vrias the prest, and Zacharias y sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had conceaued and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maherschallal haschbas, that is. a spedie robber, an hastie spoyler. For why, or euer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, y is father, and mother: shal y riches of Damascus and y substance of Samaria be takē awaye, thorow the kyng of y Assirians.

The LORDE spake also vnto me, sayenge: for so much as the people refuseth the stillenninge water of Silo, and put their delite in Rezin and Romelies sonne: Beholde, the LORDE shal bringe mightie and great floudes of water vpon them: namely, y kyng of the Assirians with all his power. Which shall poure out his furyousnes vpō euery man, and renne ouer all their bankes. And shal breake in vpon Iuda, increasinge in power, til he get him by the throte. He shal fyl also the wydenesse of thy londe with his brode wynges, O Emanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, herken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre counsel together, ^ayet must youre counsel come to nought: go in honde withal, yet shal it not prospere. Excepte Emanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and toke me by [†] honde, and warned me, sayenge vnto me: that I shulde not walcke in the waye of this people. He sayde morouer: rounde with none of thē, who so euer saye: yonder people are bounde together. ^bNeuertheles feare them not, nether be afraide of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hoostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifienge, and stone to stomble at, [†] rock to fall vpon, a snare and net to both the houses: to Israel, and the inhabitours of Ierusalem. And many shal stomble, fall, and be brokē vpon him: yee they shalbe snared and taken.

^c Now laye the witnesses together (sayde the LORDE) ^aand seale the lawe with my disciples. Thus I waite vpon the LORDE, that hath turned his face from the house of Iacob, and I loke vnto him. ^dBut lo, as for me, and the children which the LORDE hath geuen me: we are a token and a wondre in Israel, for the LORDE of hoostes sake, which dwelleth vpon the hill of Syon.

And therefore yf they saye vnto you: aske counsel at the soithsayers, witches, charmers and coniurers, then make them this answer: Is there a people anywhere, that axeth not counsel at his God: whether it be concernynge the dead, or the luyunge? ^eYf any man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanynge. Yf he do not this, he stombleth and suffreth hūger. And yf he suffre hunger, he is out of patience, and blasphemeth his kynge and his God. Then loketh he vpwarde, and downe warde to the earth, and beholde, there is trouble and darcknesse, vexacion is rounde aboute him, and the cloude of erreure. And out of soch aduersites, shall he not escape.

The ix. Chapter.

^a EUEN like as in tyme past it hath bene well sene, ^fthat [†] londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nepthali (where thorow the see waye goeth ouer Iordane in to the londe of Galilee) ^gwas at the first in litle trouble, but afterward sore vexed.

Neuertheles [†] people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal se a greate light. As for them that dwel in the londe of the shadowe of death, vpon them shal the light shyne. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? ^hThey shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in haruest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breake the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, ⁱand the rod of his oppressoure, as in [†] daye at Madiā.

^m The LORDE sent a worde in to Iacob, the same is come in to Israel. All the people also of Ephraim, and they that dwel in Samaria, can saye with pryde and hie stomackes, on this maner: The tyle worcke is fallen downe, but we will buylde it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbre ys broken, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. them before, and the Philistynes behynde, and so deuoure Israel with open mouth.

After all this, the ^awrath of the LORDE shal not cease, but yet his hande shalbe stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, nether do they seke the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore the LORDE shal rote out of Israel both heade and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderstonde the Senatore and honorable man, and by ^f tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceauers. Soch as men thinke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.

D Therefore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge mē, nether fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For thei are altogether ypocrites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake foly. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet his honde shalbe stretched out still. For the vngodly burne, as a fyre in the bryers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wod or a redbush, so ascendeth the smoke of their pryde.

For this cause shal ^f wrath of the LORDE of hoostes fall vpon the londe, and the people shalbe consumed, as it were with fyre, no man shal spare his brother. Yf a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal famesh, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Euery man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal eate Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Iuda. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

The r. Chapter.

A WO be vnto you ^f make vnrightuous lawes,^b and deuyse thinges, which be to harde for to kepe: wherthorow the poore are oppressed, on euery syde, and the innocētes of my people are there with robbed of iudgment: that wyddowes maye be youre praye, and that ye maye robbe the fatherlesse. What will ye do in tyme of the visitation and destruction, that shal come from farre? To whom will ye renne for helpe? or to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it? that ye come not amonge the presoners, or lye amonge the deed? ^c After all this shal not the wrath of the LORDE cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

^d Wo be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wrath, in whose honde is the rod of my punyishment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypocritish people, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfauoure shal I send him: that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanynge is not so, nether thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye moch people, for he saith: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as easie to wynne, ^eas Charchamis? Is it harder to conquire Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouercome Damascus the Samaria? As who say: I were able to wynne the kingdome of the Idolaters and their goddes, but not Ierusalem and Samaria. Shal I not do vnto Ierusalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and their ymages?

Wherfore the LORDE saith: As soone as I haue perfourmed my whole worcke vpon the Hyl of Syon and Ierusalem: the will I also vyset the noble and stoute kyngs of Assiria, with his wysdome and pryde. For he stondesth thus in his owne cōceate: ^fThis do I, thorow the power of myne owne honde, and thorow my wisdome: For I am wyse, I am he that remoue the londes of the people, I robbe their prynces: and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath founde out the hoostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were layde here and there, are gathered together: So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, ^gthat darre be so bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whisper.

^h But doth the axe boost itself, agaynst him ⁱthat heweth therwith, or doth the sawe make eny krakinge, agaynst him that ruleth it? That were euen like, as yf the rod dyd exalte it self agaynst him, that beareth it: or as though ^jthat staff shulde magnifie it self, as who saye: it were no wodd. ^k Therefore shal the LORDE of hoostes sende him pouerte in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. ^a But the light of Israel shalbe y^e fyre, and his Sanctuary shalbe the flame, and it shal kyndle, and burne vp his thornes and breyers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddess and felde shalbe consumed with body and soule. As for him self, he shalbe as one chased awaye. The trees also of his felde shalbe of soch a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

D After y^e daye shal the remnaunt of Israel, and such as are escaped out of the house of Iacob, seke no more coforte at him that smote them, but shal conforte them selues with faithfulness and treuth in the LORDE, the holy, one of Israel. ^b The remnaunt, yee and the Posteryte of Iacob, shal couerte vnto God the mighty one. For though thy people (o Israel) be as the sonde of the see, yet shal but the remnaunt of them only couerte vnto him. Perfecte is the iudgmet of him that floweth in rightuousnesse: and therefore y^e LORDE of hoostes shal perfectly fulfil the thinge, that he hath determynd in the myddest of the whole worlde. Therefore thus saieith the LORDE God of hoostes: Thou my people, that dwellest in Sion, be not afraide for the kinge of the Assirians: He shal wagg his staff at the, yee and beate the with the rodd, as the Egyp^tians dyd sometye: But soone after, shal my wrath and my indignacion be fulfilled agaynst their blasphemies.

E Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal prepare a scourge for him, like as was the punyshment of Madiā vpō y^e mount of Oreb. ^c And he shal lift vp his rod ouer the see, as he dyd sometye ouer the Egyp^tians. Then shal his burthen be taken from thy shulders, and his yock from thy neck, yee the same yock shal corrupte for very fatnesse. He shal come to Aiath, and go thorow toward Migron. But at Machmas shal he muster his hooste, and go ouer y^e foorde. Gaba shal be their restinge place, Rhama shalbe afraide, Gabea Saul shal fle awaye. The voyce of y^e noyse of thy horses (o daughter Gallim) shalbe herde vnto lais and to Anathoth, which also shalbe in trouble. Madmena shal tremble for feare, but the citesyns of Gabim are maly, yet shal he remayne at Nob that daye. After that, shal he lift vp his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and agaynst the hill of Ierusalem. But se, the LORDE God of hoostes shal take awaye the proude from thence, with feare. He shal hew downe the proude, and fel the hie mynded. The thornes of the wod shal be rooted out with yron, and Libanus shal haue a mightie fal.

The xi. Chapter.

AFTER this there shal come a rod forth A of y^e Kynrede of Iesse, ^d and a blossome out of his rote. The sprete of the LORDE shal light vpon it: the sprete of wysdome, and vnderstandinge: the sprete of counsel, and strength: y^e sprete of knowlege, and of the feare of God: and shal make him feruent in the feare of God. For he shal not geue sentēce, after the thinge y^e shal be brought before his eies, nether reprove a matter at the first hearinge: but with rightuousnesse shal he iudge the poore, and with holynes shal he reforme the symple of the worlde.

^e He shal smyte y^e worlde with y^e staff of his mouth, ^f and with y^e breath of his mouth shal he slaye the wicked. ^g Rightuousnesse shalbe the gyrde of his loynes, treuth and faithfulness the gyrdinge vp of his raynes. B The shal y^e wolfe dwell with the lābe, and the leopard shal lye downe by the gote. ^h Bullokes, lyons and catel shal kepe company together, so that a litle childe shal dryue them forth. The cowe and the Bere shal fede together, and their yongones shal lye together. The lyō shal eate strawe like the ox, or the cowe. The childe whyle he sucketh, shal haue a desyre to the serpent's nest, and whē he is weened, he shal put his hande in to the Cockatrice denne. ⁱ Noman shal do euil to another, no man shal destroye another, in all the hill of my Sanctuary. For the earth C shalbe ful of y^e knowlege of y^e LORDE, euen as though the water of the see flowed ouer the earth.

Then shal the Gentiles enquire after the rote of Iesse (which shalbe set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shalbe glorious. ^k At the same tyme shal the LORDE take in honde agayne, ^l to conquere y^e remnaunt of his people (which are left alyue) From the Assiriās, Egiptians, Arabians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, Antiochiās and Ilōdes of the see. " And he shal set vp a tokē amonge the Gentiles, and gather together [¶] dispersed of Israel, yee and the outcastes of Iuda from the foure corners of [¶] worlde. The hatred of Ephraim, and [¶] enmyte of Iuda shalbe cleue rootet out. Ephraim shal beare no euell wil to Iuda, and Iuda shal not hate Ephraim: but they both together shal flye vpō the shulders of the Philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell toward the East. The Idumytes and the Moabites shal let their hōdes fall, and the Ammonites shalbe obedient vnto them.

The LORDE also shal cleue the tunges of the Egipcians see, and with a mightie wynde shal he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shal smyte his seuē streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shal he make a waye for his people, [¶] remayneth from the Assirians, 'like as it happened to [¶] Israelites, what tyme they departed out of the londe of Egipte.

The xij. Chapter.

SO that then thou shalt saye: O LORDE, I thanke the, for thou wast displeased at me, but thou hast refrayned thy wrath, and hast mercy vpon me. " Beholde, God is my health, in whom I trust, and am not afayde. For the LORDE God is my strength, and my prayse, he also shalbe my refuge. Therefore with ioye shal ye drawe water out of the welles of the Sauioure, and then shal ye saye: " Let vs geue thanks vnto the LORDE, and call vpon his name, and declare his counceils amonge the people, and kepe them in remembrance, for his name is excellēt. O synge praises vnto the LORDE, for he doth greate thinges, as it is knowne in all the worlde. Crie out, and be glad, thou that dwellest in Sion, for greate is thy prince: the holy one of Israel.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THIS is [¶] heuy burthē of Babilō, which Esaye the sonne of Amos dyd se. Make some tokēs to the hie hilles, " call vnto them, holde vp youre hōde, that the prynces maye go in at the dore. For I will sende for my debites and my gyaūtes (sayeth the LORDE) and in my wrath I will call for soch, as tryumphe in my glory.

With that, me thought I herde in the moūtaynes, a noyse, like as it had bene of a greate people: and a ruszshinge, as though the kyngdomes of all nacions had come together. (And the LORDE of hoostes was the captayne of the whole armye.) As they had come not only out of farre countrees, but also from the endes of the heauē: Euē the LORDE himself with the ministers of his wrath, to destroye the whole lōde. Mourn therefore, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from [¶] almighty. Then shall all hondes be letten downe, and all mens hertes shal melt awaie, they shal stonde in feare, carefullnesse and sorowe shal come vpō them, and they shal haue payne, as a woman that traueleth with childe. " One shall euer be abaszshed of another, [¶] their faces shal burne, like [¶] flāme.

For lo, the daye of the LORDE shall come, terrible, full of indignacion and wrath: to make the londe waite, and to root out the synne therof. For the starres and planetes of heauen shal not geue their light, the Sonne shalbe quenched in the rysinge, " and the Mone shal not shyne with his light. And I wil punysh the wickednesse of the worlde, [¶] the synnes of the vngodly, sayeth the LORDE. The hie stomackes of the proude will I take awaye, and will laye downe the boostinge of tyrautes. I will make a man dearer thē fyne golde, and a man to be more worth, thē a golden wedge of Ophir. Morouer, I will so shake the heauē, that the earth shall remoue out of hir place.

Thus shall it go with Babilon, in the wrath of the LORDE of hoostes in [¶] daye of his fearfull indignaciō. And Babilon shalbe as an hunted or chased doo, and as a flocke without a shepherde. Euery mā shal turne to his owne people, [¶] fle echone in to his owne londe. Who so is founde alone, shalbe shot thorow: And who so gather together, shalbe destroyed with the swerde. Their children shalbe slayne before their eyes, their houses spoyled, [¶] their wyues rauyshed. For lo, I shall bringe vp [¶] Medes agaynst thē, which shal not regarde syluer, nor be desyrous of golde. Then shall yonge mens bowes be knapped asunder. The Medes shal haue no pitie vpō womē with childe, & their faces shall not spare f̃ childrē. And Babilō (f̃ glory of kigdomes and bewtie of the Caldees honoure) shalbe destroyed, euē as God destroyed Sodom & Gomorra.^a It shal neuer be more inhabited, nether shal there be eny more dwellinge there, from generacion to generacion.

The Arabians shall make no mo tentes there, nether shall the shepardes make their foldes there eny more: but wyld beasts shal lie there, & f̃ houses shalbe full of greate Oules. Estriches shal dwell there, & Apes shal daunce there: The litle Oules shall crie in the palaces, one after another, & Dragōs shalbe in the pleasauit perlours. And as for Babilons tyme, it is at honde, & hir dayes maye not be longe absent.

The xiiii. Chapter.

BUT f̃ LORDE wilbe mercyfull vnto Jacob, & wyll take vp Israel agayne, & set thē in their owne lōde. Straūgers shal cleue vnto thē, & get thē to f̃ house of Jacob. ^bThey shal take f̃ people, & cary thē home with thē. And f̃ house of Israel shal haue thē in possession, for seruātes & maydēs in f̃ lōde of f̃ LORDE. They shal take those prisoners, whose captyues they had bene afore: & rule those, f̃ had oppressed thē. When f̃ LORDE now shal bringe f̃ to rest, frō f̃ tra-uayle, feare, & harde bondage f̃ thou wast laden with all: then shalt thou vse this mockage vpon f̃ kinge of Babilon, & saye: How happeneth it f̃ f̃ oppressour leaueth of? Is f̃ golden tribute come to an ende? Doubtes the LORDE hath broken the staff of the vngodly, & the cepter of f̃ lordly. Which whē he is wroth, smyteth f̃ people with durable strokes, & in his wōders he persecuteth thē, & tameth thē cōtinually. And therefore f̃ whole worlde is now at rest and quyetnesse, & men synge for ioye.

33 Yee euen the Fyrre trees and Cedres of Libanus reioyse at thy fall, sayenge: Now f̃ thou art layde downe, there come no mo vp to destroy vs. Hell also trembleth at thy commynge. All mightie men and prynces of the earth, steppe forth before the. All kynges of the earth stonde vp frō their seates, that they maye all (one after another) synge and speake vnto the. Art thou wounded also as we? art thou become like vnto vs? Thy pompe and thy pryde is gone downe to hell: Mothes shalbe layde vnder the, & wormes shalbe thy coueringe.

How art thou fallen from heauen^c (o Lucifer) thou faire mornīge childe? hast thou gotten a fall euen to the grounde, thou that (notwithstandinge) dyddest subdue the people? And yet thou thoughtest in thine harte: I will clymme vp in to heauen, and make my seate aboute the starres of God, I wyll syt vpon the glorious mount toward the North, I wyll clymme vp aboute the cloudes, & wilbe like the highest of all. Yet darre I laye, f̃ thou shalt be brought downe to the depe of hell. ^dThey that se the, shal narrowly loke vpō the, and thinke in them selues, sayenge: Is this the man, that brought all londes in feare, and made f̃ kingdomes afraide: Is this he that made the worlde in a maner waist, & layde the cities to the grounde, which let not his prisoners go home?

How happeneth it, that the kynges of all people lie, euery one at home in his owne palace, with worshipec, and thou art cast out of thy graue like a wilde braunch: like as dead mens rayment that are shott thorow with the swerde: as they that go downe to the stones of the depe: as a dead coarse that is troden vnder fete: and art not buried with them? Euen because that thou hast waisted thy lōde, and destroyed thy people. For the generacion of the wicked shalbe without honoure, for euer. There shal a waye be sought to destroye their childrē, for their fathers wickednes: they shal not come vp agayne to possesse the londe, and fyll the worlde ful of castels and townes.

34 I wil stonde vp agaynst them (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and root out f̃ name and generacion of Babilon (saieth the LORDE) & wil geue it to the Otters, and wil make water poddels of it. And I wil swepe them out with the besome of destruction, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne an ooth, sayēge: It shal come to passe as I haue determined: & shalbe fulfilled as I haue deuysed. ^eThe Assirians shalbe destroyed in my londe, and vpon my mountaynes wyll I treade them vnder fote.

For yf the LORDE of hoostes determe a thinge, who wyl dysanulle it? And yf he stretch forth his honde, who wil holde it in agayne?

E The same yere that kynge Achaz dyed, God threatned by Esay on this maner: "Reioyse not (thou whole Palestina) as though y rod of him y beateth the were broken: For out of y serpentes rote, there shal waxe a kockatrice, & the frute shalbe a fyrie worme. But the poore shall fede of the best thinges, and the symple shal dwell in safetie. Thy rotes wil I destroye with honger, and it shall slaye thy remnaunt. Mourn ye portes, wepe ye Cities. And feare thou (o whole Palestina) for there shal come frō the North a smoke, whose power no man maye abyde. Who shall then maynteyne the messages of the Gentyles? But the LORDE stablisheth Syon, & the poore of my people shall put their trust in him.

The xv. Chapter.

A THIS is y heuy burthē vpō Moab: Ar of Moab was destroyed (as me thought) in the night season: "The walles of Moab perished in the night, & vanished awaye: They wēte to Baith and Dibon in the hie places, for to wepe: Moab did mourne frō Nebo to Medba: All their heades were colled, and al their beardes shauen. "In their stretes were they gyrded aboute with sack cloth. In all the toppes of their houses & stretes was there nothinge, but mournynge and wepinge. Hesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Iahaz. The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for very sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moabs sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre fruteful bullock, they went vp to Lubith, wepinge. The waye toward Horonaim was ful of lamentacion for y hurte. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp, the grasse was wythred, the herbes destroyed, & what necessary grene thinge there was besyde. In like maner the thinge y was left them of their substaunce, they caried it by water to Araby.

The cry went ouer the whole londe of Moab: from Eglaim vnto Beer, was there nothinge but mournynge. The waters of Dimon were full of bloude, for y enemye had sent thither a bonde of men, which as a lyon, layde waite for the remnaunt of the londe, and for them y were escaped.

The xvi. Chapter.

THEN sent the lordes of the lōde a mā of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the daughter Sion (For as for the daughters of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byrde, y is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon) which messaunger sayde: gather youre counsel, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, "as the night doth: hyde the chased, & bewraye not the that are fled, let the persecuted Moabites dwel amōge you, be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppresseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, & the tyrante dryueth vs out of oure londe. But y Trone of youre kingdome is ful of grace, therefore he that syteth vpon it with faithfulness & treuth in the house of Dauid, knowe the thinge & do his diligence to helpe shortly, accordinge to Equite and rightuousnes. As for Moabs pride (shal they answer) it is wel knowne. "And all though they be excellent, proude, arrogant, & hie mynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therefore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, wher thorow they come all to mourne: & now y they be smytten, they take their deuyce beneth by the bryckwall, and make their cōplaynte.

The suburbs also of Hesebon were made waist, & the princes of the Gentyles hewed downe y vynyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spred vnto Iazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose braunches stretched their selues forth beyonde the see. Therefore I mourned for Iazer, & for y vynyardes of Sibma with greate sorow. I poured my teares vpon Hesebon & Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their haruest & gatheringe of their grapes: Myrth and chere was gone out of y felde & vynyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner sunge. There wēte no treader in to the wynepresse, their mery chere was layde downe. Wherefore my bely rōbled (as it had bene a lute) for Moabs sake, & myne inward members, for the bryckwalles sake. For it happened thus also: whē Moab sawe that she was turned vp syde downe: "she went vp an hie in to hir sanctuary, to make hir prayer there, but she might not be helped. This is the deuyce, which the LORDE toke in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In thre yeare shal ^ŷ power of Moab with their pōpe (which is greate) be minished, like as ^ŷ burthē of an hyred seruauante: And as for ^ŷ remnaunt of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not rekened moch worthe.

The xviij. Chapter.

THIS is the heuy burthē vpō Damascus: ^aBeholde, Damascus shal be nomore a cite, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe waist, The catel shal lie there, & nomā shal fraye thē awaye. Ephraim shal no more be strōge, & Damascus shal no more be a kyngdome. And as for ^ŷ glory of ^ŷ remnaunt of ^ŷ Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childrē of Israel, saieth ^ŷ LORDE of hoostes. At that tyme also shal ^ŷ glory of Iacob be very poore, & his fatnes leane. It shal happē to thē, as when one sheareth in haruest, which cutteth his handfull with the sickle, & when one gathreth ^ŷ sheaues together in the valley, of Rephaim, there remaineth yet some ears ouer. Or as whē one shaketh an olyue tre, ^cwhich fyndeth but two or thre olyue berries aboue in the toppes, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken.

Then shal man cōuerte agayne vnto his maker, & turne his eyes to the holy one of Israel. And shal not turne to the aulters that are ^ŷ worke of his owne hōdes, nether shal he lōke vpō groaues & ymages, which his fyngers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once ^ŷ forsakē plowes & corne, which they forsoke, ^dfor feare of ^ŷ children of Israel.

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottē God thy Sauoure, & hast not called to remēbraunce ^ŷ rock of thi strēgth, Wherefore thou hast also set a fayre plate, & grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gaue soone the frute of thi sede: But in the daye of haruest, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes & miseries.

Wo be to the multitude of moch people, that russ in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like greate waters. ^eFor though so many people increase as the flowinge waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hill, and as the whyrle wynde thorow a storme. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the morninge it is gone with thē, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs.

The xviij. Chapter.

WO be to the londe of sienge shippes, which is of this syde ^ŷ floude of Ethiopia: which sendeth hir message ouer the see in shippes of redes vpō ^ŷ water, and sayeth: go soone, and do youre message vnto a straunge and harde folke: to a fearful people, & to a people ^ŷ is further then this: to a desperate and pyllled folke, whose londe is deuyded from vs with ryuers of water. Yee all ye ^ŷ syt in the compasse of the worlde, and dwell vpon the earth: when the token shalbe geuen vpō the mountaynes, then loke vp: and when the horne bloweth, then herken to, for thus hath ^ŷ LORDE sayde vnto me. I layde me downe, and pondred the matter in my house, at the noone daye when it was hote: and there fel a myslinge shower, like a dew, as it happeneth in haruest. But the frutes, were not yet ripe cut of, and the grapes were but yonge and grene. Then one smote of the grapes with an hoke, yee he hewed downe also the buwes and the braunches, & dyd cast thē awaye. And thus they were layde waist, for the foules of the mountaynes, and for ^ŷ beastes of the earth together. So ^ŷ the foules sat ther vpon, and the beastes of the earth wyntered there. Then shal there be a present brought vnto the LORDE of hoostes: euen that harde folke, that fearful folke, and that further is thē this: ^ŷ desperate and pyllled folke (whose londe is deuyded from vs with floudes of water) vnto the place of the name of the LORDE of hoostes: euen vnto the hill of Sion.

THIS is the heuy burthen vpon Egypte:
 "Beholde, the LORDE wil ryde vpon a swifte cloude, and come in to Egypte. And the goddes of Egypte shal trymble at his cōmynge, and the hert of Egypte shal quake within her. For thus saith the LORDE:
 I wil stere vp the Egyptians one agaynst another amonge them selues, ^aso that one shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neighbour, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egypte shalbe choked in hir self. Whē they axe counsel at their goddes, at their Prophetes, at their soysayers and witches: then will I bringe their counsel to naught.

I wil delyuer Egypte also in to the hondes of greuous rulers, and a cruel kinge shal haue the rule of them. The water of the see shalbe drawē out, Nilus shal synke awaye, ^q be dronke vp. The ryuers also shalbe drawen out, the welles shal decreace and drie awaye.
 Rede and rush shal fayle, the grasse by the waters syde or vpon ^ſ ryuers bancke, yee and what so euer is sowne by the waters, shalbe wythered, destroyed, ^q brought to naught.
 The fyshers shall mourne, all soch as cast that sprede their nettes in the water, shalbe sylcke, shal come to pouerte, ^q they also that shal come to naught.^c

Yee the vndiscrete prynces of Zoan, the shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that darre boast ^q saye of Pharaοs behalfe: I am come of wyse people. I am come of ^ſ olde regall Progeny. But where are now thy wyse mē?

 Let them tel the ^q shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egypte. Fooles are those prynces of Zoan, ^q proude are the prynces of Noph: yee they ^dysceane Egypte with the nobilite of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egypte dronckē with the sprete of erreure, and they shal vse it in all matters: eūē like as a dronckē mā goeth spewing aboute. For Egypte shal lacke good counsel, so ^ſ they shal not knowe what to do, nether beginnyng nor ende, nether vpon the lōde nor water.

 Thē shal ^ſ Egyp̄tiās be like vnto womē, afrayde ^q astoied, at the lifyinge vp of the hōde, which ^ſ LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The londe of Iuda also shal make the Egiptians afrayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that because of the counsel, which ^ſ LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed agaynst them. Then shal the fyue cities of Egypte speake with the Canaanites tunge, ande sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, ^q Heliopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an altuer in the myddest of the londe of Egypte, with this title ther by: Vnto the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testimony vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the londe of Egypte, when they shal crie vnto him, because of those that oppresse them: that he shal sende them a captayne and a Sauoure to delyuer them.

Morouer, Egypte shalbe bought vnto the LORDE, and the Egipcians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme: they shal do him reuerence with peace offringes, and with meat offringes: they shal promyse him of-fringes, yee ^q paye him also. Thus the LORDE shal smyte Egypte, ^q heale it agayne: ^q so shal they turne to ^ſ LORDE, and he also shal haue mercy vpō them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egypte in to Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egypte, and the Egypciāns in to Assiria. The Egipcians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Israel with honoure be the thirde to Egypte and Assur. And the LORDE of hoostes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blisshed is my people of the Egipcians, Assur is the worke of my hōdes, but Israel is myne enheritaunce.

They shalbe also at their wittes ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egipcians of the Moryans, and the Morians of the Egipcians, at the sight of their glory.

THIS is the heuy burthē of the waist see: A greuous visiō was shewed vnto me, like as when a storme of wynde and rayne russheth in from the wyldernes, that terrible londe. Who so maye disceaue (sayde the voyce) let him disceaue: Who so maye distroye, let him distroye. Vp Elam, besege it o Madai, for I will still all their gronynges. With this, the raynes of my backe were ful of payne: "Panges came vpon me, as vpon a woman in hir trauayle. When I herde it, I was abashed: and whē I loked vp, I was afrayde. Myne herte painted, I trembled for feare. The darcknesse made me fearfull in my mynde.

3 Yee soone make redy the table (sayde this voyce) kepe the watch, eate and drynke: Vp ye captaynes, take you to youre shyld, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchmā, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whē he had wayted diligētly, he sawe two horsmen: the one rydinge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel. And the lyon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. With y^e came there one rydinge vpon a charet, which answered, and sayde: "Babilon is fallen, she is turned vpsyde downe, and all y^e ymages of hir goddesses are smytten to y^e grounde. This (o my felowe throsshers and fanners) haue I herde of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel, to shewe it vnto you.

The heuy burthen of Duma.

One of Seir cried vnto me: "watchman, what hast thou espied by night? Watchman, what hast thou espied by night? The watchman answered: The daye breaketh on, and the night is cōmynge: Yf youre request be earnest, then axe, and come agayne.

The heuy burthen vpon Arabia.

"At euen ye shal abyde in the wod, in the waye toward Dedanim. Metē the thurstie with water, (o ye citisens of Hema) mete those with bred that are fled. For they shal runne awaye from the weapen, from the drawē swerde, from the bēt bowe, and from the greate batell. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: ouer a yere shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the office of an hyred seruauante goeth out: And the remnaunt of the good Archers of Cedar, shalbe very few: For the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken it.

The xxij. Chapter.

The heuy burthen, apon the valley of Visions.

WHAT hast thou there to do, that thou clymnest vp in to the house toppe, o thou citie of miracles, sedicious and wilful? seinge, thy slayne mē are nether killed with swerde, ner deed in batel? For all thy captaynes gat them to their horses from the ordinaunce, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. When I perceaued y^e, I sayde: awaye fro me, y^e I maye wepe bitterly. Take no laboure for to cōforte me, as touching the destruction of my people. For this is y^e daye of the LORDE of hoostes, wherin he will plage, treade downe, and wede out the valley of Visiōs, and breake downe the walles, with soch a crack, that it shal geue a sownde in the mountaynes.

I sawe the Elamites take the quyuers to carte and to horse, and that the walles were bare from harnesse. Thy goodly valleys were ful of Charettes, the horse men made them soone to besege the gates. Then was the coueringe of Iuda put from thence, and then was sene the sege of the tymbre house. There shal ye se the rites in the walles of the cite of

And ye shal make a pyt betwyxte y twayne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothinge regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal y LORDE of hoostes cal mē to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulnes, slaughter oxē, they kyll shepe, they eate costly meate, & drynke wyne: ^b let vs eate and drinke, tomorrow we shal die. Neuertheles whē the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shalbe remitted, ye must die for it. This hath y LORDE God of hoostes spoken.

C Thus sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes: "Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? & from whence comest thou? that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will deck the of another fashion, and put vpon the a straunge clothe. He shal carie y in to a farre cōtre, like a ball with his hondes. There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vyllayne of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

D After this wil I cal my seruauent Eliakim, y sonne of Helkia, and araye him with thy cote, and gyrdle him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shalbe a father of the citisens of Ierusalem,^d and of the Kynred of Iuda. I will also laye the keye of Dauids house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shit, and yf he do shyte, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulness,^e and he shalbe vpon the glorious trone of his fathers house. They shal hāge vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childre, all apparell small and great, all instrumentes of measure & musike. This shal come to passe (saith the LORDE of hoostes) when the nale, y is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulness: shalbe pluckt of, And whē the weight that hangeth vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peces. For the LORDE himself hath sayde it.

The xxiij. Chapter.

AN heuy burthen vpon Tirus. Mourne 2 ye shippes of Tharsis, for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The Indwellers of the Ilandes, the marchauntes of Sidon, and they that occupied the see (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon market of al people. Sidō is sory for it, yee and all y power of the see cōplaneth, and saith: O y I had neuer traueled with childe, that I had neuer borne eny, y I had nether norished boye, ner brought vp daughter. As soone as Egipthe perceaueth it, she wilbe as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourne ye y dwel in the Iles. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite? whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commendeth her so greatly? Who hath deuyed soch thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of al cities, whose marchautes and captaynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? 13 Euē the LORDE of hoostes hath deuyed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and minish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe (^eo thou daughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.

^a Thus the LORDE (that remoueth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out:) hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrth (o thou daughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethes. Stonde vp therefore, and go where the enemie wil carie the, where thou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample:) The Caldees were soch a people, that no man was like them. Assur buylded them: he set vp his castels & palaces, and broke them downe agayne. And therefore mourne (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shalbe throwne downe.

Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the citie, thou art yet an vnknowne wensche, make pastyme with dyuerse balettes, wherby thou mayest come in to acquaintance. Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeares. ^aThe LORDE shal uset the citie of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hyr Marchaundise, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiēge and wyynnynge, shalbe halowed vnto the LORDE.^b For then shal they laye vp nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaundise of Tirus shal belōge vnto the citisens of the LORDE, to the fedinge and susteninge of the hūgrie, and to the clothinge of the aged.

The xiiij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, ^cȝ LORDE shal waiste and plage the worlde, ^dhe shal make the face of the earth desolate, ^eȝ scatre abroad ^fȝ inhabitours therof. Then shal the prest be as the people, the master as the seruaut, the dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that lēdeth vpon vsury, like him ^gȝ boroweth vpō vsury, the creditoure, as the detter. Yee miserably shal ^hȝ worlde be waysted ⁱȝ clene destroyed. For ^jȝ LORDE hath so determed in himself. The earth shalbe heuye and decaye: The face of ^kȝ earth shal perish ^lȝ fal awaye, the proude people of ^mȝ worlde shal come to naught, For ⁿȝ earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

B For why? they haue offended ^oȝ lawe, chaunged the ordinaūces, and made the euerlastinge testamēt of none effecte, And therefore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they ^pȝ dwell therō, haue synned, wherfore they shalbe brent also, and those that remayne, shalbe very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shalbe weake, and all ^qȝ haue bene mery in harte, shal sigh. ^rThe myrth of tabrettes shalbe layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal cease, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrth, the beer shal be bytter to thē that drinke it, the wicked cities shalbe broken downe, all houses shalbe shut, that no man maye come in.

because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the cities, and the gates shalbe smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smyteth downe ^sȝ olyues, ^tȝ are left vpon the tre: ^uor seketh after grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, ^vȝ shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, euen from the see, ^wȝ prayse the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valeis and llōdes. We heare songes sung to the prayse of the rightuous, frō al the endes of the worlde. Therefore I must speake: O my vnfrutfulnesse, o my pouerte, Wo is me, all is ful of synneres, which offende of purpose and malice. And therfore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt.^x And yf he come out of the pyt, he shalbe takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shalbe opened, and the foundation of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a sore ruynē, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stacker like a dronken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Hir misdedes shal lie so heuye vpō her, ^yȝ she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the hie hooste aboue, and ^zȝ kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shalbe coupled together as prisoners be, and shalbe shut in one warde and punished innumerable daies. ^{aa}The Moone and the Sonne shalbe ashamed, when the LORDE of hoostes shal rule them at Ierusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent counsel.

The xv. Chapter.

OLORDE, thou art my God, I wil prayse ^{ab}ȝ the, and magnifie thy name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, accordinge to thine olde counceils, truly and stedfastly. ^{ac}Thou makest of townes, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyest thou out of the citie, that they shal neuer be buylded agayne. Therefore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the cities of the cruel heithen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a

But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a strōge whyrle wynde, that casteth downe the boostinge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the branches of tyrantes.

33 Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpon the hill: "A plenteous, costly, pleasaunt feast, of fat and selfed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Vpon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale y hāgeth before y face of al people, and the coueringe wherewith al Gentiles are couered. "As for death, he shal vtterly cōsume it, The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confusiō of his people thorow y whole worlde. For y LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in whō we put oure trust, and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse & delyte in his health. For the hōde of y LORDE ceaseth vpon this hil. But Moab shalbe throsshē downe vnder him, like as the straw is trodē vnder fete in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swymme. And with the power of his hondes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his strōge holdes & hie walles: he shal buwe them, cast thē downe, and fell thē to the grounde in to dust.

The xxvi. Chapter.

34 THEN shal this songe be sunge in the londe of Iuda: "We haue a strōge citie, the walles & the ordinaūce shal kepe vs. Opē y gates, y the good people maye go in, which laboureth for the treuth. And thou, which art the doer and hast the matter in honde: shalt prouyde for peace, "euē the peace y mē hope for in the. Hope stil in the LORDE, for in the LORDE God is euerlastinge strēth. He casteth thē to the grounde, yee euē in to y myre, y they maye be trodē vnder the fete of the symple, & with the steppes of the poore. "Thou (LORDE) cōsidrest the path of y rightuous, whether it be right, whether the waye of y rightuous be right. Therefore (LORDE) we haue a respecte vnto the waye of thy iudgmentes, thy name and thy remēbraunce reioyse the soule. "My soule lusteth after the all the night lōge, & my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thē the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse. But the vngodly (though he haue receaued 35 grace) yet lerneth he not rightuousnesse, but in that place where he is punished, he offendeth, & feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

LORDE, they may not se thine hie honde, but they shal se it, and be confounded: whē thou shalt deuoure them with the wrath of the people, and with the fyre of thine enemies. But vnto vs (LORDE) prouyde for peace: "for thou werkest in vs all oure workes. O LORDE oure God, though soch lordes haue domination vpon vs as knowe not the: yet graūte, that we maye only hope in the, and kepe thy name in remembrance. "The malicious Tyrantes whē they die, are neither in life nor in the resurrectiō, for thou visitest thē and rootest thē out, and destroyest all the memoryall of them. Agayne, thou increacest the people (o LORDE), thou increacest the people, thou shalt be prayed and magnified in all y endes of the worlde. Like as a wife with childe (whē hir trauayle cōmeth vpon her) 36 is ashamed, crieth and suffreth the payne: Euē so are we (o LORDE) in thy sight. 37 But as for thy dead men and ours, that be departed, they are in life and resurrection. They lie in the earth, they wake, & haue ioye: for thy dew is a dew of life & light. The xviij. Chapter.

WO be to ſ crowne of pryde, to ſ dronkē Ephraemites, ^aand to the faydinge floure, to the glory of his pōpe, ſ is vpō the toppe of the plēteous valley: which mē be ouer laden with wyne. Beholde, the strength and power of the LORDE shal breake in to the londe on euery syde, like a tempest of hale, that beareth downe stronge holdes, and like an horrible, mightie and ouer flowinge water. And the proude crowne of the drunken Ephraemites, shal be troden vnder foote. And as for the faydinge floure, ^athe glory of his pompe, which is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: it shal happen vnto him, as to an vntymely frute before the haruest come. Which as soone as it is sene, is by and by deuoured, or euer it come well in a mans honde.

snared and taken. Wherefore heare the worde of the LORDE, ye mockers that rule the LORDES people, which is at Ierusalē. For ye cōferte youre selues thus: Tush, death q we are at a poynte, q as for hell, we haue made a cōdicion with it: that though there breake out eny sore plage, it shal not come vpon vs. ^aFor with disceate wil we escape, and with nymblenes wil we defende oure selues. ^bTherefore thus saieih the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil laye a stone in Sion, a greate stone, a costly corner stone for a sure foundation: ^cwho so putteth his trust in him, shal not be confōded. And the very feare only shal teach you, when ye heare it. For ⁱ y bedde shal be so narow ^j y a mā cā not lye vpon it. And therefore make no mockes at it, that youre captiuyte increase not: for I haue herde the LORDE of hoostes saye, that there shal come a soden destruction and plage vpon the whole earth. Take hede, and heare my voyce, pondre and merck my wordes wel. Goeth not the husbonde man euer in due season earnestly to his londe? he moweth q ploweth his grounde to sowe. And whē he hath made it playne, he soweth it with fitches or comyn. He soweth ^l y wheate and Barlye in their place, Milium and Rye also in their place. And ^m y he maye do it right, his God teacheth him and sheweth him. For he treadeth not the fitches out with a wayne, nether bringeth he the cart here and there ouer the comyn, but he throsseth ⁿ y fitches out with a fiale, and the comyn with a rod. As for the wheate, he gryndeth it to make bred therof, In as moch as he can not bringe it to passe with treadinge out. For nether the brussinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beastes can grynde it. This and soch like thinges come of the LORDE of hostes which is maruelous in counsell, and greate in rightuousnesse.

WO vnto the o Ariel Ariel, thou cite that Dauid wāne. ^a Take yet some yeares, and let some feastes yet passe ouer: then shal Ariel be beseged, so that she shal be heuy and sorouful, and shal be vnto me euen as a lyon. vnto you, as the wordes that stonde in a sealed lettre, when one offreth it to a man that is lerned, and sayeth: rede vs this lettre. Thē he answereth: I cā not rede it, for it is shutt. But yf it be geuē to one ŷ is not lerned, or sayde vnto him: rede this lettre: Then sayeth he. I can not rede.

Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: ^aFor so moch as this people draweth nye me with their mouth, and prayseth me highly with their lippes (where as there herte neuertheles is farre fro me, and the feare which they owe vnto me, that turne they to mens lawes and doctrynes) therefore wil I also shewe vnto this people, a maruelous terrible and greate thinge (Namely this:): ^bI wil destroye the wisdomē of their wise, and the vnderstōdinge of their lerned men shal perish. ^cWo be vnto them that seke so depe, to hyde their ymaginacion be fore the LORDE, which reheare their couēls in ŷ darknes, and saye: who seith vs, or who knoweth vs?

Which ymaginacion of yours is euen as when the potters claye taketh advisemēt, as though the worke might saye to ŷ worke master: make me not, or as when an erthen vessel saieth of the potter: he vnderstondeth not. ^dSe ye not that it is hard by, that Libanus shalbe turned in to Charnel, and that Charnel shalbe taken as a wodde? Then shal deaf men vnderstonde the wordes of the boke, and the eyes of the blynde shal se without eny cloude or darknes. The oppressed shal holde a mery feast in the LORDE, and the poore people shal reioyse in the holy one of Israel.

Then shal the furious people cease, and ŷ mockers shal be put awaye, and all they ŷ do wronge shalbe rooted out, such as labourē to drawe mē vnto synne: ^eand ŷ disceaue him, which reprocueth them in the gate, and such as turne good personnes to vanite.

And therfore the LORDE (euen the defender of Abraham) saieth thus vnto the house of Iacob: ^fNow shal not Iacob be ashamed, nor his face cōfounded, when he seith amonge his children (whom my hondes haue made) such as halowe my name amonge them: that they maye sanctifie the holy one of Iacob, and feare the God of Israel: and that they which afore tyme were of an erroneous sprete, haue now vnderstondinge, and ŷ such as before coude not speake, are now lerned in my lawe.

The xxx. Chapter.

WO be to those shrenking children (saieth the LORDE) ^gwhich seke counsell, but not at me: which take a webbe in honde, but not after my will: that they maye heape one synne vpon another. They go downe in to Egipte, (and axe me no counsell) to seke helpe at the power of Pharaos, and cōforte in the shadowe of the Egipcians. But Pharaos helpe shalbe youre cōfucion, and the comfote in the Egipcians shadowe shalbe youre owne shame. Your rulers haue bene at Zoan, and youre messangers came vnto Hanes. ^hBut ye shal all be ashamed of the people ŷ maye not helpe you, which shal not bringe you strength or comfote, but shame and confucion.

Your beasts haue borne burthens vpon their backes towardes the South, thorow the waye that is ful of parrill and trouble, because of the lyō and lyones, of the Cockatrice and shutynge dragon. Yee the Mules bare youre substaunce, and the Camels brought youre treasure vpon their coked backes, vnto a people that can not helpe you. For the Egipcians helpe shalbe but vane and lost. Therefore I tolde you also ŷ youre pryde shulde haue an ende. ⁱWherefore go hēce, and write them this in their tables, and note it in a booke: that it maye remayne by their posterite, and be stil kepte. For it is an obstinate people, ^kvnfaithful children, children that will not heare the lawe of the LORDE.

They darre saye to the prophetes: ^lIntromitte youre selues with nothinge, and vnto ŷ Soythsayers: tell us of nothinge for to come, but speake frendly wordes vnto vs, and preach vs false thinges. Treade out of the waye, go out of the path, turne the holy one of Israel from vs. Therefore thus saieth the holy one of Israel: In as moch as ye haue cast of youre bewtie, and confortēd youre selues with power and nymblennesse, and put youre confidence therin: therefore shal ye haue this myschefe agayne for youre destruction and fall, like as an hie wall, that falleth because of some rift (or blast,) whose breackinge cometh sodenly.

And youre destruction shalbe like as an erthe pot, ^awhich breaketh no man touchinge it, yee and breaketh so sore, that a man shal not fynde a sheuer of it to fetch fyre in, or to take water with all out of the pyt. ^bFor the LORDE God, euen the holy one of Israel hath promised thus: With stilsittinge and rest shal ye be healed, In quyetnesse and hope shal youre strength lie. Notwithstandinge ye regarde it not, but ye will saie: No, for thus are we cōstrayned to fle vpon horses. (And therfore shal ye fle) we must ryde vpon swift beastes, and therfore youre persecutours shal yet be swifter. ^cA thousand of you shal fle for one, or at the most for fyue, which do but only geue you euell wordes: vntil ye be desolate, as a ship mast vpon an hill mountayne, and as a beaken vpon an hill.

^dYet stondesth the LORDE waitinge, that he maye haue mercy vpon you, and lifeth him self vp, that he maye receaue you to grace. For the LORDE God is rightuous. Happie are all thei that wate for him. For thus (o thou people of Sion and ye citisens of Ierusalem) shal ye neuer be in heynes, for doubtlesse he will haue mercy vpon the. As soone as he heareth the voyce of thy crie, he will helpe the. The LORDE geueth you the bred of aduersite, and the water of trouble. But thine instructor fleyth not farre from the, yf thine eyes loke vnto thine instructor, and thine eares harken to his worde, that crieth after the and saith: 'This is the waye, go this, and turne nether to the right honde nor the lefte.

Morouer yf ye destroye the syluer workes of youre Idols, and cast awaye the golden coapes that ye deckt them withall (as fylthynges) and saie, get you hence: The wil he geue rayne to the sede, that ye shal sowe in the earth, and geue you breade of the encrease of the earth, so that all shalbe plentifulous and abundaunt. ^eThy catel also shal he fede in the brode meadowes, yee thyne oxen and Mules that till the ground, shal eate good fodder, which is pouged with ^ffyne fanne. Goodly ryuers shal flowe out of all his mountaynes and hilles. In the daye of the greates slaughter when the towers shal fall, ^gthe Moone shal shyne as the Sonne and ^hthe Sonne shalbe seuefold, and haue as moch shyne, as in seuen dayes beside.

In that daye shal the LORDE bynde vpon ⁱbrused sores of his people, and heale their woundes. Beholde, the glory of the LORDE shal come from farre, his face shal burne, that no man shalbe able to abyde it, his lippes shal wagge for very indignation, and his tunge shal be as a consuminge fyre. His breath like a vehement floude of water, which goeth vpon to the throte. That he maye take awaye ^jpeople, which haue turned them selues vnto vanite, and the brydle of erreure, that lieth in other folkes chawes.

But ye shal synge, as the vse is in ^knight of the holy solemnpnite. Ye shal reioyse from youre hert, as they that come with the pipe, when they go vpon to the mount of the LORDE, vnto ^lthe rock of Israel. The LORDE also shal set vpon the power of his voyce, and declare his terrible arme, with his angrie countenance, yee and the flame of the consuminge fyre, with earth quake, tempest of wynde, and hale stones. ^mThen shal the Assirian feare also, because of the voyce of the LORDE, which shal smyte him with the rodde. And the same rodde which the LORDE wil sende vpon him, shal moue the whole foundation: with trompet, with noyse of warre and batell to destroye. ⁿFor he hath prepared the fyre of payne from the begynnyng, yee euen for kynges also. This hath he made deepe and wyde, ^othe norishing therof is fyre and wodde innumerable, which the breath of the LORDE kyndleth, as it were a match of brimstone.

The xxi. Chapter.

WO vnto them that go downe in to ^pEgipte for helpe, and trust in horses, and conforte them selues in Charettes, because they be many, and in horse men because they be lustie and stronge. But they regarde not the holy one of Israel, and they aske no question at the LORDE. Where as he neuertheles plageth ^qthe wicked, and yet goeth not from his worde, whā he steppeth forth and taketh the victory agaynst the housholde of the frauwerde, and against the helpe of euell doers. Now the Egyprians are men, and not God, and their horses flesh and not sprete. altogether be destroyed. For thus hath the LORDE spokē vnto me: "Like as the Lyon or lyōs whelpē roareth vpon the pray that he hath gotten, and is not afrayde, though y multitude of shepardes crie out vpon him, nether abashed for all the heape of them: So shal the LORDE of hoostes come downe from the mount Sion, and defende his hill. Like as byrdes flote aboute their nestes, so shal the LORDE of hoostes kepe, saue, defende and deliuer Ierusalem. Therefore (o ye childrē of Israel) turne agayne, like as ye haue exceded in youre goinge back. For in y daye euery man shal cast out his Idols of syluer and golde, which ye haue made with youre synful hondes. Assur also shalbe slayne with the swerde, not with a mans swerde. A swerde shal deuoure him, but not a mans swerde. And he shal fle from the slaughter, and his seruantes shalbe taken prisoners. He shal go for feare to his stronge holdes, and his prynces shal fle from his badge. This hath y LORDE spokē, whose light burneth in Sion, and his fyre in Ierusalem.

The xxiij. Chapter.

BEHOULDE, the kinge shal gouerne after y rule of rightuousnes, and y princes shal rule accordinge to the balaunce of equite. He shalbe vnto mē, as a defence for the wynde, and as a refuge for the tempest, like as a ryuer of water in a thurstie place, and y shadowe of a greate rock in a drie lode. The eyes of the seinge shall not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take diligēt hede. The hert of the vnwise, shal attayne to knowlege, and the vnparfite tūge shal speake planely and distinctly. Then shal the nygarde be no more called gentle, ner the churle lybe-rall. But the churle wil be churlishly mynded, and his hert wil worke euell and playe the ypodrite, and ymagyn abhominaciōs agaynst God, to make the hungrie leane, and to withholdē drinke from the thurstie: These are the perloous weapons of the cuetous, these be his shameful counceils: that he maye begyle the poore with disceatful workes, yee euen there as he shulde geue sentence with the poore. But the liberrall person ymagineth honest thinges, and commeth vp with honesty.

Vp (ye rich and ydle cities), harken vnto

my voyce. Ye careles cities, marcke my wordes. After yeaeres and dayes shal ye be brought in feare, o ye carelesse cities. For Haruest shalbe out, and the grape gatheringe shal not come. O ye rich ydle cities, ye that feare no parell, ye shalbe abashed and remoued: when ye se the barennesse, the nakednesse and preparinge to warre. Ye shal knock vpō youre brestes, because of the pleasaunt felde, and because of the fruteful vynyarde. My peoples felde shal bringe thornes and thistels, for in euery house is voluptuousnes in the cities, wilfulness. The palaces also shalbe broken, and the greatly occupide cities desolate. The towers and bulwerckes shal become dennes for euermore, the pleasure of Mules shalbe turned to pasture for shepe: Vnto the tyme that y sprete be poured vpon vs from aboue.

Then shal the wildernesse be a fruteful felde and the plenteous felde shalbe rekened for a wodde. Then shal equyte dwell in the deserte, and rightuousnesse in a fruteful londe. And the rewarde of rightuousnesse shalbe peace, and hir frute rest and quietnesse for euer. And my people shal dwell in the ynnnes of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynough in the all. And whē the hale falleth, it shal fall in the wodde and in the citie. O how happy shal ye be, whē ye shal safely sowe youre sede besyde all waters and dryue thither the fete of youre oxē and asses.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THEREFORE wo vnto the (o robber) shalt not thou be robbed also? and vnto the that laiest wait, as who saye there shulde no waite be layde for the? Wo vnto the which doest hurte, euen so shalt thou be hurt also. And as thou layest waite, so shalt wait be layde for the also.

Graūte that the people maye fle at the anger of thy voyce, and that at thy vpstondinge the Gentiles maye be scatred abroad, and that their spoyle maye be gathered, as the gres-hoppers are comonly gathered together in to the pyt. and rightousnesse. Let treuth and faithfulness be in hir tyme: power, health, wisdom, knowlege & the feare of God are hir treasure. Beholde, their aungels crie with out, the messaungers of peace wepe bitterly. The stretes are waist, there walketh no man therin, the appoyntment is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heuynes. Libanus taketh it but for a sporte, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Basā & Charmel are turned vpside downe. And therefore saith ȝ LORDE: I wil vp, now wil I get vp, now wil I aryse. ^a Ye shal conceaue stubble, and beare strawe, & youre sprete shal be the fyre, that it maye consume you: & the people shalbe burnt like lyme, & as thornes burne that are hewen of, & cast in the fyre.

Now herken to (ye that are farre of) how I do with them, & cōsidre my glory, ye that be at honde. The synners at Sion are afrayde, a sodane fearfulness is come vpon the ypo-crytes. What is he amonge us (saye they) that will dwell by that consumynge fyre? which of vs maye abyde that euerlasting heate? ^b He that ledeth a godly life (saye I) & speaketh the treuth: He that abhorreth to do violence and disceate: he that kepeth his hōde that he touch no rewarde: which stoppeth his eares, that he heare no counceyl agaynst the innocent: which holdeth downe his eyes, that he se no euel. He it is, that shal dwell on hie, whose sauegarde shalbe in the true rocke, to him shalbe geuen the right true meat & drynke. His eyes shal se the kynge in his glory: & in the wyde worlde, and his herte shal delite in the feare of God. ^c What shal then become of the scribe? ^d of the Senatore? what of him that teacheth childrē? There shalt thou not se a people of a straunge tūge, to haue so diffused a lāguage, that it maye not be vnderstonde: nether so straunge a speache, but it shal be perceaued.

There shal Sion be sene, the head citie of oure solempe feastes. There shal thine eyes se Ierusalem that glorious habitation: the tabernacle that neuer shal remoue,^e whose nales shal neuer be taken out worlde without ende, whose coardes euerychone shal neuer corruppe: for the glorious Magesty of the LORDE shal there be present amōge vs. In that place (where fayre broad ryuers & streames are) shal nether Gallye rowe, ner greate shippe sale. For the LORDE shalbe oure capteyne, ^f the LORDE shalbe oure lawe geuer, The LORDE shalbe oure kinge, & he himself shalbe oure Sauoure. There are the coardes so layd abrode, that they cā not be better: The mast set vp of soch a fashion, that no bāner ner sale hāgeth therō: but there is dealed greate spoyle, yee lame men runne after the pray. There lieth no mā that saieith: I am sick, but all euel is taken awaye from the people, that dwel there.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

COME ye Heithen & heare, take hede ye people. Herkē thou earth & all that is therein: thou rounde cōpasse & al that groweth thervpon: for the LORDE is angrie with al people, & his displeasure is kindled agaynst all the multitude of them, to curse them, & to slaye them. So that their slayne shalbe cast out, & their bodies stincke: that eue the very hilles shalbe wet with the bloude of them. All the starres of heauen shalbe consumed, & the heauen shal folde together like a roll, ^g & all the starres therof shall fall, like as the leaues fall from the vynes and fygetrees. For my swearde (saieith he) shalbe bathed in heauen, & shal immediatly come downe vpon Idumea, and vpon the people which I haue cursed for my vengeance.

And the LORDES swearde shalbe full of bloude, & be rustie with the fatnesse & bloude of lambes and gootes, with the fatnesse of neeres of the wethers. For the LORDE shal kyl a great offeringe in Bosra, and in the londe of Idumea. There shal the Vnicornes fall with the Bulles, (that is with the giauntes) and their londe shalbe washed with bloude, & their grounde corrupte with fatnesse. Vnto the also (o Sion) shal come the daye of the vengeance of God,^h and the yere when as thine owne iudgmentes shalbe recompensed. Thy floudes shalbe turned to pytch, and thine earth to brymstone, & therewith shal the londe be kyndled, so that it shal not be quenched daye ner night: But smoke euermore, & so forth to lie waist. And no man shal go thorow thy londe for euer: ⁱ But Pellicanes, Storkes, great Oules, and Rauens shall haue it in possession, & dwell there in.

Thornes shal growe in their palaces, nettels & thistles in their stronge holdes, y the dragons maye haue their pleasure therin, & that they maye be a courte for Estriches. ^aThere shal straunge visures and monstuous beastes mete one another, & the wyld kepe company together. There shal the lamia lye, & haue hir lodginge. There shall the hedhogge buylde, digge, be there at home, and bringe forth his yonge ones. There shal the kytes come together, ech one to his like.

^a Seke thorow the scripture of the LORDE & rede it. There shal none of these thinges be left out, there shal not one (ner soch like) fayle. For what his mouth commaundeth, that same doth his sprete gather together (or fulfillth). Vpon whom so euer y lot falleth, or to whom he dealeth it with the line: those shal possesse the enheritaunce from generacion to generacion, and dwel therin.

The xxxv. Chapter.

BUT the deserte & wilderness shal reioyse, ^a & y waist grounde shal be glad, and florish as the lilly. She shal florish pleasauntly, and be ioyful, and euer be geuyng of thanks more and more. For y glory of libanus, the bewty of Charmel & Sarō shalbe geuen her. These shal knowe the honoure of the LORDE, and the magesty of oure God. And therfore strength y weake hōdes, and conforte the feble knees. ^c Saye vnto them that are of a fearful hert: Be of good chere, and feare not. Beholde: youre God cometh, to take vengeance & to rewarde, God cometh his owne self, and wil deluyer you. ^d Then shal the eyes of the blinde be lightned, and the eares of the deaff opened. Then shal the lame man leape as an herte, & the domme māns tūge shal geue thanks.

^e In the wilderness also there shal welles springe, and floudes of water in the deserte. The drie grounde shal turne to ryuers, and the thurstie to springes of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shal growe swete floures and grene rushes. There shalbe footpathes & comon strates, this shalbe called the holy waye. No vnclene person shal go thorow it, for the LORDE himself shal go with thē that waye, and the ignorāit shal not erre. There shalbe no lyon, and no rauyshinge beast shall come therin nor be there, but men shal go there fre and safe. ^f And the redemed of the LORDE shal conuerte, and come to Sion with thankesgeuinge. Euerlastinge ioye shal they haue, pleasure & gladnesse shalbe amōge them, And as for all sorow and heynes, it shal vanish awaye.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

IN the xliij. yeare of kinge Ezechias, ^g came Sennacherib kinge of the Assirians downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the kinge of the Assiriās sent Rabsaches from Lachis toward Ierusalem, agaynst kinge Ezechias, with a greuous hooste, which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth thorow y fullers lōde. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim ^h Helchias sonne the presydent, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabsaches sayde vnto them: Tel Ezechias, that the greате kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumption is this, that thou trustest vnto? Thou thinkest (peraduētūre) that thou hast councel & power ynough, to mayntene this warre: or els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest thi self of fro me? lo, Thou putttest thy trust in a broken staff of rede ⁱ (I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vpon, it goeth in to his honde & shuteth him thorow. Euen so is Pharao the kinge of Egipte, vnto all thē that trust in him. But yf thou woldest saye to me: We trust in y LORDE oure God: A goodly god, in dede: whose hie places & aulteres Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Iuda and Ierusalem, to worshipe only before the aulter. Abyde the, thou hast made a condicion with my lorde the kinge of the Assiriās, that he shulde geue the two thousande horses: Art thou able to set mē there vp? Seinge now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest pryncce that my lorde hath, how darrest thou trust in y charettes and horse men of Egipte? will? The LORDE sayde vnto me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna & Iohah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruantes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstonde it well: And speake not to vs in the Iewes tunge, lest the folcke heare, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answered Rabsaches: Thinke ye, [¶] the kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you? Hath he not sent me to the also, that lie vpon the wall? that they be not compelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabsaches stode stiff, & cried with a loude voyce in the Iewes tūge, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greates kinge of the Assiriās geueth you warnynge. Thus saith the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceaue you, for he shal not be able to delyuer you. Morouer, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saith: The LORDE with out doute shal defende vs, & shal not geue ouer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of the Assiriās, beleue him not. But thus saith the kinge of Assiria: opteyne my fauoure, enclyne to me: So maye euery mā enioye his vynyards and fygetrees, and drinke the water of his cisterne: vnto the tyme that I come myself, & bringe you in to a londe, [¶] is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both sown with sede, and planted with vynyards. Let not Ezechias disceaue you, when he sayeth vnto you: the LORDE shal delyuer us.

¶ Might the goddesses of the Gentiles kepe euerymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians? Wher is the God of hemath & Arphad? Where is the God of Sepharnaim? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddesses of the lōdes, hath deliuered their countre out of my power, so that the LORDE shulde delyuer Ierusalem for my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde their tungen, and answered not one worde: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answer. So came Eliachim Elchias sonne the presidēt, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, & tolde him the wordes of Rabsaches.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

¶ WHEN Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes, & put on a sack cloth, & went in to the temple of the LORDE. But he sent Eliachim the Presidēt, Sobna the scribe with the eldest prestes cloothed in sack, vnto the Prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, & they sayde vnto him: Thus saith Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plage & of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORDE thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lorde [¶] kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to defie & blaspheme the Iuyng God: with soch wordes, as the LORDE thy God hath herde right well. And therefore lift vp thy prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruantes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answer: Saie thus vnto youre lorde: thus saith the LORDE: Be not afraide of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherwith the kinge of Assiriās seruantes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him, as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his countre, there will I destroye him with the swerde. ¶ Now when Rabsaches returned, he founde [¶] kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstonde, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came a rumoure, [¶] Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the kinge of Assiria herde [¶], he sent other messaungers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Iuda: Let not thy God disceaue the, in whom thou hopest, & sayest: Ierusalē shal not be geuē in to the hondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, & hopest thou to escape? Were the people of the Gētiles (whom my progenitours cōquered) deliuered at any tyme thorow their goddesses? As namely, Gozan, Haran, Rezeph, & the childrē of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of Hemath, & the kinge of Arphad, & the kinge of the cite Sepharnaim, Ena and Aua? Now when Ezechias had receaued [¶] lettre of the messaungers, & red it, he went vp in to the house of the LORDE, & opened the lettre before [¶] LORDE. And Ezechias prayed before the LORDE on this maner: O LORDE of hoostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest vpō Cherubin. "Thou art the God, that only is God of all the kingdomes of the worlde,^b for thou only hast created hauē & earth. Encline thine eare LORDE & cōsidre, open thine eyes (o LORDE,) & se, and pondre all the wordes of Sēnacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blaspheme the, the lyuyngē God. It is true (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria haue cōquered all kingdomes & londes, & cast their goddes in the fyre. Notwithstōdinge those were no goddes but the workes of mens hondes, of wodd or stone, therfore haue they destroyed them. Delyuer vs then (o LORDE oure God) from the hondes of Sennacherib, & all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art & LORDE. Then Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saieth & LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me, as touchinge Sennacherib, this is the answere, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, & mocked (o daughter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o daughter of Ierusalem.^c But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasphemed? "And agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, & exalted thy proude lokes? euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. Thou with thy seruantes hast blasphemēd the LORDE, and thus holdest thou of thy self: I couer the hie mountaynes, & sydes of Libanus with my horsmen. And there wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees & the fayrest Fyrre trees. I will vp in to the heyth of it & in to the chefest of his timbre woddēs. Yf there be no water, I wil graue & drynke. And as for waters of defence, I shal drie them vp with the fete of myne hooste. Yee (saiest thou) hast thou not herde, what I haue taken in honde, & brought to passe of olde tyme? That same wil I do now also: waist, destroye, & bringe the stronge cities vnto heapes of stones. For their inhabitours shalbe like lame men, brought in feare & confounded. They shalbe like the grasse & grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpō house toppes, that wythereth, afore it be growne vp.

I knowe thy wayes, thy goinge forth & thy cōmyngē home, yee & thy madnesse agaynst me. Therfore thy furiousnesse agaynst me, & thy pryde is come before me. I wil put a rynge in thy nose, & a bridle byt in the chawes of the, & turne the aboute, euē the same waye thou camest. I wil geue the also this token (o Ezechias) this yeaere shalt thou eate that is kepte in stoare, & the next yeaere such as groweth of himself, and in the thirde yeaere ye shal sowe and reape, yee ye shal plante vynyards, and enioye the frutes therof.

And soch of the house of Iuda as are escaped, shal come together, and the remnaunt shal take rote beneth, & bringe forth frute aboue. For the escaped shal go out of Ierusalē, & the remnaunte from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE, cōcernynge the kinge of the Assirians: He shall not come in to the citie, and shal shute no arowe in to it, there shall no shilde hurte it, nether shal they graue aboute it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this citie, saieth the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the citie (saith he) for myne owne, & for my seruante Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth, & slewe of the Assirians hooste, an clxxxv. thousande.^d And when men arose vp early (at Ierusalē:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians brake vp, and dwelt at Ninieue. Afterwarde it chaunsed, as he prayed in the Tēple of Nesrah his god, that Adramalech and Sarazer his owne sonnes slewe him with the swearde, and fled in to the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after him.

The xxxviiiij. Chapter.

NOT longe afore this, was Ezechias dead-^a sick: "And the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaundeth the LORDE: Set thyne house in ordre, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face towarde the wall, & prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I haue walked before the in treuth and a stedfast hert, and haue done the thinge that is pleasant to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. Thē sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy father sendeth & this worde: "I haue herde thy prayer, and considred thy teares: beholde, I will put xv yeares mo vnto thy life, and delyuer the and the cite also, from the honde of the kinge of Assiria, for I will defende the cite. "And take the this token of the LORDE, \forall he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will returne the shadowe of Ahas Diall, \forall it now is layed out with the Sonne, and bringe it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesgeuyng, which Ezechias kinge of Iuda wrote, when he had bene sicke, τ was recovered.

C I thought I shulde haue gone to the gates of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeares.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer se man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde.

Myne age is folden vp together and taken awaye fro me, like a sheperdes cotage: my lyfe is hewen of, like as a weeuier cutteth of his webb.

Whyl I was yet takeinge my rest, he hewed me of, τ made an ende of me in one daie.

\forall I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he brussed my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daye.

Then chated I like a swalowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a doue.

I lift vp myne eyes in to \forall hight: O LORDE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou suertie for me.

B What shal I speake or saye, that he maye this doo? \forall I maye lyue out all my yeares, yee in the bytternesse of my life?

Verely (LORDE,) men must lyue in bytternesse, τ all my life must I passe ouer therin: For thou raysest me vp, and wakest me. But lo, I wilbe wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my cōuersacion hath so pleased \forall , that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my synnes beynde thy backe.

For hell prayseth not the, τ death doth not magnifie the.

They that go downe in to the graue, prayse not thy truth: but the lyuyng, yee the lyuyng acknowledge the, like as I do this daye.

The father telleth his children of thy faithfulness.

Delyuer vs (o LORDE) and we wil synge prayses in thy house, all the dayes of oure life.

And Esay sayde: take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the sore, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thinge is this, that I shal go vp in to the house of the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

AT the same tyme Merodach Baladā,^d Baladās sonne kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he vnderstode, how that he had bene sick, τ was recovered agayne. "And Ezechias was glad therof, τ shewed them the cōmodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spyes τ routes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cubboordes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, τ so thorow out all his kingdome, but he let them se it.

Thē came Esay the prophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue \forall men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre countre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyne house? Ezechias answerde: All that is in myne house, haue they sene: and there is nothinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: \forall Vnderstōde the worde of the LORDE of hoostes, Beholde, the tyme wil come, that every thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy progenitours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daye, shalbe caried to Babilon, and nothinge left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shalbe caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne councel, which thou hast tolde me. He sayde morouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulness in my tyme.

hath reaeued of the LORDES honde sufficient correction for all hir synnes. A voyce crieth: ^aPrepare $\frac{1}{2}$ waye for the LORDE in the wyldernesse, make straight $\frac{1}{2}$ path for oure God in the deserte. Let all valles be exalted, and euery mountayne and hill be layde lowe. What so is croked, let it be made straight, and let the rough places be made playne felde. ^bFor the glory of the LORDE shal appeare, $\frac{1}{2}$ all flesh shal se it, for why, $\frac{1}{2}$ mouth of the LORDE hath spoken it.

The same voyce spake: Now crie. And I sayde: what shal I crie? Then spake it: that, all flesh is grasse, and that all the bewtie therof, is as the floure of the felde. ^cWhen the grasse is wyththered, the floure falleth awaye. Euen so is the people as grasse, when the breath of the LORDE bloweth vpon them. ^dNeuerthelesse whether the grasse wyther, or the floure fade awaye: ^eYet the worde of oure God endureth for euer. Morouer the voyce cried thus: Go vp vnto the hill (o Sion) thou that bringest good tidings, lift vp thy voyce with power, o thou preacher Jerusalem. Lift it vp without feare, and say vnto the cities of Iuda: ^fBeholde, youre God: beholde, the LORDE, euen the almightie shal come with power, $\frac{1}{2}$ beare rule with his arme. Beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, and his workes go before him. He shal fede his flock like an hirdman. ^gHe shal gather the lambes together with his arme, and carie them in his bosome, $\frac{1}{2}$ shal kindly in-treate those that beare yonge.

Who hath holden the waters in his fist? Who hath measured heauen with his spanne, and hath comprehended all the earth of $\frac{1}{2}$ worlde in thre fyngers? Who hath weyed the mountaynes and hilles? ^hWho hath re-fourmed the mynde of the LORDE? Or who is of his counceyl to teach him? At whom hath he asked counceyl, to make him vnderstode, and to lerne him the waye of iudgment: to teach him science, and to en-structe him in the waye of vnderstodinge? Beholde, all people are in cōparison of him, as a droppe to a bucket full, and are counted as the leest thinge $\frac{1}{2}$ the balance weyeth. Beholde, $\frac{1}{2}$ Iles are in comparison of him, as the shadowe of the Sonne beame. Libanus is not sufficiēt to minstre fyre for his offringe, and all the beastes therof are not ynough to one sacrifice. All people in comparison of him, are rekened, as nothinge, ⁱyeue wayne vanite and emptynesse.

To whom then will ye lickē God? or what similitude will ye set vp vnto him? Shal the caruer make him a carued ymage? and shal the goldsmith couer him with golde, or cast him in to a fourme of syluer plates? Morouer shal the ymage maker ($\frac{1}{2}$ the poore man which is disposed, maye haue somthinge to set vp also) seke out and chose a tre, that is not rotten, and carue therout an ymage, $\frac{1}{2}$ moueth not? Knowe ye not this? Herde ye neuer of it? Hath it not bene preached vnto you sence the begynnynge? Haue ye not bene enformured of this, sence the foundation of $\frac{1}{2}$ earth was layde: That he syteth vpon the Circle of the worlde, and that all the inhabitours of the worlde are in cōparison of him, but as greshoppers: ^jThat he spredeth out the heaues as a coueringe, that he stretcheth them out, as a tent to dwell in: That he bringeth princes to nothinge, and the iudges of the earth to dust: so that they be not planted nor sowne agayne, nether their stocke rooted agayne in the earth? For as soone as he bloweth vpon them, they wither $\frac{1}{2}$ fade awaye, like the strawe in a whirle wynde.

To whom now wil ye licken me, $\frac{1}{2}$ whom shal I be like, saith the holy one? ^kLift vp youre eyes an hie, and conside. Who hath made those thinges, which come out by so greate heapes? and he can call them all by their names. ^lFor there is nothinge hyd vnto the greatnesse of his power, strength, and might. Knowest thou not, or hast thou not herde, that the euerlastinge God, the LORDE which made all the corners of the earth, is nether weery nor faynt, and that his wisdome cannot be comprehended: but that he geueth strength vnto the weery, and power vnto the faynte? BE still (ye Ilondes) and herken vnto me. Be stronge ye people, Come hither, and shew youre cause, we will go to the lawe together. Who rayseth vp \hat{y} iuste from the rysinge of the Sonne, and calleth him to go forth? Who casteth downe the people, and subdueth the kinges before him: that he maye throwe them all to the groude with his swearde, and scatere them like stuble with his bowe? He foloweth vpon them, and goeth safely himself, and cometh in no footpath with his fete. Who hath made, created, and called the generacions from the begynnyng? Euen I the LORDE, "which am the first, and with the last.

Beholde ye Iles, that ye maye feare, and ye endes of the earth, that ye maye be abashed, draw nye, and come hither. Euery man hath exorted his neghbourne, and brother, and bydden him be stronge. The Smyth comforted the moulder, τ the Ironsmyth the hammerman, sayenge: It shalbe good, that we fasten this cast worke: and then they fastened it with nales, that it shulde not be moued. And thou Israel my seruau: Iacob my electe sede of Abrahā my beloued, whom I led from the endes of the earth by the honde: For I called the from farre, τ saide vnto the: Thou shalt be my seruau: \hat{d} I haue chosen the, τ will not cast \hat{y} awaye: be not afraide, for I wil be with \hat{y} . Loke not behinde \hat{y} , for I wil be thy God, to strēth \hat{y} , helpe \hat{y} , τ to kepe \hat{y} with this right hōde of myne. Beholde, all they that resist the, shal come to confucion and shame: and thine aduersaries shalbe destroyed τ brought to naught. So that who so seketh after them, shal not fynde them. Thy destroyers shal perish, τ so shall they that vndertake to make batell agaynst the. For I thy LORDE τ God, wil strength thy right honde. Euen I that saye vnto the: Feare not, I will helpe the. Be not afraide thou litle worme Iacob, and thou despyed Israel: For I will helpe the, saieyth the LORDE, τ the holyone of Israel thine avenger. Beholde, I wil make the a treadinge cart τ a new fiale, \hat{y} thou mayest throsshe τ grynde the moun-taines, and bringe the hilles to poulder. Thou shalt faune them, τ the wynde shal carie them awaye, τ the whyrlwynde shal scatere thē. But thou shalt reioyse in the LORDE, and shalt delite in praysinge the holyone of Israel.

When the thirstie and poore seke water τ fynde none, \hat{c} τ when their tunge is drie of thirst: \hat{d} I geue it them, saieyth the LORDE. I the God of Israel forsake them not. I bringe forth floudes in the hilles, τ welles in the playne feldes. I turne \hat{y} wildernes to ryuers, and the drie londe to condytes of water. I plante in the wayst grounde trees of Cedre, Boxe, Myrre and olyues. And in the drie, I set Fyrre trees, elmes and hawthornes together. All this do I, \hat{y} they altogether maye se and marcke, perceauē with their hertes, τ considre: that the honde of the LORDE maketh these thinges, and that the holyone of Israel bringeth them to passe. Stonde at youre cause (saieyth the LORDE) and bringe forth youre strōge grounde, counceleth the kinge of Iacob. Let the goddes come forth them selues, and shewe vs the thinges \hat{y} are past, what they be: let thē declare thē vnto vs, \hat{y} we maye take them to herte, and knowe them hereafter. Ether, let thē shewe vs thinges for to come, and tel vs what shalbe done hereafter: so shal we knowe, that they be goddes. Shewe somthinge, ether good or bad, so wil we both knowlege \hat{y} same, τ tel it out.

Beholde, ye goddes are of naught, τ youre makinge is of naught, but abomination hath chosen you. Neuertheles I haue waked vp one from the North, τ he shal come. And another from the East, which shal call vpō my name, τ shal come to the prynces, as the Potter to his claye, τ as \hat{y} Potter treadeth downe the myre. Who tolde \hat{y} afore? So wil we confesse τ saye, that he is rightuous. But there is none that sheweth or declareth eny thinge, there is none also that heareth youre wordes. Beholde, I will first graūte thē of Sion τ Ierusalem to be Euangelistes. But when I cōsidre: there is not one amonge thē \hat{y} propheciethe, nether (when I axe him) \hat{y} answereth one worde. BEHOULDE now therefore, this is my seruauunt whom I will kepe to my self: my electe, In whom my soule shalbe pacified. I will geue him my sprete, that he maye shewe forth iudgment & equitye amonge the Gentiles. He shal not be an outcryer, ner an hie mynded person. His voyce shall not be herde in \hat{y} stretes. A brussed rede shal he not breake, & the smoking flax shal he not quench: but faithfully & truly shal he geue iudgmēt. He shal nether be ouersene ner haistie, that he maye restore rightuousnesse vnto the earth: & the Gētiles also shal kepe his lawes. ^aFor thus saith God the LORDE vnto him (Euen he that made the heauens, and spred them abrode, & set forth the earth with hir encrease: which geueth breath vnto the people that is in it, & to them that dwel therein) I the LORDE haue called \hat{y} in rightuousnesse, & led the by the honde. Therefore wil I also defende the, & geue the for a couenaunt of the people, & to be the light of the Gētiles. ^cThat thou mayest open the eyes of the blinde, let out the prysoners, & them that syt in darknesse, out of the dongeon house. I myself, whose name is the LORDE, which geue my power to none other, nether myne honoure to the goddes: shewe you these new tidinges, and tel you them or they come, for olde thinges also are come to passe.

^dSynge therefore vnto the LORDE, a new songe of thakes geuyng, blow out his prayse vnto the ende of the worlde. They that be vpon the see, & all that is therein, prayse him, the Iles & they that dwel in them. Let the wildernes with hir cities lift vp hir voyce, the townes also that be in Cedar. Let them be glad that syt vpon rockes of stone, and let them crie downe from the hie mountaynes: ascribinge almightynes vnto the LORDE, & magnifiene him amonge the Gētiles. ^eThe LORDE shal come forth as a gyaunte, and take a stomacke to him like a fresh man of warre. He shal roare and crie, and ouercome his enemies.

I haue longe holden my peace (saith the LORDE) shulde I therefore be still, and kepe sylence for euer? I will crie like a trauelinge woman, and once wil I destroye, and deuoure. I wil make waist both mountayne & hill, & drie vp euery grene thinge, that groweth theron. I wil drie vp the floudes of water, & drinke vp the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde in to a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a fote path, that they are ignoraunt in. I shal make darknesse light before thē, & the thinge \hat{y} is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, & not forget them. ^fAnd therefore let them conuerte, and be ashamed earnestly, that hope in Idols, & saye to fashioned ymages: ye are oure godes.

Hear, o ye deaf men, and sharpen youre sightes to se (o ye blinde.) ^gBut who is blynder, thē my seruauunt? Or so deaf, as my messaungers, whom I sent vnto them? For who is so blynde as my people, & they \hat{y} haue the rule of them? They are like, as yf thou vnderstodest moch, and keptest nothinge: or yf one herde well, but were not obedient. The LORDE be merciful vnto them for his rightuousnesse sake, that his worde might be magnified & praysed. But it is a myscheuous & wiked people. Their yonge men belonge all to the snare, & shal be shut in to preson houses. ^hThey shal be caried awaye captiue and no man shal lowse them. They shal be trodē vnder fote, ⁱ& no man shal labour to bringe thē agayne. But who is he amonge you, \hat{y} pondreth this in his mynde, \hat{y} considreth it, & taketh it for a warnyng in tyme to come?

^jWho suffred Iacob to be trodden vnder fote, and Israel to be spoyled? dyd not the LORDE? Now haue we synned agaynst him, and haue had no delite to walke in his wayes, nether bene obedient vnto his lawe. Therefore hath he poured vpon vs his wroothful displeasure, and strōge batell, which maketh vs haue to do on euery syde, yet will we not vnderstōde: He burneth vs vp, yet syncketh it not in to oure hartes.

[¶] Bringe forth that people, whether they haue eyes or be blynde, [¶] deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shal declare soch thinges, [¶] tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witnesss, so shal they be fre: for the men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesss (saith the LORDE) euen those that are my seruantes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithful credence: yee and to cōsidre, that I am he, before whom there was neuer eny God, and that there shalbe none after me. [¶] I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauioüre. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shulde be no straunge God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saith the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnyng, and there is none, [¶] that can take eny thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man chaunge.

[¶] Thus saith the LORDE the holy one of Israel youre redemer: [¶] For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boost them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE youre holy one which haue made Israel, and am your kinge. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, [¶] and a footpath in the mightie waters: which bringeth forth the charettes and horses, the hooste and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

[¶] Ye remembre not thinges of olde, and regarde nothinge that is past. Therfore beholde, I shal make a new thinge, and shortly shal it apeare: Ye shall well knowe it, I tolde it you afore, but I will tell it you agaane.

I will make stretes in the deserte, and ryuers of water in the wilderness. The wilde beastes shal worshippe me: the dragon, and the Estrich. [¶] For I shall geue water in [¶] wilderness, and streames in the deserte: that I maye geue drike to my people, whom I chose. This people haue I made for my self, and they shal shewe forth my prayse. For thou (Iacob) woldest not call vpon me, but thou haddest an vnlust towarde me, o Israel. Thou gauest me not thy yonge beastes for burntofferings, nether didest honoure me with thy sacrifices. Thou boughtest me no deare spice with thi money, nether pourest the fat of thy sacrifices vpon me. [¶] Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offrages, nether greuous in Incense.

[¶] But thou hast ladē me with thy synnes, and weered me with thy vngodlynnes: Where as I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne selves sake do awaye thine offences, [¶] forget thy synnes: so that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembraunce (for we will reason together) [¶] shewe what thou hast for the, to make the quyte. [¶] Thy first father offended sore, and thy rulers haue synned agaynst me. Therefore I ether suspended, or slewe the chefest prynces: I dyd curse Iacob, and gaue Israel in to reprove.

The xliii. Chapter.

[¶] SO heare now, o Iacob my seruaut, and [¶] Israel whom I haue chose. For thus saith the LORDE, that made the, fashioned the, and helped the, euen from thy mothers wombe: Be not afraide (o Iacob my seruante,) thou rightuous, whom I haue chosen. [¶] For I shal poure water vpon the drie grounde, and ryuers vpon the thirstie. I shal poure my sprete vpon thi sede, and myne encrease vpo thy stocke. They shal growe together, like as the grasse, and as the Willies by the waters side. One will saye: I am the LORDES. Another wil call vnder the name of Iacob. The thirde shal subscribe with his honde vnto ꝑ LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

B Morouer, thus hath the LORDE spokē: "euen the kinge of Israel, and his avenger, ꝑ LORDE of hoostes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlastinge? Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be likened vnto me. Let him tell you forth planely thiges, that are past and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hyther to, & warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?"

Wherefore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their laboure lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seinge they can nether se ner vnderstonde) they shalbe confounded.

^a Who shulde now make a god, or fashiō an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge?

C Beholde all the felashippe of thē must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amonge men: they must be abashed and confounded one with another. The smyth taketh yron, and tempred it with hote coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, & maketh it with all the strength of his armes: Yee somtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and so thurstie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh me the tymbre, and spredeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, & squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and accordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

Morouer, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: He bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodd. Or els the Fyrre trees which he planted himself, & soch as the rayne hath swelled, of which wodde serueth for mē to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himself withall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bred. And after warde maketh a god there of, to honour it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One pece he burneth in the fyre, with another he roseth flesh, that he maye eate roste his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himself, and saieyth: A ha: I am well warmed, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: delyuer me, for thou art my god.

D Yet men nether considre ner vnderstonde, because their eyes are stopped, that they can not se: and their hertes, that they can not perceauē. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstōdinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēt one pece in the fyre, I haue baked bred with ꝑ coles there of, I haue rosted flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten pece of wodd? The keepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not I erre?

Considre this (o Iacob and Israel) for thou art my seruait. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne ꝑ agayne vnto me, & I will delyuer ꝑ.

E Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all ꝑ is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & woddēs, with all the trees that are in you: for ꝑ LORDE shal redeme Iacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saieyth the LORDE thy redemer, euen he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: I am the LORDE, which do all thinges my self alone. I only haue spred out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundation of the earth. I destroye the tokens of witches, and make the Sothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turne them backward, and make their conninge folishnesse.

But I set vp the purpose of my seruantes, and fulfil the counsell of my messaūgers. I saye to Ierusalē: turne agayne: And to the cities of Iuda, be ye buylded agayne: and I repayre their decayed places. I saye to the

The xlv. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE vnto Cirus his anoynted,^a whom he ledeth by [†] right hōde: that the people maye fall downe before him: I wil lowse the gyrdle of kinges, [†] they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their dores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen dores, [†] burst the yron barres. I shall geue thee the hyd treasure, [†] the thinge which is secretly kepte: that thou mayest knowe, [†] [†] I the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Iacob my seruauit sake, [†] for Israel my chosen. For I called the by thy name, and ordered the, or euer thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, [†] before whom there is none other, for without me there is no God. I haue prepared the, [†] or euer thou knewest me: that it might be knowne from the risynge of the Sonne to the goynge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. [†] For I am the LORDE, [†] [†] there is els none. It is I [†] created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble: Yee euen I the LORDE do all these thinges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne rightuousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal rightuousnes florish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

B [†] Wo be vnto him that chydeth with his maker, the potsherde with the potter. Saith [†] claye to the potter: What makest thou? or, thy worke serueth for nothynge? Wo be vnto him, [†] saith to his father: why begetteth thou? And to his mother: why bearest thou? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one [†] maker of Israel: Axe me of thinges for to come, concernynge my sonnes: and put me in remembraunce, as touchinge the workes of my hōdes: I haue made the earth, and created mā vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commandment for all the hooste therof. I shal wake him vp with rightuousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buylde my cite, [†] let out my prisoners: [†] that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer: The occupiers of Egipte, the marchautes of the Moryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shalbe thine, they shal folowe the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God (with out whō there is none other God) shal be with the. [†] O how profounde art thou o God, thou God [†] Sauioure of Israel? Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure: go hence together with shame, all ye that be workmasters of erreure: (that is worshippers of Idols.) But Israel shalbe saued in the LORDE, which is the euerlasting saluaciō: They shal not come to shame ner confucion, worlde without ende.

For thus sayeth the LORDE: [†] euen he that created heauen, the God [†] made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be enhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly,[†] nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the sede of Iacob: seke me. I am the LORDE, which whē I speake, declare the thinge that is rightuous and true. Let thē be gathered [†] come together, let thē drawe nye hyther, [†] are escaped of the people: Haue they eny vnderstandynge,[†] that set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that cā not helpe thē? Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, [†] ad aske councel one at another, and shewe forth: What is he, that tolde this before? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnynge? Haue not I [†] LORDE done it: without [†] whom there is none other God? the true God and sauioure, [†] and there is els none but I? And therefore turne you vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saued, for I am God, [†] there is els none. I sweare by my self: out of my mouth cōmeth [†] worde of rightuousnesse, and that maye no man turne: but all knees shal bowe vnto me,[†] and all tungen shal sweare by me, sayenge: Verely in the LORDE is my rightuousnes and NEUERTHELES Bel shal fall, ⁊ Nabo shalbe broken: whose ymages are a burthē for the beastes and catell, to ouerlade thē, and to make them weery. They shal syncke downe, and fall together: for they maye not ease them of their burthen, therfore must they go in to captiuyte.

Herken vnto me, o house of Iacob, and all ye that remaine yet of the housholde of Israel: whom I haue borne from youre mothers wombe, and brought you vp from youre byrth, till ye were grown: I I which shall beare you vnto youre last age: I haue made you, I will also norish you, beare you and saue you. Whom will ye make me like, in fashion or ymage, that I maye be like him? ^aYe foolles (no doute) wil take out syluer and golde out of youre purses, and weye it, and hyre a goldsmith to make a god of it, that men maye knele downe and worshipe it. ^cYet must he be taken on mens shulders and borne, and set in his place, that he maye stonde and not moue. Alas that men shulde crie vnto him, which geueth no answer: and delyuereth not the man that calleth vpon him, from his trouble.

Considere this well, and be ashamed, Go in to youre owne selues (O ye runnagates). Remembre the thinges which are past, sence the begynnynge of the worlde: that I am God, and that there is els no God, yee and ſ there is nothinge like vnto me. In the begynnynge of a thinge, I shewe the ende therof: and I tel before, thinges that are not yet come to passe. With one worde is my deuyce accomplished, ⁊ fulfilleth all my pleasure. I call a byrde out of the east, ^dand all that I take in honde, out of farre countrees. As soone as I commaunde, I bringe it hither: ^eas soone as I thinke to deuyse a thinge, I do it.

Hear me, o ye that are of an hie stomach, but farre from rightuousnesse. I shal bringe forth my rightuousnesse, It is not farre, and my health shal not tarie longe awaye. I wil laye health in Siō, and geue Israel my glory.

The xliij. Chapter.

BUT as for the (O daughter, thou virgin Babilon) thou shalt syt in the dust. Thou shalt syt vpon the grounde, and not in a trone (o thou mayden of Chaldea). Thou shalt nomore be called tender, and pleasūte. Thou shalt bringe forth the querne, ⁊ gryned meel, put downe thy stomacher, make bare thy knees, and shalt wade thorow the water ryuers. ^fThy shame shalbe discouered, ⁊ thy preuyties shal be sene. For I wil auenge me of the, and no man shal let me: saith oure redemer, which is called the LORD E of hoostes, the holy one of Israel.

Syt still, holde thy tunge, and get the into some darcke corner (O daughter Caldea) for thou shalt nomore be called lady of kyngdomes. I was so wroth with my people, ^g I punyshed myne enheritaunce, ^h and gaue them in to thy power. And yet both these thiges^j shal come to the vpō one daye in the twinklinge of an eye: Namely, wyddowhead, and desolacion. The xliiij. Chapter.

HEARE this, O thou house of Iacob: ye y are called by the name of Israel, and are come out of one stocke with Iuda: which sweare by the name of the LORDE, and beare witness by the God of Israel (but not with treuth and right) "which are called fre men of the holy citie, as they that loke for conforth in the God of Israel, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes.

The thinges that I shewed you euer sence the begynnynge: Haue I not brought the to passe, immediatly as they came out of my mouth, and declared them? And they are come? Howbeit I knewe that thou art obstinate, and that thy neck hath an yron vane, and that thy brow is of brasse. Neuertheles I haue euer sence the begynnynge shewed the of thinges for to come, and declared the vnto the, or euer they came to passe: that thou shuldest not saye: myne Idol hath done it, my carued or cast ymage hath shewed it. Heare & conside all these thinges, whether it was ye that prophecied the: But as for me, I tolde the before at the begynnynge, new & secrete thinges, y thou knewest not of: "And some done now not of olde tyme, wherof thou neuer herdest, before they were brought to passe: that thou canst not saye: I knewe of them. Morouer there be some wherof thou hast nether herde ner knowne, nether haue they bene opened vnto thine eares afore tyme. For I knew that thou woldest maliciously offende, therefore haue I called the a transgressoure, euen from thy mothers wombe.

Neuertheles for my names sake, I haue withdrawn my wrath, and for myne honours sake I haue ouersene the, so that I haue not rooted the out. Beholde I haue poured the, and not for moneye. I haue chosen the in the fyre of pouerte, And that only for myne owne sake, "for I geue myne Honoure to none other, that thou shuldest not despise me. Herken vnto me o Iacob, " & Israel whō I haue called. I am euen he that is, I am y first and the last. " My honde is the foundation of the earth, & my right honde spanneth ouer the heauens. As soone as I called the they were there. Gather you all together, ad herken: Which of yonder goddes hath declared this, that the LORDE wil do by the kinge of Babilon, (whom he loueth & fauoureth) and by the Caldees his arme? I my self alone haue tolde you this before. Yee I shal call him and bringe him forth, & geue him a prosperous iourneye. Come nye & heare this: haue I spokē eny thige darckly? sence the begynnynge? whē a thige begynneth, I am there.

Wherfore the LORDE God with his sprete hath sent me, And thus saiethe the LORDE thine avenger, the holyone of Israel: " I am y LORDE thy God, which teach the profitable thinges, and lede y the waye, that thou shuldest go. Yf thou wilt now regarde my cōmaundement, thy welthynes shalbe as the water streame: & thy rightuousnes as the wawes flowinge in the see. Thy sedge shalbe like as the sonde in the see, & the frute of thy body, like the grauel stones therof: Thy name shal not be roted out, nor destroyed before me. Ye shal go awaye from Babilon, and escape the Caldees with a mery voyce. " This shalbe spoken of, declared abroad, & go forth vnto the ende of the worlde: so that it shalbe sayde: The LORDE hath defended his seruante Iacob, that they suffred no thurst, " whē they trauayled in the wilderness. He claue the rockes a sonder, and the water gushed out. As for the vngodly, they haue no peace, saiethe the LORDE.⁴

 y shadowe of his honde hath he defended me, and hyd me in his quyuer, as a good arowe, and sayde vnto me: 'Thou art my seruauent Israel, I wilbe honoured in the.' Then answerde I: I shal lese my laboure, I shal spende my strength in vayne. Neuertheles, I wil commytte my cause and my worke vnto the LORDE my God. And now saieyth the LORDE (euē he that fashioned me fro my mothers wombe to be his seruauēte, that I maye bringe Iacob agayne vnto him: howbeit, Israel will not be gathered vnto hi agayne.
 In whose sight I am greate, which also is my LORDE, my God and my strēth.) Let it be but a smal thinge, that thou art my seruauent, to set vp the kinredde of Iacob, & to restore the destructiō of Israel: *yf I make the not also the light of the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my health vnto the ende of the worlde.

Morouer thus saieyth the LORDE the avēger and holy one of Israel, because of the abhorringe and despisinge amonge the Gentiles, concernynge the seruauent of all them y beare rule: Kynges and prynces shal se, and arise and worships, because of the the holy one of Israel, which hath chosen the.

And thus saieyth the LORDE: In the

 And in the houre of health wil I helpe the, & delyuer the. I wil make the a pledge for y people, so y thou shalt helpe vp the earth agayne, and challenge agayne the scatred heretages: *That thou mayest saye to y presoners:
 go forth, & to them that are in darknesse:
 come in to the light, that they maye fede in the hie wayes, & get their luyynge in all places.
 There shal nether hunger nor thurst, heate nor Sonne hurte them. *For he that fauoureth them, shal lede them, and geue them drike of the springe welles. I will make wayes vpon all my mountaynes, and my fote pathes come from farre: lo, some from the north and west, some from the south. *Reioyse ye heauens, and synge prayes thou earth:

 Take of ioye ye hilles, for God wil cōforte

Then shal Sion saye: God hath forsaken

 *Doth a wife forget the childe of hir wombe, ad the sonne whō she hath borne? And though she do forget, yet wil not I forget the.
 Beholde, I haue written the vp vpon my hondes, thy walles are euer in my sight. They that haue broken the downe, shal make haist to buylde the vp agayne: and they that made the waist, shal dwell in the. Lift vp thine eyes, and loke aboute the: all these shal gather them together,* and come to the. As truly as I lyue (saieyth the LORDE) thou shalt put them all vpō the, as an apparell, and gyrd thē to the, as a bryde doth hir Iewels. As for thy londe that lieth desolate, waisted & destroyed: it shalbe to narow for thē, that shal dwell in it. And they y wolde deuoure the, shalbe farre awaye. Then the childe whō y barē shall bringe forth vnto y, shal saye in thine eare: this place is to narrow, syt nye together, y I maye haue rowme. Then shalt thou thinke by thy self: Who hath begottē me these? seinge I am barē & alōe, a captyue & an outcast? And who hath norished thē vp for me? I am desolate & alone, but frō whēce come these?

And therefore thus saieyth the LORDE God:
 Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde to the Gentiles, and set vp my token to the people.
 They shal bringe the thy sonnes in their lappes, & carie thy daughters vnto y vpon their shulders. For kinges shalbe thy nursinge fathers, and Quenes shalbe thy nursinge mothers. They shal fall before the with their faces flat vpon the earth, and lick vp the dust of thy fete: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. *And who so putteth his trust in me, shal not be confounded.
 Who spoyleth the giaunte of his pray? or who taketh the presoner from the mightie?
 And therefore thus saieyth the LORDE: The prisoners shalbe taken from the giaunte, and the spoyle delyuered from the violēte: for I wil maynteyne thy cause agaynst thine aduer-saries, and saue thy sonnes. And wil fede thine enemies with their owne fleshe, and make thē drinke of their owne bloude, as of swete wyne. And all flesh shal knowe (o Iacob) that I am the LORDE thy Sauiaoure, and stronge auenger.

The i. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE: Where is the bill of youre mothers deuorcemēt, that I sent vnto her? ^a or who is the vsurer, to whō I solde you? Beholde, for youre owne offēces are ye solde: ^b because of youre transgression, is youre mother forsakē. For why wolde no mā receaue me, when I came? ^c when I called, no man gaue me answer. Was my hōde clene smytē of, that it might not helpe? or, had I not power to delyuer? ^d lo, at a worde I drike vp the see, & of water floudes I make drie lōde: so ^e for want of water, the fish corruppe and die of thirst. ^f As for heauen, I clooth it with darcknesse, and put a sack vpon it.

B The LORDE God hath geuē me a wel lerned tūge, so that I can conforte them which are troubled, ^g yee & ^h in due season. He waked myne eare vp by tymes in ⁱ mornynge (as ^j scolemasters do) ^k I might herkē. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therefore cā I not saye naye, ^l ner with drawe my self, but I offre my backe vnto ^m smyters, and my chekes to the nyppers. I turne not my face frō shame ād spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therefore shal I not be cōfounded. I haue hardened my face like a flynt stone, for I am sure, that I shal not come to confucion. Myne aduocate speaketh for me, who wil then go with me to lawe? Let vs stōde one agaynst another: yf there be eny that wil reason with me, let him come here forth to me. Beholde, the LORDE God stoneth by me, ⁿ what is he that can condempne me? lo, they shalbe all like as an olde cloth, ^o which ^p mothes shal eate vp.

C Therefore who so feareth the LORDE amōge you, let him heare the voyce of his seruāūt. Who so walketh in darcknesse, & no light shyneth vpō him, let him hope in the LORDE, and holde him by his God. But take hede, ye haue all kyndled a fyre, and gyrded youre selues with the flame: Ye walke in the glistrige of youre owne fyre, and in the flame that ye haue kyndled. This cometh vnto you fro my honde, namely, ^q ye shal slepe in sorowe.

The li. Chapter.

A HERKEN vnto me, ye that holde of rightuousnes, ye that seke the LORDE. Take hede vnto the stone, wherout ye are hewen, and to the graue wherout ye are digged. ^r Considre Abraham youre father, & Sara that bare you: how that I called him alone, prospered him wel, & encreased him: how the LORDE comforted Siō, and repayed all hir decaye: makinge hir deserte as a Paradise, and hir wilderness as the garden of the LORDE. Myrth and ioye was there, thankesgeuyng and ^s voyce of prayse. Haue respecte vnto me then (o my people) and laye thine eare to me: for a lawe, and an ordinance shal go forth fro me, ^t to lighten the Gentiles. It is hard by, that my health & my rightuousnes shal go forth, and the people shalbe ordred with myne arme.

The Ilondes (that is ^u Gentiles) shal hope in me, and put their trust in myne arme. Lift vp youre eyes toward heauē, and loke vpon the earth beneth. ^v For the heauens shal vanish awaye like smoke, and the earth shal teare like a clothe, & they that dwel therin, shal perish in like maner. ^w But my health endureth for euer, and my rightuousnes shall not cease. Therefore hercken vnto me, ye ^x haue pleasure in rightuousnes, ^y thou people that bearest my lawe in thine herte. ^z Feare not the curse of men, be not afraide of their blasphemies & reuylinges: for wormes & mothes shal eat thē vp like clothe & woll. But my rightuousnes shal endure for euer, & my sauynge health from generacion to generacion.

Wake vp, wake vp, & be stronge: O thou arme of the LORDE: wake vp, lyke as in tymes past, euer and sence the worlde beganne. ^{aa} Art not thou he, that hast wounded that proude lucifer, and hewen the dragon in peces? Art not thou euen he, which hast dried vp the depe of the see, which hast made playne the see grounde, that the delyuered might go thorow? ^{ab} That the redemed of the LORDE, which turned agayne, might come with ioye vnto Siō, there to endure for euer? That myrth and gladnesse might be with them: that sorowe & wo might fle from the? ^{ac} Yee

I, I am euē he, that in all thiȝes geueth you consolacion. What art thou then, that fearest a mortall mā, ⁊ childe of man, which goeth awaye as doeth the floure? And forgettest the LORDE that made the,^a that spred out the heauens, and layde the foundation of the earth. But thou art euer afrayde for the sight of thyne oppressoure, which is ready to do harme: Where is the wrath of the oppressoure? It cometh on fast, it maketh haist to apere: It shal not perish, ⁊ it shulde not be able to destroye, nether shal it fayle for faute of norishinge. I am the LORDE thy God, that make the see to be still,^b and to rage: whose name is the LORDE of hostes. I shal put my worde also in thy mouth, and defende the with the turnynge of my honde: that thou mayest plante the heauens, and laye the foundations of the earth, and saye vnto Sion: thou art my people.

D Awake, Awake, and stonde vpo Ierusalem, 'thou that from the honde of the LORDE, hast drunkē out the cuppe of his wrath; thou that hast supped of, and sucked out the slombrynge cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou hast begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou hast norished. Both these thinges are happened vnto the, but who is sory for it? Yee, destruction, waistinge, hunger ⁊ swerde: but who hath comforted the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at ⁊ heade of euery strete like a takē venyson, ⁊ are ful of ⁊ terrible wrath of ⁊ LORDE, ⁊ punyshmēt of thy God. And therefore thou miserable ⁊ drunkē (howbeit not with wyne) Heare this: Thus saith thy LORDE: thy LORDE ⁊ God, ⁊ defender of his people: Beholde, I wil take ⁊ slōbrige cuppe out of thy hōde, euē ⁊ cuppe with the dregges of my wrath: ⁊ frō hence forth thou shalt neuer drinke it more, ⁊ wil put it ī their hōde that trouble the: which haue spoken to thy soule: stoupe downe, that we maye go ouer the: make thy body eauē with the grounde, and as the strete to go vpon.

The liij. Chapter.

A VP Sion vp, take thy strength vnto the: put on thine honest rayment o Ierusalē, thou citie of the holy one. For from this tyme forth, there shal no vncircumcised ner vncleane person come in the. Shake the frō the dust, arise ⁊ stonde vp, o Ierusalē. Pluck out thy neck from the bōde, o thou captyue daughter Sion. For thus saith the LORDE: "Ye are solde for naught, therefore shal ye be redeemed also without eny money.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: 'My people wēte downe afore tyme in to Egipte, there to be straungers. Afterwarde dyd the kinge of the Assirians oppresse thē, for naught. And now what profit is it to me (saith ⁊ LORDE) ⁊ my people is frely caried awaye, ⁊ brought in to heuynes by their rulers, and my name euer still blasphemed? saith the LORDE. "But ⁊ my people maye knowe my name, I my self wil speake in that daye. Beholde, here am I. O how bewtiful are the fete of the Embassitoure, ⁊ bringeth the message frō the mountayne, ⁊ proclaimeth peace: ⁊ brigeth the good tydings, ⁊ preacheth health, ⁊ saith vnto Sion: Thy God is the kinge. Thy watchmē shal lift vp their voyce, with loude voyce shal they preach of him: for they shal se him present, whē the LORDE shal come agayne to Sion.

Be glad, 'o thou desolate Ierusalē, ⁊ reioyce together: for the LORDE wil cōforte his people, he wil delyuer Ierusalē. The LORDE wil make bare his holy arme,^c ⁊ shewe it forth in the sight of all the Gētiles, ⁊ all the endes of the earth shal se the sauynge health of oure God. 'Awaye, Awaye, get you out frō thence, ⁊ touch no vncleane thinge. Go out from amonge soch, And be cleane, ye that beare the vessell of the LORDE. But ye shal not go out with sediciō, ner make haist as they that fle awaye: for the LORDE shal go before you, "ad the God of Israel shal kepe the watch.

Beholde, my seruauant shal deale wysely, therefore shal he be magnified, exalted ⁊ greatly honoured. Like as ⁊ multitude shal wōdre vpon him, because his face shalbe so deformed ⁊ not as a mans face, ⁊ his bewtie like no man: Euen so shal the multitude of the Gētiles loke vnto him, ⁊ ⁊ kinges shal shut their mouthes before him. BUT who geueth credence vnto oure preaching? ^aOr to whō is the arme of the LORDE knowne? He shal growe before the LORDE like as a bräuch, & as a rote in a drie grounde. He shal haue nether bewty ner fauoure. When we loke vpon him, there shalbe no fayrnesse: we shal haue no lust vnto him. ^bHe shalbe the most symple & despised of all, which yet hath good experience of sorowes & infirmities. We shal reken him so symple & so vyle, that we shal hyde oure faces frō him. ^cHowbeit (of a treuth) he only taketh awaye oure infirmite, & beareth oure payne: ^dYet we shal iudge him, as though he were plaged and cast downe of God: where as he (not withstōdinge) shal be wōunded for oure offences, & smyten for oure wickednes. BAs for vs, we go all astraye (like shepe), euery one turneth his owne waye. But thorow him, the LORDE pardoneth all oure synnes. He shal be payned & troubled, & shal not opē his mouth. ^eHe shalbe led as a shepe to be slayne, yet shal he be as still as a lambe before the shearer, & not open his mouth. THEREFORE be glad now, thou barē that bearest not. Reioyce, syng & be mery, thou ^qȝ art not with childe: For the desolate hath moo children, ^rthen the married wife, saith the LORDE. Make thy tente wyder, & sprede out the hanginges of thine habitaciō: spare not, laye forth thy coardes, and make fast thy stakes: for thou shalt breake out on the right syde and on the left, & thy sede shal haue ^sȝ Gētiles in possession, & dwel in the desolate cities. Feare not, for thou shalt not be confōuded: Be not ashamed, for thou shalt not come to confucion. The lb. Chapter.

A COME to the waters all ye,^c \hat{y} be thirstie, & ye that haue no moneye. Come, bye, that ye maye haue to eate. Come, bye wyne & mylke, without eny money, or moneye worth. Wherefore do ye laye out youre moneye, for the thinge \hat{y} fedeth not, and spende youre labour aboute the thinge that satisfieth you not? But herkē rather vnto me, \hat{a} d ye shal eate of the best, & youre soule shal haue hir pleasure in plētousnes. B Beholde, I shal geue him for a witness amōge \hat{y} folke, for a prynce & captayne vnto the people. Seke the LORDE while he maye be founde, call vpō him while he is nye. ^eLet the vngodly man forsake his wayes, \hat{a} d the vnrightuous his ymaginaciōs, & turne agayne vnto the LORDE, so shal he be merciful vnto him: and to oure God, for he is redy to forgeue.

C For thus saith the LORDE: My thoughtes are not youre thoughtes, & youre wayes are not my wayes: But as farre as the heauens are hyer then the earth, so farre do my waies exceede yours, ^f& my thoughtes yours. And like as the rayne & snowe cometh downe from heauē, & returneth not thither agayne, but watereth the earth, maketh it frutefull & grene, that it maye geue corne & breade vnto the sower: So the worde also that commeth out of my mouth, shal not turne agayne voyde vnto me, but shal accomplish my wil & prospere in the thinge, wherto I sende it. And so shal ye go forth with ioye, & be led with peace. The mountaynes and hilles shal synge with you for ioye, and all the trees of the felde shal clappe their hondes. For thornes, there shal growe Fyrre trees, & \hat{y} Myrte tre in the steade of breres. And this shal be done to the prayse of the LORDE, & for an euerlastinge tokē, that shal not be taken awaye.

The lbi. Chapter.

THUS saith \hat{y} LORDE: Kepe equite, ^g& and do right, for my sauynge health shal come shortly, & my rightuosnes shalbe opened. Blissed is the man \hat{y} doth this, & the mans childe which kepeth the same. He that taketh hede, ^h& \hat{y} he vnhalowe not the Sabbath (that is) he that kepeth himself that he do no euel. Then shal not the straunger, which cleaueth to the LORDE, saye: 'Alas the LORDE hath shut me cleane out from his people. Nether shal the gelded man saye: lo, I am a drie tre. For thus saith the LORDE, first vnto the gelded \hat{y} kepeth my Sabbath: Namely: that holdeth greatly of the thinge that pleaseth me, and kepeth my couenaunt: Vnto them wil I geue in my housholde and with in my walles, a better heretage \hat{y} name: ⁱthē yf they had bene called sonnes & daughters. I wil geue them an euerlastinge name, that shall not perishe. Agayne, he saith vnto the straūgers that are disposed to sticke to the LORDE, to serue him, & to loue his name: That they shalbe no bōde mē. And all they, which kepe the selues, that they vnhalowe not the Sabbath, namely: that they fulfill my couenaunt: Them wil I bringe to my holy moityayne, ^j& make the ioyfull in my house of prayer. BUT in the meane season ⁊ righteous perisheth, ⁊ no mā regardeth it in his hert. Good godly people are taken awaye, ⁊ no mā cōsidereth it. ^a Namely: that the righteous is conuayed awaye thorow ⁊ wicked:
that he himself might be in rest, lie quietly vpon his bed, ⁊ lyue after his owne pleasure.
Come hither therefore ye charmers children, ⁊ ye sonnes of the aduouter ⁊ the whore: Wherin take ye youre pleasure? Vpō whom gape ye with youre mouth, ⁊ bleare out youre ouersee that? Thou hast made thy bed vpon hie mountaynes, thou wentest vp thither, and there hast thou slayne sacrifices. Behynde the dores ⁊ postes, hast thou set vp thy remembrance?

When thou haddest discovered thyself to another then me, when thou wētest downe, ⁊ made thy bed wyder (that is) when thou didest carue the certayne of yonder Idols, ⁊ louedest their couches, where thou sawest the : Thou wentest straight to kinges with oyle ⁊ dyuerse oyntments (that is) ⁊ thou hast sent thy messengers farre off, and yet art thou fallen in to the pyt therby. Thou hast had trouble for þy multitude of thine owne wayes, yet saydest thou neuer: I wil leaue of. ^a Thou thinkest to haue life (or health) of thy self, and therefore thou beleuest not that thou art sick. For when wilt thou be abaszshed or feare, seinge thou hast broken thy promyse, ⁊ remembrest not me, nether hast me in thine hert? Thinkest thou, that I also wil holde my peace (as afore tyme) þy thou fearest me not? Yee verely I wil declare thy goodnes ⁊ thy workes, but they shal not profit þy, ⁱ whē thou criest, let thy chosen heape deluyher the. But the wynde shal take them all awaye, ⁊ cary thē in to þy ayre. Neuertheles, they þy put their trust in me, shal inheret the londe, and haue my holy hill in possession.

And therfore thus he saith: Make redy, make redy, and clesne y̅ strete, take vp what ye can out of the waye, that ledeth to my people. For thus saith the hie and excellēt, euen he that dwelleth in^e euerlastingnesse, whose name is the holyone: ¹I dwell hie aboue right, and had not forsaken the statutes of their God. They argue with me concernynge right iudgment, and wil pleate at the lawe with their God. Wherefore fast we (saye they) and thou seist it not? we put oure liues to straitnesse, and thou regardest it not?

B Beholde, when ye fast, youre lust remaineth still: "for ye do no lesse violence to youre detters: lo, ye fast to strife and debate, and to smyte him with youre fist, that speaketh vnto you. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that youre voyce might be herde aboue. ⁴Thynke ye this fast pleaseth me, that a mā shulde chasten himself for a daye, and to wryth his heade aboute like an hoke in an hairy cloth, & to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fastinge, or a daye ⁵ye pleaseth ⁶ye LORDE? But this fastinge pleaseth not me, 'till ⁷ye tyme be thou lowse him out of bondage, that is in thy daunger: that thou breake the oath of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. ⁸It pleaseth not me, till thou deale thy bred to the hongrie, & brynge the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde ⁹not thy face frō thine owne flesh. Then shal thy light breake forth as ¹⁰ye mornynge, and thy health florish right shortly: 'thy rightuousnesse shal go before the, and ¹¹ye glory of the LORDE shal embrace the.

Then yf thou callest, the LORDE shal answer the: 'yf thou criest, he shal saye: here I am. Yee yf thou layest awaye thy burthens, and holdest thy fyngers, and ceasest from blasphemous talkinge, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hongrie, and refreszhest ¹²ye troubled soule: ¹³Then shal thy light springe out in the darknesse, and thy darknesse shalbe as the noone daye. The LORDE shal euer be thy gyde, and satisfie the desyre of, thine hert, and fyl thy bones with marry. Thou shalt be like a freshwatred garden, and like the founteyne of water, that neuer leaueth runnyng. Then the places that haue euer bene waist, shalbe buylded of the: there shalt thou laye a foundation for many kynreds. Thou shalt be called the maker vp of hedges, and ¹⁴ye buylder agayne of ¹⁵ye waye of the Sabbath.

¹⁶Yee yf thou turne thy fete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleaseth thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasaunt, holy & glorious Sabbath of the LORDE, where thou shalt be in honour: so ¹⁷ye thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine owne wil, ner speake thine owne wordes. Thē shalt thou haue thy pleasure in ¹⁸ye LORDE, which shal carie ¹⁹ye hie aboue ²⁰ye earth, & fede the with the heretage of Iacob thy father: for the LORDES owne mouth hath so promised.

The lii. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, the LORDES honde is not ²¹so shortened ²²ye it can not helpe, 'nether is his eare so stopped ²³ye it maye not heare. But youre myszdedes haue separated you from youre God, & youre synnes hyde his face from you, ²⁴ye he heareth you not. For youre hondes are defyled with bloude, ²⁵and youre fyngers with vnrighteousnesse: Your lippes speake lesynges, & youre tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth righteousnes, & no mā iudgeth truly. Euery man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, cōceaueth weerynesse, & bringeth forth euell. ²⁶They brede cockatrice egges, & weewe ²⁷ye spyders webb. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade vpon thē, there cōmeth vp a serpent. Their webbe maketh no clothe, & they maye not couer thē with their labours. Their dedes are ²⁸ye dedes of wickednes, & ²⁹ye worke of robbery is in their hōdes. Their fete runne to euell, & they make haist to shed innocēt bloude. ³⁰Their cōuēls are wicked cōuēls, harme & destrucciō are in their wayes. But ³¹ye waye of peace they knowe not. In their goinges is no equitye, their wayes are so croked, ³²ye who so euer goeth therin, knoweth nothinge of peace.

And this is ³³ye cause ³⁴ye equite is so farre frō vs, & ³⁵ye rightuousnes cōmeth not nye vs. "We loke for light, lo, it is darknesse: for ³⁶ye mornynge shyne, se, we walke in ³⁷ye darke. We grope like ³⁸ye blynde vpon ³⁹ye wall, we grope euen as one ⁴⁰ye hath none eyes. We stamble at ⁴¹ye noone daye, as though it were toward night: in ⁴²ye fallinge places, like men ⁴³ye are half deed. We roare all like Beeres, & mourne stil like doues. We loke for equite, but there is none: for health, but it is farre frō vs. For oure offences are many before ^g, & oure synnes testifie agaynst vs. Yee we must cōfesse ^h we offende, & knowlege, ⁱ we do amysse: Namely, transgresse ^j & dyssemble agaynst ^k the LORDE, & fall awaye frō oure God: vsinge presūptuous & traytorous ymaginacions, & castinge false matters in oure hertes. And therefore is equyte gone asyde, & righteousnes stōdeth farre of: ^l truth is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. Yee ^m truth is lade in prison, and he that refrayneth himself frō euel, must be spoyled.

ⁿ When the LORDE sawe this, it displeased him sore, ^o there was no where eny equite. He sawe also, that there was no man, which had pitie therof, or was greued at it. And he helde him by his owne power, and cleued to his owne rightuousnes. ^p He put rightuousnes vpō him for a breast plate, & set the helmet of health vpō his heade. He put on wrath in steade of clothīge, & toke gelously aboute him for a cloke: (like as when a man goeth forth wrothfully to recōpence his enemies, & to be avenged of his aduersaries.) Namely, that he might recompence and rewarde the Ilōdes, wherthorow the name of the LORDE might be feared, from the risynge of the Sōne: and his magesty, vnto the goinge downe of the same.

For he shal come as a violent waterstreame, which the wynde of the LORDE hath moued. ^q But vnto Sion there shal come a redeemer, and vnto them in Iacob that turne from wickednesse, saith the LORDE. I will make this couenaunt with them (sayeth ^r the LORDE): My sprete that is come vpon the, & the wordes which I haue put in thy mouth, shal neuer go out of thy mouth, nor out of ^s thy mouth of thy childrē, no ner out of ^t thy mouth of thy childers childrē, from this tyme forth for euer more.

^u AND therefore get the vp by tymes, ^v for thy light cometh, & the glory of ^w the LORDE shal ryse vp vpō ^x ^y. For lo, while ^z darkness ^{aa} ^{ab} cloude couereth the earth & the Lift vp thine eyes, & loke rounde aboute the: All these gather thē selues, & come to the. Sonnes shal come vnto ^{ai} ^{aj} from farre, & daughters shal gather thē selues to the on euery side. When thou seist this, thou shalt maruel exceedingly, and thine hert shalbe opened: when the power of the see shalbe cōuerted vnto the (that is) whē the strength of the Gentiles shal come vnto the. The multitude of Camels shal couer ^{ak} ^{al}, the Dromedaries of Madiā and Ephā. All they of Saba shal come, ^{am} bringinge golde & incense, & shewinge the prayse of the LORDE. The Iles also shal gather thē vnto me, and specially the shippes of ^{aq} ^{ar} see: that they maye bringe the sonnes from farre, and their syluer and their golde with them, vnto the name of the LORDE thy God, vnto the holy one of Israel, that hath glorified the. ^{as} Straungers shal buylde vp thy walles, and their kiges shal do the seruyce. The lxi. Chapter.

THE sprete of the LORDE God is with me,^a for ^bŷ LORDE hath anyoynted me, & sent me, to preach good tydiges vnto the poore, ^cŷ I might bynde vp ^dŷ wounded hertes, ^eŷ I might preach delyueraunce to ^fŷ captyue, & open the preson to the that are bounde: ^gŷ I might declare ^hŷ acceptable yere of ⁱŷ LORDE, & the daye of ^jŷ avēgeaunce of oure God: that I might comforte all them that are in heynesne,^k that I might geue vnto them ^lŷ mourne in Sion, bewty in the steade of asshes, ioyful oymtmet for sighinge, pleasaunt raymēt for an heuy mīde: That they might be called excellent in rightuousnesse, a plātinge of the LORDE^m for him to reioyce in.

They shal buyde the lōge rough wildernes, & set vp ⁿŷ olde deserte. They shal repayre the waist places, & soch as haue bene voyde thorow out many generaciōs. Straūgers shal stōde & fede youre catel, & the Aleantes shalbe youre plowmē & reapers. But ye shalbe named the prestes of the LORDE,^o & mē shall call you the seruantes of oure God. Ye shall enioye the goodes of ^pŷ Gētiles & tryūphe in their substaūce. For youre greate reprofe & shame, shal they haue ioye, ^qŷ ye maye haue parte with the. For they shal haue dubble possession ^ri their lōde, & euerlastinge ioye shalbe with them.^s For I the LORDE, which loue right ad hate robbery (though it were offered me) shal make their workes ful of faithfulness, & make an euerlastinge couenant with them.

Their sede also and their generacion shal be knowne amōge the Gentiles, and amōge the people. All they that se them, shall knowe, that they are the hie blessed sede of ^tŷ LORDE. And therefore I am ioyful in the LORDE, & my soule reioyseth in my God. For ^uhe shall put vpon me the garmēt of health, & couer me with the mātle of rightuousnes. He shal decke me like a brydegrome, & as a bryde that hath hir apparell vpō her. For like as ^vŷ grounde bringeth forth frute, & as the gardē shuteth forth sede: So shal the LORDE God cause rightuousnes, and the feare of God to florish forth before all the Heithen.

The lxij. Chapter.

FOR Sions sake therefore wil I not holde my tūge, & for Ierusalem sake I will not cease: vntill their rightuousnes breake forth as ^wŷ shyninge light, & their health as a burnyng lampe. Then shal the Gētiles se thy rightuousnesse & all kinges thy glory. Thou shalt be named with a newe name, which the mouth of ^xŷ LORDE shal shewe. Thou shalt be a crowne in the honde of the LORDE, and a glorious garlāde in the hōde of thy God. But thou shalt be called Hephziba (that is, my beloued) & thy lōde Beula (that is) a maried womā: ^yfor ^zŷ LORDE loueth ^{aa}ŷ, & thy lōde shalbe inhabited. The lriij. Chapter.

WHAT is he this, that cometh from Edom, with stayned reade clothes of Bosra: (which is so costly cloth) & cometh in so neēbly with all his strēth? I am he ſ teacheth rightuousnes, & am of power to helpe. Wherefore thē is thy clothing reade, & thy raymēt like his ſ treadeth in ſ wyne presse? I haue troddē the presse my self alone, & of all people, there was not one with me. Thus haue I trodē downe myne enemies in my wrath,^a and set my fete vpō them in my indignacion: And their bloude sprange vpō my clothes, & so haue I stayned all my rayment. For the daye of vengeaūce that I haue takē in honde, & the yere of my delyuraunce is come. I loked aboute me, and there was no mā to shewe me eny helpe. I fel downe, and no man helde me vp. Thē I helde me by myne owne arme, & my feruētneſſe susteyned me. And thus haue I troden downe the people in my wrath, and bathed them in my displeasure: In so much that I haue shed their bloude vpon the earth.

I will declare the goodnesse of the LORDE, & yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greate good ſ he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, & accordinge to the multitude of his lounge kindnesſes. For he sayde: These no doute wilbe my people, and no shrekinge children, and so he was their Sauoure. ^a In their troubles he forsoke thē not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, delyuered them: Of very loue & kindnesse that he had vnto them, redeemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vp euer, sence the worlde begāne. But after they prouoked him to wrath and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemie, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remēbred he the olde tyme, of Moses & his people: ^a How he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepherde doth with his shepe: how he had geuen his holy sprete amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had deuyded the water before them (wherby he gat him self an euerlastinge name) how he led them in the depe, as an horse is led in the playne, that they shulde not stomble. The sprete of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name with all. Loke downe then from heauē,^c and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary & thy glory. How is it, ſ thy gelousy, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy lounge kyndnesse, wyl not be entreated of vs? ^a Yet art thou oure father: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquainted with vs. But thou LORDE art oure father and redemer, and thy name is euer lastinge.^b O LORDE wherfore hast thou led vs out of thy waye? wherfore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not? Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruantes sake ſ are of the generaciō of thy heretage. Thy people hath had but litle of thy Sanctuary in possessiō, for oure enemies haue takē it in: And we are become, euen as we were from the beginnyng: but thou art not their LORDE, for they haue not called vpon thy name.

Thou helpst him that doth right with cherefulness, and them that thynke vpon thy wayes. But lo, thou art angrie, for we offende, and haue bene euer in synne, and there is not one whole. ^aWe are all as an vnclene thinge, & all oure rightuousnesses are as the clothes stayned with the floures of a woman: we fall euerychone as the leaf, for oure synnes carie vs awaye like the wynde. There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, that stondest vp to take holde by the. Therefore hydest thou thy face from vs, and consumest vs, because of oure synnes.

But now o LORDE, "thou father of ours: we are the claye, and thou art oure potter, and we all are the worke of thy hondes. Be not to sore displeased (o LORDE) and kepe not oure offences to lōge in thy remembraunce, but conside that we all are thy people. The cities of thy Sanctuary lye waist, ^aSion is a wilderness, and Ierusalem a deserte. Oure holy house which is oure bewty, where oure fathers praysed the, is brent vp, yee all oure cōmodities and pleasures are waysted awaye. Wilt thou not be intreated (LORDE) for all this? Wilt thou holde thy peace, and scourge vs so sore?

The lrb. Chapter.

THEY shal seke me, that hitherto haue not axed for me: ^athey shal fynde me, that hither to haue not sought me. Then shal I saye immediatly, to the people that neuer called vpon my name: I am here, I am here. For thus longe haue I euer holden out my hondes to an vnfaithful people, that go not the right waye, but after their owne ymaginacions: To a people, that is euer defyenge me to my face. ^aThey make their oblacions in gardens, and their smoke vpon alters of bricke, they lurck amōge the graues, and lie in the dennes all night. ^aThey eate swyne flesh, and vnclene broth is in their vessels. Yf thou comest nye them, they saie: touch me not, for I am holier then thou.

All these men when I am angrie, shalbe turned to smoke and fyre, that shal burne for euer. ^aBeholde, it is written before my face, & shal not be forgotten, but recompensed. I shal rewarde it them in to their bosome: ^aI meane youre mysdedes, and the mysdedes of youre fathers together (saie the LORDE) which haue made their smokes vpon the mountaynes, and blasphemed me vpon the hilles: therefore will I measure their olde dedes in to their bosome agayne.

Morouer thus saie the LORDE: ^alike as when one wolde gather holy grapes, men saye vnto him: breake it not of, for it is holy: Euen so will I do also for my seruantes sakes, that I will not destroye them all. ^aBut I will take a sede out of Iacob, and out of Iuda one, to take possession of my hill. My chosen shal possesse these thinges, & my seruantes shal dwell there. Saron shalbe a shepefolde, and the valley of Achor ^ashal geue stallinge for the cattell of my people, that feare me. But as for you, ye are they, y haue forsaken the LORDE, and forgotten my holy hill. Ye haue set vp an autler vnto fortune, & geuē rich drinkofferings vnto treasure. Therefore wil I nombre you with the swerde, that ye shal be destroyed all together. ^aFor when I called, no man gaue me answer: when I spake, ye herkened not vnto me, but dyd wickednes before myne eyes, and chosed the thinge that pleased me not.

Therefore thus saie the LORDE God: ^aBeholde, my seruantes shal eate, but ye shal haue hunger. Beholde, my seruantes shal drynke, but ye shal suffre thurst. Beholde, my seruantes shal be mery, but ye shal be cōfounded. Beholde, my seruantes shal reioyse for very quietnesse of herte. ^aBut ye shal crie for sorow of hert, and cōplayne for vexacion of mynde. The lxi. Chapter.

A THUS saieth the LORDE: Heauē is my seate, ^g and the earth is my fote stole. Where shal now the house stonde, ^h yf ye will buylde vnto me? And where shal be the place, ⁱ yf I wil dwel in? As for these thinges, my hōde hath made them all, and they are all created, saieth the LORDE. Which of them shal I then regarde? Euē him that is of a lowly troubled sprete, and stōdeth in awe of my wordes. For who so slayeth an oxe for me, doth me so greate dishonoure, as he ^j yf killeth a mā. He that killeth a shepe for me, choketh a dogge. He that bringeth me meat offringes, offreth swynes bloude: Who so maketh mē a memoriall of Incense, prayseth the thinge ^k yf is vnright. Yet take they soch wayes in honde, and their soule deliteth in these abhominacions.

^l Therefore wil I also haue pleasure in laughing them to scorne, and the thinge that they feare, wil I bringe vpon thē. For when I called, no man gaue answer: when I spake, they wolde not heare: But dyd wickednesse before myne eyes, & chose the thinges that displease me. Heare the worde of God all ye, that feare the thinge which he speaketh. Your brethren that hate you, and cast you out for my names sake, saye: Let the LORDE magnifie himself, that we maye se youre gladnesse: & yet they shalbe cōfounded.

^m For as touchinge the cite and the temple, I heare the voyce of the LORDE, that will rewarde, and recompēce his enemies: like as when a wife bringeth forth a man childe, or euer she suffre the payne of the byrth and anguysh of ⁿ yf trauayle. Who euer herde or sawe soch thinges? doth the grounde beare in one daye? or are the people borne all at once, as Sion beareth his sonnes? For thus sayeth the LORDE: Am I he that maketh other to beare, and beare not my self? Am not I he that beareth, ^o & maketh baren? saieth thy God. Reioyse with Ierusalem, & be glad with her, all ye that loue her. Be ioyful with her, all ye that mourned for her. For ye shal sucke cōforte out of hir brestes, and be satisfied. Ye shal taist, and haue delite in the plenteousnesse of hir power. For thus sayeth the LORDE: beholde, I wil let peace ^p i to her, like a water floude, & ^q yf might of the Heithē like a flowinge streame. Then shal ye sucke, ye shal be borne vpon hir sydes, and be ioyful vpō hir knees. For like as a childe is comforted of his mother, so shal I conforte you, and ye shalbe comforted in Ierusalem. ^r And when ye se this, youre herte shal reioyse, and youre bones shal florish like an herbe.

Thus shal the honde of the LORDE be knowne amonge his seruauantes, and his indignacion amonge his enemies. For beholde, the LORDE shal come with fyre, and his charēt shal be like a whyrlwynde, that he maye recompence his vengeaunce in his wrath, and his indignacion with the flame of fyre. For ꝑ LORDE shal iudge all flesh with the fyre and with his swerde, and there shalbe a greate nombre slayne of the LORDE. Soch as haue made them selues holy and cleane in the gardens, and those that haue eaten swyne flesh, myce, and other abhominaciōs, shal be taken awaye together, saieth the LORDE. For I wil come to gather all people and tonges, with their workes and ymaginacions: these shal come, and se my glory. Vnto them shal I geue a tokē, and sende certayne of thē (that be delyuered) amonge the Gentiles: in to Celicia, Africa and Lidia (where men can handle bowes) in to Italie also and Greke londe.

vnto the LORDE, out of al people, vpō horses, charettes and horse lytters, vpō Mooles and cartes to Ierusalem my holy hill (saieth the LORDE) like as the children of Israel bringe the offeringe in cleane vessels, to the house of the LORDE.

^bAnd I shal take out certayne of them for to be preastes and leuites, saieth ꝑ LORDE. For like as the new heauē and the new earth which I wil make, shalbe fast stablished by me: (saieth the LORDE) So shal youre sede and youre name contynue, and there shalbe a new Moone for the other, and a new Sabbath for the other, & all flesh shal come to worshipec before me, (saieth ꝑ LORDE.) And they shal go forth, and loke vpō the caryons of them, that haue transgressed agaynst me. For their wormes shal not dye, ^cnether shal their fyre be quenched, & all flesh shal abhorre them.

A recitynge how Ierusalē was beseged, wonne, and taken.

THESE are the Sermons of Ieremy the sonne of Helchia the prest, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Ben Iamin:^a when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, in the xij yeare of his kingdome: and so duringe vnto the tyme of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, and vnto the xj yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Iosias^b kinge of Iuda were ended: when Ierusalem was taken, euen in the fyfth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: 'Before I fashioned the in thy mothers wöbe, I dyd knowe the: And or euer thou wast borne, I sanctified the, & ordered the, to be a prophet vnto the people. Thē sayde I:^d Oh LORDE God, I am vnmete, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: 'For thou shalt go to all that I shall sende the vnto, and what so euer I cōmaunde the, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wilbe with the, to deliyuer the, saith the LORDE.

And with that, the LORDE stretched out his honde, and touched my mouth, and sayde morouer vnto me: Beholde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set the ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make waist; and that thou mayest buylde vp, and plāte. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Ieremy, what seist thou? And I sayde: I se a wakyng rodde.^e Then sayde ŷ LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to perfourme it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? And I sayde: I do se a seethinge pot, lokinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Out of the north^f shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For lo, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saith the LORDE.) And they shall come, and euery one shall set his seate in the gates of Ierusalem, and in all their walles rounde aboute, and thorow all the cities of Iuda. And thorow them shall I declare my iudgment, vpon all the wickednesse of those men that haue forsaken me: that haue offred vnto straunge goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne hondes.

And therefore gyrde vp thy loynes,^g arise, and tell them all, that I geue the in cōmaundement. Feare them not, I will not haue the to be afrayed of thē. For beholde,^h this daye do I make the a ströge fensed towne, an yron pyler, and a wall of ^{*}stele agaynst ŷ whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Iuda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst the, but they shall not be able to ouercome the: ^ofor I am with the, to deliyuer the, saith the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE cōmaunded me thus: "Go thy waye, crie in the eares of Ierusalē, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE: I remembre the for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wilderness, in an vttilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. ^oAll they that deuoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Iacob, and all the generacion of the house of Israel. Thus saith ŷ LORDE vnto you:

What vnfaithfulnesse founde youre fathers in me, that they wente so farre awaye from me, fallinge to lightnesse, and beinge so vayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where haue we left the LORDE, ŷ brought vs out of the lōde of Egipte: ^pŷ led vs thorow the wilderness, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drie and a deedly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. ^qAnd when I had brought you in to a pleasaut welbuylded londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the cōmodities of the same: ^rye went forth and defyled my londe, & brought myne heretage to abhominacion.

The prestes thē selues saide not once:

where is \S LORDE? "They \S haue the lawe in their hondes, knowe me not: The shepherdes offende agaynst me. The prophetes do seruyce vnto Baal, & folowe such thinges as shall bringe them no profit.

Wherefore I am constrainyd (sayeth the LORDE) to make my complaynte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Cethim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, take diligent hede: and se, whether such thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles themselues deale so falsly & vntruly with their goddes (which yet are no goddes in dede.^a) But my people hath geuen ouer their hie honour, for a thinge that maye not helpe them.

Be astonished (o ye heauens) be afraide, & abashed at such a thinge, saith the LORDE. For my people hath done two euels. "They haue forsakē me the well of the water of life, and digged them pittes, yee vile and broken pittes, that holde no water. Is Israel a bonde seruauant, or one of the housholde?^d Why is he then so spoyled? Why do they roare and crie then vpon him, as a lyon? They haue made his londe wayst, "his cities are so brent vp, that there is no man dwelling in them. Yee the children of Noph and Taphanes haue defyled thy necke.

Cometh not this vnto the, because thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God,^f euer sence he led the by the waye? And what hast thou now to do in \S strete of Egipte? to drinke foule water? Ether, what makest thou in the waye to Assiria? To drinke water of the floude? "Thine owne wickednesse shal reproue the, and thy turnynge awaye shal condemne the: that thou mayest knowe and vnderstonde, howe euell and hurtful a thinge it is, \S thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, and not feared him, saith the LORDE God of hoostes.

^hI haue euer broken thy yock of olde, & bursten thy bondes: yet saiest thou, I wil nomore serue, but (like an harlot) thou runnest aboute vpon all hie hilles, & amonge all grene trees: where as I planted the out of noble grapes and good rotes. "How art thou turned then in to a bytter, vnfrutefull, and straunge grape? Yee and that so sore: that though thou washest the with Nitrus \S makest thi self to sauoure with that swete smellinge herbe of Borith: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saith the LORDE thy God.

Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I haue not folowed the goddes. "Loke vpō thyne owne waies in the woddes, valleis & dennes: so shalt thou knowe, what thou hast done. Thou art like a swift Dromedary, that goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Asse, that vseth the wilderness, and that snoffeth and bloweth at his wil. Who can tame the? All they that seke the, shal not fayle, but fynde the in thyne owne vnclennes. Thou kepest thy fote from nakednes, and thy throte from thurst, and thinkest thus in thy self: tush, I wil take no sorowe, I wil loue the straunge goddes, & hange vpon them.

Like as a thefe that is taken with the dede, commeth to shame, euē so is the house of Israel come to confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and prophetes. "For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their back vpon me, & not their face. But in the tyme of their trouble, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe vs, I shal answer the: "Where are now thy goddes, that thou hast made the? byd them stonde vp, and helpe the in the tyme of nede? For loke how many cities thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherefore thē wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saith the LORDE? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. "Your owne swerde destroyeth youre prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. Yf ye be the people of the LORDE, then herke vnto his worde: Am I thē become a wilderness vnto the people of Israel? or a londe that hath no light? Wherefore saith my people then: we are fallē of, and we wil come no more vnto the? Doth a mayden forget hir raymēt, or a bryde hir stomacher? And doth my people forget me so lōge? Why boostest thou thy wayes so hylie, (to optayne fauoure there thorow) when thou hast yet stained them with blasphemies?

Because the LORDE shal bringe that confidence and hope of thine to naught, and thou shalt not prosper with all.

The iij. Chapter.

COMONLY, when a man putteth away his wife, ^aand she goeth from him, and marieth with another, then the question is: shulde he resorte vnto her eny more after that? Is not this felde then defyled and vnclene? ^dBut as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many louers, yet turne agayne to me, saith the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the stretes, and as a murderer in the wilderness. Thorow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

^eThis is the cause, that the rayne and euenynge dew hath ceased. Thou hast gotten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me: O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me fro my youth: Wilt thou then put me awaye, and cast me of for euer? Or wilt thou withdrawe thy self clene fro me? Neuertheles, thou speakest soch wordes, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

B The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Iosias the kinge: Hast thou sene what that shrekinge Israel hath done? how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, ^fand amonge all thicke trees, and there played the harlot? hast thou sene also, (when she had done all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? ^gIuda that vnfaithfull sister of hirs also sawe this: Namely, that after I had well sene the adououry of the shrenkinge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and gaue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda was not ashamed, but wente backe and played the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole lōde. For she hath committed hir adouourie with stones and stockes.

Neuerthelesse, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda is not ^hturned vnto me agayne with hir whole herte, but faynedly, saith the LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The baclyder Israel is more rightuous, ⁱthē the vnfaithfull Iuda: and therefore go preach these wordes toward the north, & saye: Thou shrenkinge Israel, turne agayne (saith the LORDE,) and I wil not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saith the LORDE, & I wil not allwaye beare displeasure agaynst the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greate blasphemy: Namely, that thou hast vnfaithfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, ^k& hast made thy self partaker of straunge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saith the LORDE.

^lO ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, saith the LORDE, and I wilbe married with you. For I will take one out of the citie and two out of one generacion from amonge you, and bringe you out of Sion: and will geue you hyrdmē after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wysdome. Morouer, when ye be increased and multiplied in the londe, then (saith the LORDE) there shall nomore boost be made of the arke of the LORDES Testament: No man shall thinke vpon it, nether shall eny man make mention of it: for from thence forth it shall nether be visited, ner honoured with giftes.

D Then shall Ierusalem be called the LORDES seate, and all Heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDE sake, which shalbe set vp at Ierusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore the ymaginacion of their owne frauwarde herte.

But like as a woman fayleth hir loue, so are ye vnfaithfull vnto me (o ye house of Israel) saith the LORDE. And therefore the voyce of the children of Israel was herde on euery side, wepinge and waylinge: ^bfor they haue defyled their waye, and forgotten God their LORDE.

O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, (saynge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale youre bacturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the health of Israel stondesth only vpon God oure LORDE.

^cConfucion hath deuoured oure fathers labour from oure youth vp: yee their shepe and bullockes, their sonnes and daughters. So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame couereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure youth vp vnto this daye haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and haue ^dnot obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God.

The iiii. Chapter.

O ISRAEL, yf thou wilt turne the, then turne vnto me, saith the LORDE. And yf thou wilt put awaye thy abhominaciōs out of my sight, thou shalt not be moued: ^eAnd shalt swaie: The LORDE lyueth: in treuth, in equite and rightuousnesse: and all people shall be fortunable and ioyfull in him. For thus saith the LORDE, to all Iuda and Ierusalem: plowe youre londe, and sowe not amonge the thornes.

^fBe circumcised in the LORDE, and cut awaye the foreskynne of youre hertes, all ye of Iuda, ^gand all the indwellers of Ierusalem: that my indignacion breake not out like fyre, ^hand kyndle, so that no man maye quench it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions.

Preach in Iuda and Ierusalem, crie out and speake: ⁱblowe the trompettes in the londe, crie that euery man maye heare, and saye: Gather you together, and we will go in to stronge cities. Set vp the token in Sion, spede you, and make no tarienge: for I will bringe a greate plague, and a greate destruction from the north. ^jFor the spoyler of the Gentiles is broken vp from his place, as a lyon out of his dēne, that he maye make the londe waiste, and destroye the cities, so, that no man maye dwell thērin. Wherefore gyrd your selues aboute with sack cloth, mourne, and wepe, for the fearfull wrath of the LORDE shal not be withdrawn from you.

At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) the hert of the kinge and of the prynces shal be gone, the prestes shalbe astonished, and the prophetes shalbe sore afayed. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, hast thou then disceaused this people and Ierusalem, sayenge: ye shall haue peace, ^kand now the swearde goeth thorow their lyues? Then shal it be saide to the people ^lto Ierusalem: ^mthere commeth a warme wynde from the north thorow the waye of my people, but nether to fanne, ner to clēse.

After that shall there come vnto me a stronge wynde, and then wil I also geue sentence vpon them. For lo, he commeth downe like as a cloude, and his charrettes are like a stormy wynde: ⁿhis horsmen are swifter then the Aegle. Wo vnto vs, for we are destroyed. O Ierusalem, wash thine hert from wickednesse, ^othat thou mayest be helped. How longe shal thy noysome thoughtes remayne with the?

For a voyce from Dan and from ^phill of Ephraim speaketh out, and telleth of a destruction. Beholde, the Heithen geue Ierusalem warnynge, and preach vnto her, that hir destroyers are cōmyng from farr countrees. They tell the cities of Iuda the same also, they shall geue them warnynge in euery place, like as the watch men in the felde. For they haue prouoked me to wrath, ^qsaith the LORDE.

^rThy wayes and thy thoughtes, haue brought the vnto this, this is thyne owne wickednesse and disobediēce, that hath possessed thyne hert: Ah my bely, ah my bely, (shalt thou crie) how is my hert so sore? my hert paunt-eth within me, I can not be still, for I haue herde the crienge of the trompettes, and peales of warre.

They crie murthur vpon murthur, the whole londe shal perish. Immediately my tentes were destroyed, and my hanginges, in the twincklinge of an eye. How longe shall I se the tokens of warre, and heare the noyse of the trompettes?

Neuertheles this shall come vpon them, because my people is become foolish, ^a and hath vterly no vnderstandinge. They are the children of foolishnes, ^b and without eny discreciō. To do euell, they haue witt ynough: but to do well, they haue no wisdome. I haue loked vpon the earth, and se, it is wast and voyde. I loked towarde heauen, and it had no shyne.

I behelde the mountaynes, and they trembled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I loked aboute me, and there was no body, and all the byrdes of the ayre were awaye. I marked well, and the plowed felde was become waist: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wrath.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shalbe desolate, yet will I not then haue done. And therefore let the earth mourne, and let the heauen be sory aboue: for the thinge that I haue purposed and taken vpon me to do, shal not repente me, and I will not go from it. The whole londe shal fle, for the noyse of the horsmen and bowmen: they shall runne in to dennes in to woddes, and clymme vp the stony rockes. All the cities shalbe voyde, and no man dwellinge therin.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge destroyed? ^c For though thou clothest thy self with scarlet, ^d & deckest ^e ^f with gold: though thou payntest thy face with colours, ^g yet shalt thou trymme thy self in wayne.

For those that hither to haue bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhorre the, and go aboute to slaye ^h. For (me thinke) I heare a noyse, like as it were of a woman trauelinge, or one laboringe of hir first childe: Euen the voyce of the daughter Sion, that casteth out hir armes, and sowneth, sayenge: Ah wo is me, how sore vexed and faynte is my herte, for them that are slayne?

The 6. Chapter.

L OKE thorow Ierusalem, beholde and se: ^a Seke thorow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that laboureth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saieth the LORDE). ^b For though they can saye: the LORDE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceau: Where as thou (o LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentance: thou hast correcte them for amendemēt, but they refused thy correction. They made their faces harder then a stone, and wolde not amende.

Therefore I thought in my self: peraduenture they are so symple and folish, that they vnderstonde nothinge of the LORDES waye, ^c and iudgmētes of oure God. Therefore will I go vnto their heades and rulers, and talke with them: yf they knowe the waye of the LORDE, and the iudgmētes of oure God. But these (in like maner) haue broken the yock, and bursten the bondes in sonder.

Wherefore a lyon out of the wod shal hurte them, ^d and a wolfe in the euenyng shal destroye them. The cat of the mountayne shal lie lurking by their cities, to teare in peces all them, that come therout. For their offences are many, and their departinge awaye is greate.

^e Shulde I then for all this haue mercy vpon the? Thy children haue forsaken me, and sworne by them that are no goddes. And albeit they were bounde to me in mariage, yet they fell to aduoutrie, and haunted harlottes houses.

In the desyre of vnclenly lust they are become like the stoned horse, euery man neyeth at his neighbours wife. ^f Shulde I not correcte this, saieth the LORDE?

^g Shulde I not be avenged of euery people, that is like vnto this? Clymme vp vpon their walles, beate them downe, but destroye them not vtterly: cut of their braunches, because they are not the LORDES.

For vnfaithfully hath the house of Israel and Iuda forsaken me, saieth the LORDE. ^h They haue denied the LORDE, and sayde: it is not he.

Tush, there shall no miszfortune come vpon vs, we shall se nether swearde ner hunger.

¶ As for the warnynge of the prophetes, they take it but for wynde, "yee there is none of these, which will tell them, that soch thinges shal happen vnto them.

Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: because ye speake soch wordes, beholde: "The wordes that are in thy mouth will I turne to fyre, and make the people to be wod, that it maye consume them.

"Lo, I will bringe a people vpō you from farre, o house of Israel (saith the LORDE) a mightie people, an olde people, a people whose speach thou knowest not, nether vnderstōdest what they saye.

Their arrowes are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shal eate vp thy frute & thy meate, yee they shal deuoure thy sonnes and thy daughters, thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shall eate vp thy grapes & fyges. As for thy stronge and well fensed cities, wherin thou didest trust, they shal destroye them with the swearde.

¶ Neuertheles I will not then haue done with you, saith the LORDE. But yf they saye: wherefore doth the LORDE oure God all this vnto vs?

Then answereth they: because, that like as ye haue forsakē me, and "serued straunge goddes in youre owne londe, euen so shall ye serue other goddes also in a straunge londe.

Preach this vnto the house of Iacob, & crie it out in Iuda, and saye thus: Heare this (thou folish and vndiscrete people.) "Ye haue eyes, but ye se not: eares haue ye, but ye heare not.

Feare ye not me, saith the LORDE? Are ye not ashamed, to loke me in the face? "which bynde the see with the sonde, so that it can not passe his boundes: For though it rage, yet can it do nothinge: and though the wawes therof do swell, yet maye they not go ouer.

But this people hath a false and an obstinate herte, they are departed and gone awaye from me. They thinke not in their hartes: O let vs feare the LORDE oure God, that geueth vs rayne early and late, when nede is: which kepeth euer still the harvest for vs yearly.

¶ Neuertheles youre misdedes haue turned these from you, " & your synnes haue robbed you herof. For amonge my people are founde wicked personnes, that priuely laye snares and waite for men, to take them, and destroye them.

And like as a net is full of byrdes, so are their houses full of that, which they haue gotten with falsede and disceate. Herof cōmeth their greate substaunce and riches, herof are they fat and welthy, and are runne awaye fro me with shameful blasphemies. They minstre not the lawe, "they make no ende of the fatherlesse cause, they iudge not the poore accordinge to equite.

"Shulde I not punysh these thinges, saith the LORDE? Shulde I not be avenged of all soch people, as these be? Horrible and greuous thinges are done in the londe.

The prophetes teach falsely, and the prestes folowe them, and my people hath pleasure therin. What will come therof at the last?

The vi. Chapter.

COME out of Ierusalem, ye stronge children of Ben Iamin: "blowe vp the trompettes ye Tecuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate misery pepeth out from the North.

I will lickē the doughter Sion to a fayre and tendre woman, and to her shall come the shepherdes with their flockes. Their tentes shal they pitch rounde aboute her, and euery one shal fede with his honde. Make batell agaynst her (shal they saye:) Arise, let vs go vp, while it is yet daye.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, & the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the LORDE of hoostes commaunded.

Hew downe hir trees, and set vp bulworkes agaynst Ierusalē. This is the cite that must be punished, for in her is all maliciousnes. Like as a cōdyte aboundeth in water, euē so this citie aboundeth in wickednes. Robbery and vnrightuousnesse is herde in her, sorrow & woundes are euer there in my sight. Amēde the (o Ierusalem) lest I with drawe my herte from the, and make the desolate: & thy londe also, "no man dwel in it. vnto whom shal I speake? whom shal I warne, that he maye take hede? ^aTheir eares are so vncircumcised, that they maye not heare.

Beholde, ^athey take the wordes of God but for a scorne, and haue no lust therto. And therefore I am so full of thy indignacion (o LORDE) that I maye suffre no longer. Shed out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. Yee the man must be taken presoner with the wife, and the aged with the crepel. Their houses with their londes and wiuers shal be turned vnto straungers, whē I stretch out myne hōde vpon the inhabitours of this londe, saieth the LORDE. ^aFor from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon covetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lyes.

^aAnd besyde that, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, when there is no peace at all. Therefore they must be ashamed, for they haue cōmitted abhominacion. But how shulde they be ashamed, when they knowe nothinge, nether of shame ner good nurture? ^aAnd therefore they shal fall amonge the slayne, and in the houre when I shall viset them, they shal be brought downe, saieth the LORDE.

Thus saieth the LORDE: go in to the stretes, conside and make inquisition for the olde waye: and yf it be the good and right waye, then go therin, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therin) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therefore take hede vnto the voyce of the trompet. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therefore ye Gentiles, and thou congregacion shalt knowe, what I haue deuyssed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, ^aI will cause a plage come vpon this people, euen the frute of their owne ymaginacions.

For they haue not bene obedient vnto my wordes and to my lawe, but abhorred them. ^aWherefore bringe ye me incense from Saba, ^aswete smellinge Calamus from farre countre-^atrees? Your burnt offerings displease me, and I reioyse not in youre sacrifices.

And therefore thus saieth the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and there shal fall from amonge them the father with the children, one neghboure shal perish with another.

Morouer thus saieth ^aY LORDE: Beholde, ^athere shal come a people from the North, ^aa greate people shal arise from ^afyndes of ^afynd earth, with bowes ^aand dartes shal they be weapened: It is a rough ^aand fearse people, an vnmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpō horses wel appointed to ^abatell agaynst the, o daughter Sion. Then shal this crie be herde: Oure armes are feble, heuynes and sorow is come vpon vs, as vpon a woman trauelinge with childe. Noman go forth in to the felde, no man come vpon the hie strete: for the swearde and feare of the enemye shalbe on euery side.

Wherefore, gyrd a sack cloth aboute the (o thou daughter of my people) spraynke thy self with aszshes, ^amourne and wepe bitterly, as vpon thy only beloued sonne: For the destroyer shal sodenly fall vpon vs. The haue I set for a prouer of my harde people, to seke out and to trye their wayes. For they are all vnfaithful and fallen awaye, they hange vpon shameful lucre, they are clene brasse and yron, for they hurte and destroye euery man. The bellous are brent in the fyre, the leade is consumed, the melter melteth in vayne, for the enel is not taken awaye from them. Therefore shal they be called naughty syluer, because the LORDE hath cast them out.

The vij. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes, that God spake vnto Ieremy: ^aStonde vnder the gates of the LORDES house, and crie out these wordes there, with a loude voyce, and saye: Heare the wordes of the LORDE, all ye of Iuda, that go in at this dore, to honour the LORDE. Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel. ^aAmende youre wayes and youre counsels, and I wil let you dwell in this place. Trust not in false lyege wordes, sayenge: here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE.

will not shed innocent bloude in this place: yf ye wil not cleue to straunge goddes to youre owne destruction: then wil I let you dwell in this place, yee in the londe that I gaue afore tyme vnto youre fathers for euer. But take hede, yee trust in counsels, that begyle you and do you no good. For when ye haue stollē, murthured, committed aduoutrie, and periury: Whē ye haue offred vnto Baal, folowinge straunge & vnkowne goddes: ^a Then come ye, and stonde before me in this house (which hath my name geuen vnto it) and saye: Tush, we are absolved quyte, though we haue done all these abhominacions.

What? ^a thinke you this house that beareth my name, is a denne of theues? And these thinges are not done priuely, but before myne eyes, saith the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I dyd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of ¹³ Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saith the LORDE) and I my self rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answer. And therefore euen as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and youre fathers. ^a And I shal thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brethren the whole sede of Ephraim.

Therefore thou shalt not praye for this people, thou shalt nether geue thākes, nor byd prayer for them: thou shalt make no intercession to me for them, for in no wise will I heare the. Seist thou not what they do in the cities of Iuda, and without Ierusalem? The children gather stickes, the fathers kyndle the fyre, the mothers kneade the dowe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen.

They poure out drinkoffringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: How be it they hurte not me (saith the LORDE) but rather confounde, and shame them selues.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shalbe poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpon the trees in the felde and all frute of the londe, & it shal burne so, that no man maye quench it.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: ^a Ye heape vp youre burnt-offringes with youre sacrifices, & eate & flesh. ^a But when I brought youre fathers out of Egipte, I spake no worde vnto them of burnt-offringes and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: herken and obeye my voyce, and I shalbe youre God and ye shal be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue comaunded you, that ye maye prosper.

^a But they were not obedient, they inclyned not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymagynacions and after the mocions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and conuerted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egipte, vnto this daye.

Neuertheles, I sent vnto them my seruantes all the prophetes: I rose vp early and sent them worde, yet wolde they not herkē, ner offre me their eares, but were obstinate, and worse then their fathers.

And thou shalt now speake all these wordes vnto them, but they shal not heare the: thou shalt crie vpon them, but they shal not answer the. Therefore shalt thou saye vnto them: ¹⁴ this is the people, that nether heareth the voyce of the LORDE their God, ner receaueth his correction. ^a Faithfulness & treuth is cleue rooted out of their mouth.

^a Wherefore cut of thine hayre, and cast it awaye, take vp a complaynte in the whole londe: for the LORDE shal cast awaye, and scatere the people, & he is displeased withall.

^a For the children of Iuda haue done euell in my sight, saith the LORDE. They haue set vp their abhominacions, in the house & hath my name, and haue defyled it. ^a They haue also buylded an altur at Tophet, which is in the valley of & childre of Ennō: & they might burne their sonnes and daughters, which I neuer comaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought. The viij. Chapter.

AT the same tyme, saith the LORDE, the bones of the kinges of Iuda, the bones of his princes, the bones of the prestes and prophetes, yee and the bones of the citisens of Ierusalē, shalbe brought out of their graues^d and layed agaynst the Sonne, the Moone and all the heauenly hooste: whom they loued, whom they serued, whom they ranne after, whom they sought & worshipped. They shal nether be gathered together ner buried, but shal lye vpō the earth, to their shame and despisinge.

^e And all they that remayne of this wicked generacion, shal desyre rather to dye thē to lye: where so euer they remayne, & where as I scatre them, saith the LORDE of hoostes. This shalt thou saye vnto them also: Thus saith the LORDE: Do men fall so, that they arise not vp agayne: And turne they so farre awaye, ſ̄ they neuer couerue? Wherefore then is this people and Ierusalem gone so farre backe, that they turne not againe? They are euer the longer the more obstinate, and will not be conuerted.

For I haue looked, and considered: ^f but there is no mā, that speaketh a good worde: there is no man, that taketh repētaunce for his synne, that will so moch as saye: wherefore haue I done this? But euery man (as soone as he is turned backe) runneth forth still, like a wilde horse in a battayl. The Storke knoweth his apoynted tyme, the Turtledoue, ſ̄ Swallow and the Crane, cōsidre the tyme of their trauaile: ^g but my people will not knowe the tyme of the punyshment of the LORDE. How darre ye saye then: we are wise, we haue the lawe of the LORDE amonge vs?

Beholde, the disceatfull penne of the scribes, setteth forth lies: therefore shal the wise be confounded, they shalbe afrayed and taken: for lo, ^h they haue cast out the worde of the LORDE: what wysdome can then be amonge them? Wherefore, I will geue their wyues vnto aleauntes, and their felde to destroyers.

For from the lowest vnto the hiest, they folowe all shameful lucre: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they deale all with lies. ⁱ Neuertheles, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, where there is no peace at all.

Fye for shame, how abhominable thinges do they? And yet they be not ashamed, yee they knowe of no shame.

^j Wherefore in the tyme of their visitacion, they shal fall amonge the deed bodies, saith the LORDE.

Morouer I will gather them in (saith the LORDE) so that there shal not be one grape vpon the vyne, nether one fyge vpon the fyge tre, and the leaues shalbe plucte of.

Then will I cause them to departe, and saye: why prolonge we the tyme? Let vs gather oure selues together, and go in to the stronge cite, there shall we be in rest: For the LORDE oure God hath put vs to sylence, and geuen vs water myxte with gall, to drynke, because we haue synned agaynst him.

We looked for peace, and we fayre not the better, we wayted for the tyme of health, and lo, here is nothinge but trouble.

Then shall the noyse of his horses be herde from Dan, the whole londe shall be afrayed at the neyēge of his stronge horses: for they shal go in, and deuoure the londe, with all that is in it: the cities, and those that dwell therein. ^k Morouer, I will sende Cockatrices & serpētes amonge you (which will not be charmed) and they shal byte you, sayeth the LORDE.

Sorowe is come vpon me, and heuyns vexeth my herte: for lo, the voyce of the criēge of my people is herde from a farre countre: Is not the LORDE in Sion? Is not he kinge in her? Wherefore then haue they greued me (shall the LORDE saye) with their ymagēs and foolish straunge fashions? The harvest is gone, the Sōmer hath an ende, and we are not helped. I am sore vexed,

O, WHO will geue my heade water ynough, & a well of teares for myne eyes: that I maye wepe night ad daye, for the slaughter of my people? Wolde God that I had a cottage some where farre from folke, that I might leaue my people, and go from thē: for they be all aduoutrers and a shrenckinge sorte. They bēde their tūges like bowes, to shute out lies: As for the treuth, they maye nothinge awaye with all in the worlde. For they go from one wickednes to another, and holde nothinge of me, saith the LORDE.

Yee one must kepe himself from another, ^ano man maye safely trust his owne brother: for one brother vndermyneth another, & one neyghboure begyleth another. Yee one dissembleth with another, and they deale with no treuth. ^bThey haue practised their tūges to lye, and taken greate paynes to do myschefe. They haue set their stole in the myddest of disceate, and (for very dissemblinge falsede) they wil not knowe me, saith the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, beholde, I wil melte them and trie thē, for what shulde I els do to my people? Their tūges are like sharpe arowes, ^cto speake disceate. With their mouth they speake peaceably to their neyghboure, but preuely they laye waite for him. Shulde I not punysh them for these thinges, saith the LORDE? ^dOr, shulde I not be auenged of eny soch people, as this? Vpon the mountaynes will I take vp a lamentacion and soroufull crie, and a mournynge vpon the fayre playnes of the wildernes: Namely, how they are so brente vp, that no man goeth there eny more: Yee a man shal not heare one beast crie there.

^eByrdes and catell are all gone from thēce. I wil make Ierusalem also an heape of stones, and a denne of venomous wormes. And I wil make the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shal dwell therin. What man is so wise, as to vnderstonde this? Or to whom hath the LORDE spoken by mouth, that he maye shewe this, and saye: ^fO thou londe, why perishest thou so? Wherefore art thou so brent vp, and like a wildernes, that no mā goeth thorow? Yee the LORDE himself tolde the same vnto them, that forsoke his lawe, and kepte not the thyng that he gaue them in commaundement, nether lyued thereafter: ^gbut folowed the wickednes of their owne hertes, and serued straunge goddes, as their fathers taught them.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: Beholde, I will fede this people with wormwod, and geue thē gall to drynke. ^hI will scatere them also amonge the Heithen, whom nether they ner their fathers haue knowne: and I will sende a swearde amonge them, ⁱto persecute them, vntill I bringe them to naught. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: loke that ye call for mournynge wyues, and sende for wise women: that they come shortly, and singe a mournynge songe of you: that the teares maye fall out of oure eyes, and that oure eye lyddes maye guszhe out of water.

For there is a lamentable noyse herde of Sion: O how are we so sore destroyed? O how are we so piteously confounded? We must forsake oure owne naturall countre, and we are shot out of oure owne lodgiges. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye women) and let your eares regarde the wordes of his mouth: that ye maye lerne youre daughters, to mourne, and that euery one maye teach hir neyghboursse, to make lamentacion. Namely thus: Deeth is clynnē vp in at oure wyndowes, he is come in to oure houses, to destroye the childe before the dore, & ^jfy yonge man in the strete.

But tell thou planely, thus saith ^kthe LORDE: The deed bodies of men shal lye vpon ^lfy grounde, as the donge vpon the felde, ^mand as the hay after the mower, and there shal be no man to take them vp. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: Let not the wise man reioyse in his wisdomde, ner the stronge man in his strength, ⁿnether the rich man in his riches: But who so wil reioyse, let him reioyse in this, that he vnderstōdeth, and knoweth me: for I am the LORDE, which do mercie, equite and rightousnes vpon earth. ^oTherefore haue I pleasure in such thinges, saieþ ꝑ LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saieþ the LORDE) that I wil vyset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, the Iewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwel in the wilderness. ^a For all ꝑ Gentiles are vncircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

The x. Chapter.

HEARE the worde of the LORDE, ꝑ he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saieþ the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne after the maner of the Heithē, and ye shal not be afayed for the tokens of heauen: for the Heithen are afayed of soch: Yee all the customes and lawes of the Gētiles are nothinge, but vanite. ^a They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the workeman, and fashion it with the axe: they couer it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it with nales and hammers, that it moue not. It stōdeth as stiff as the palme tre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. ^b Be not ye afayed of soch, for they cā do nether good ner euel. But there is none like vnto ꝑ (o LORDE) thou art greate, and greate is the name of thy power. Who wolde not feare the? or what kige of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

For amonge all the wysemen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye be lickened vnto the. They are all together vnlearned and vnwise, All their connyng is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beatē to plates: ^c and golde from Ophir, a worke ꝑ is made with the honde of the craftesman and the caster, clothed with yalow sylck and scarlet: euen so is the worke of their wyse men all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyuinge God, and an euerlastinge kinge. ^d Yf he be wroth, the earth shaketh: all the Gētiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddes, it maye well be sayde of thē: they are goddes, that made nether heauē ner earth: therefore shal they perish frō the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen.

^e But (as for oure God) he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdom hath he fynished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spred out the heauens, At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he draweth vp ꝑ cloudes from the vttemost partes of ꝑ earth: ^f he turneth lighteninge to rayne, and brigheth forth the wyndes out of their treasuries: ^g His wisdom maketh all men foolles. And confunded be all casters of ymages, ^h for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. ⁱ The vayne craftes men with their workes, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Iacobs porciō is not soch: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaūce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put awaye thy vnclennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saieþ the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhabitours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of soch a fashiō, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurte? Alas, how panefull are my scourges vnto me? For I cōside this sorow by my self, and I must suffre it, My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone fro me, and can no where be founde. Now haue I none to sprede out my tente, or to set vp my hanginges. For the hyrdmen haue done folishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therefore haue they dealt vnwisely with their catell, and all are scatred abrode. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greate sediciō out of the north: to make the cities of Iuda a wyldernes, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. ^j Now I knowe (o LORDE) that it is not in mā's power to ordre his owne waies, or to rule his owne steppes and goinges. Therefore chastē thou vs (o LORDE) but with fauoure, and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not vtterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gētiles, that knowe ꝑ not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that because they haue consumed, deuoured and destroyed Iacob, and haue roted out his glory.

The xi. Chapter.

A THIS is another Sermon, which the LORDE commaunded Jeremy for to preach, sayenge :

Heare the wordes of the couenaunt, and speake vnto all Iuda, and to all them that dwell at Ierusalem, And saye thou vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be every one, that is not obedient vnto y^e wordes of this couenaunt: which I commaunded vnto youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipte, from the yron fornice, sayenge: ^aBe obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I commaunde you: ^bso shal ye be my people, and I will be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, ^cy^e I haue sworne vnto youre fathers: Namely, that I wolde geue them ^da londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vnto this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is euen so LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in y^e cities off Iuda and rounde aboute Ierusalem, and saye: Heare the wordes off this couenaunt, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exhorted youre fathers, euer sence the tyme that I brought them out off the Londe off Egipte, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnynge by tymes, sayenge: 33 herken vnto my voyce: ^eNeuertheles, they wolde not obeie me, nor encline their eares vnto me, ^fbut folowed the wicked ymaginaciōs of their owne hertes. And therefore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this couenaunt, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstōdinge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is foude out, that whole Israel and all the citisens off Ierusalem are gone backe. They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my worde. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddes, and worshipped them. The house off Israel and Iuda haue broken my couenaunt, which I made with their fathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Be-holde, I will sende a plage amonge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye crie vnto me, I will not heare you. The shal the townes off Iuda and the citisens off Ierusalem go, and call vpon their goddes, vnto whom they made their oblaciōs: ^gbut they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. ^hFor as many cities as thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also: ⁱAnd loke how many stretes there be in the (o Ierusalem) so many shameful aluters haue ye set vp, to offre vpon them vnto Baal. ^jBut praye not thou for this people, byd nether prayse ner prayer for them: for though they crie vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shamefull greate blasphemies in my house? ^keuen as though that holy flesh might absolue the, specially when thou hast made thy boost off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, ^la fayre one, a frutefull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary reporte off the abroad, he will burne the vp, ^mād destroye thy braunches. ⁿFor the LORDE off hoostes that plātē the, hath deuysed a plage for the (o thou house of Israel & Iuda) for y^e euell that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, 34 and vnderstonde it, for thou hast shewed me their ymaginacions. ^oBut I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to be slayne: not knowinge, that they had deuysed such a counceyl agaynst me, sayenge: ^pWe will destroye his meate with wod, and dryue him out of the londe of the lyuynge, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therefore I will beseke the now (o LORDE of hoostes) ^qthou righteous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therefore spake thus of the citisens of Anothot, that sought to slaye me, sayēge: ^rPreach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I will viset you. Your yonge mē shal perish with the swearde, youre sonnes and youre daughters shal vtterly dye of hunger,

The xiiij. Chapter.

O LORDE, thou art more rightuous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. ^aHow happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous? and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offēde and lyue in wickednesse? Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boost moch off the, yet doest thou not punysh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, & proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house,^b and apoynte them for the daye off slaughtinge.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therin?

^cThe catell and the byrdes are gone, yet saye they: tush, God will not destroye vs vtterly.

Seinge thou art weery in runnyng with the fote men, how wilt thou then runne with horses? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Iordane? For thy brethren ad thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence.

B ^dBeleue them not, though they speake fayre wordes to the. As for me (saye I) I haue forsaken myne owne dwellinge place, and left myne heretage. My life also that I loue so wel, haue I geuen in to the hōdes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therefore haue I forsaken it. ^eMyne heretage is vnto me, as a spreckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. Go hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.

^fDyuerse hyrdmē haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon my porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wildernes & deserte. They haue layed it waist: and now that it is waist, it sigheth vnto me. Yee the whole londe lieth waist, and no man regardeth it. The distroyers come ouer the heeth euery waye, for ^gthe swearde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of y lōde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reepe thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe confounded of youre owne wynnynge, because of the greате wrath of the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE vpon all myne C euel neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Iuda from amonge them. ^hAnd whē I haue rooted thē out, I wilbe at one with thē agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and brynge them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne y wayes of the, to sweare by my name: The LORDE lyueth (like as they lerned my people to sweare by Baal) thē shal they be rekened amōge my people. ⁱBut yf they wil not obeye, thē will I rote out the same folke, and destroye them, saith the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus saied the LORDE A vnto me: go thy waye & get the a lynnyn breche, and gyrd it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a brech, acordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the breche that thou hast prepared & put aboute the, and get the vp, and go vnto Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Vp, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the breche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the brech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the brech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus B saith the LORDE: Euen so will I corruppe the pryde off Iuda, and the hie mynde off

Ierusalē. "This people is a wicked people, they will not heare my worde, they folowe & wicked ymaginacions off their owne hert, & hange vpon straunge goddes, thē haue they serued & worshipped: and therefore they shalbe as this brech, that serueth for nothinge. For as strately as a brech lieth vpon a mā's loynes, so strately dyd I bynde & whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Iuda vnto me, saith the LORDE:^a that they might be my people: that they might haue a glorious name: & they might be in honour: but they wolde not obeye me. Therefore laye this ryddle before them, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: euery pot shal be fylled with wyne. And they shal saye: thinkest thou we knowe not, & euery pot shalbe fylled with wyne? Then shalt thou saye vnto them: C Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I shal fyll all the inhabitours of this lōde with dronckēnes, the kynges that syt vpō Dauid's stole, the prestes and prophetes, with all & dwell at Ierusalem. And I will shute them one agaynst another, yee & fathers agaynst the sonnes, saith the LORDE.

I wil not pardon them, I wil not spare them, ner haue pitie vpon them: but destroye them. Be obedient, geue eare, take no disdayne at it, for it is the LORDE himself that speaketh. Honoure & LORDE youre God herein, or he take his light from you, and or euer youre fete stombe in darknesse at & hill: lest whē ye loke for the light, he turne it in to & shadowe and darknesse of death. But yf ye wil not heare me, that geue you secrete warnynge, I will mourne fro my whole herte for youre stubburnesse. "Piteously will I wepe, and the teares shall guszhe out of myne eyes. For the LORDES flocke shal be caried awaye captiue. D Tell the kinge & the rulers: Humble youre selues, set you downe lowe, for & crowne of youre glory shal fall from youre heade. The cities towarde the south shalbe shut vp, & no man shal open thē. All Iuda shal be caried awaye captiue, so that none shall remayne.

Lift vp youre eyes, and beholde thē, that come from the North: Like a fat flocke shal they fall vpon thee. To whom wilt thou make thy mone, when they come vpon the? for thou hast taught thē thy self, and made thē masters ouer thee. "Shal not sorowe come vpō the, as on a woman traueling with childe? And yf thou woldest saye thē in thine hert: Wherefore come these thinges vpō me? Euē for the multitude of thy blasphemies, "shall thy hynder partes & thy fete be discouered. For like as the man of Inde maye change his skynne, & the cat of the mountayne hir spottes: so maye ye that be exercised in euell, do good. Therefore will I scatre you, lyke as & stobble that is takē awaye with & south wynde. This shal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre measure, wher with ye shal be rewarded of me, saith the LORDE: because ye haue forgotten me, and put youre trust in disceatful thinges. "Therefore shall I turne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and discouer thy thees, that thy preuyties maye be sene: thy aduoutrie, thy deadly malice, thy beastlynes and thy shamefull whordome. For vpon the felde and hilles I haue sene thy abhominacions. Wo be vnto the (o Ierusalē) whē wilt thou euer be censed enymore?

IUDA shal mourne, men shall not go moch more thorow his gates: the londe shal be nomore had in reputacion, & the crie of Ierusalē shal breake out. The lordes shall sende their seruantes to fetch water, & when they come to the welles, they shal fynde no water, but shal carie their vessels home emptie. They shal be ashamed ād confounded, & shal couer their heades. "For the grouēde shalbe dried vp, because there cōmeth no rayne vpon it. The plowmen also shalbe ashamed, ād shal couer their heades. The Hynde shal forsake the yonge fawne, that she brigheth forth in & felde, because there shalbe no grasse. 33 Then spake the LORDE, concernynge this people y haue pleasure to go so nembly with their fete, and leaue not of, and therefore displease the LORDE: in so moch, that he will now bringe agayne to remembrance all their myszdedes, ad punysh all their synnes. Yee euen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. a For though they fast, I will not heare their prayers. And though they offre burnt offrises q sacrifices, yet wil not I accepte them. For I will destroye them with the swearde, hunger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: b Tush, ye shal se no swearde, and no hunger shall come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you continuall rest in this place.

For thus wil I poure their wickednes vpon the. This shalt thou saye also vnto them: Myne eyes shal wepe without ceassing daye q night. f For my people shalbe destroyed with greate harme, and shall perish with a greate plague. For yff I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Yff I come in to the cite, lo, they be all famished of hunger.

Yee their prophetes also and prestes shal be led in to an vnkowne londe.

Hast thou then vtterly forsaken Iuda? 34 (sayde I) Dost thou so abhorre Siō? Or hast thou so plagued vs, that we can be healed no more? g We looked for peace, and there cometh no good: for the tyme of health, h lo, here is nothinge but trouble. We knowlege (o LORDE) all oure myszdedes, and the synnes of oure fathers, that we haue offended y. Be not displeased (o LORDE) for thy names sake, forget not thy louynge kyndnes: i Remembre y trone of thyne honoure, breake not the couenaūt, that thou hast made with vs. j Are there eny amonge the goddes of the Gentiles, that sende rayne, or geue the showers of heauen? Dost not thou it o LORDE oure God, in whō we trust? Yee LORDE, thou dost all these thinges.

And yf they saye vnto the: l Whyther shal we go? The tell the: The LORDE geueth you this answer: Some vnto death, some to the swearde, some to hunger, some in to captiuyte. For I will bringe foure plagis vpon them, saith the LORDE. m The swearde shal stragle them, the dogges shal deuoure them, the foules of the ayre ad beestes of the earth shal eate them vp, and destroye them. I will scatre them aboute also in all kingdomes and londes to be plagued, because of Manasses n the sonne of Ezechias kinge of Iuda, for the thinges that he dyd in Ierusalem.

Who shal then haue pite vpon the, o Ierusalem? Who shal be sory for the? Or who shal make intercession, to opteyne peace for the? seinge thou goest fro me, ad turnest bacwarde, saith the LORDE? Therefore I will stretch out myne honde agaynst the, to destroye the, and I will not be intreated. I will scatre the abroad with the fanne on euery side of the londe: o I will waist my people and destroye them, for they haue had no lust to turne from their owne wayes. I will make their wyddowes mo in nombre, then the sondes of the see. Vpon p mothers of their children, I shal bringe a destroyer in the noone daye.

° Sodenly and vnawarres, shal I sende a feare vpon their cities. She that hath borne vij. children, shal haue none, hir herte shal be full of sorowe.

The Sonne shall fayle her in the cleare daye, when she shalbe confounded and faynte for very heuynesse. ° As for those y remayne, I wil delyuer them vnto the swearde off their enemies, saith the LORDE. ° O mother, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, an enemy and hated of the whole londe: Though I neuer lente ner receaued vpon vsury, yet euery man speake euell vpon me. And y LORDE answered me: Lede not I the then vnto good? Come not I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe y, when thine enemy oppresseth the? Doth one yron hurte another, or one metall that cometh from the north, another? As for youre riches and treasure, I wil geue them out in to a pray, ° not for eny money, but because of all youre synnes, that ye haue done i all youre coastes. And I wil brige you with youre enemies in to a londe, ° y ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignacion, shal burne you vp.

O LORDE (sayde I then) thou knowest all thinges, therefore remembre me, ad viset me, delyuer me fro my persecuters: Receaue not my cause in thy lōge wrath, yet thou knowest, that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. / When I had founde thy wordes, I at them vp gredely: they haue made my hert ioyfull & glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God off hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scornors, nether is my delyte therin: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heuynes endure for euer? Are my plaghes then so greate, y they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not contynue? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Yf thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. ° They shal conuerte vnto the, but turne not thou vnto thē: and so shal I make the a strōge wall of stele agaynst this people. ° They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not preuayle. For I my self will be with the, to helpe the, and delyuer the, saith the LORDE. And I will ryd the out of the hondes of the wicked, and delyuer the out of the honde of Tirauntes.

The xvi. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus sayde the LORDE ¶ vnto me: Thou shalt take y no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saith the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible deeth, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as dōge vpon the earth. They shal perish thorow the swearde and hunger, and their bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the earth. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE: Go not vnto them, that come together, for to mourne and wepe: for I haue taken my peace frō this people (saith the LORDE) yee my fauoure and my mercy. And in this londe shal they dye, olde and yonge, and shall not be buried: no man shall bewepe them, no man shall clippe or shaue himself for them.

There shal not one viset another, to mourne with them for their deed, or to comforte them. One shal not offre another the cuppe off consolacion, to forget their heuynes for father and mother. / Thou shalt not go in to their feast house, to syt downe, moch lesse to eate or drynke with them. For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: ° Beholde, I shall take awaye out of this place, the voyce off myrth ad gladnesse, the voyce off the brydegrome and off the bryde: yee and that in youre dayes, that ye maye se it.

Now when thou shewest this people all these wordes, and they saye vnto the: Wherefore hath the LORDE deuyed all this greate plage for vs? Or what is the offence and synne, that we haue done agaynst the LORDE oure God? Then make thou them this answer: Because youre fathers haue forsaken me (saith the LORDE) ° and haue cleued vnto straunge goddes, whom they haue honoured and worshipped: but me haue they forsakē, and haue not kepte my lawe. ° And ye with youre shamefull blasphemies, haue exceeded the wickednes off youre fathers. For euery one off you foloweth the frawerde euel ymaginacion off his owne hert, and is not obedient vnto me.

Therefore wil I cast you out off this londe, in to a londe that ye and youre fathers knowe not: and there shall ye serue straunge goddes daye and night, there will I shewe you no fauoure. Beholde therfore (saith the LORDE) the daies are come, that it shall nomore be said: ^aThe LORDE lyueth, which brought the children of Israel out of the lode of Egipte: but (it shall be sayde) the LORDE lyueth, that brought the children of Israel from the North, & from all londes where I had scatred them. For I wil bringe the agayne in to the lode, that I gaue vnto their fathers.

Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will sende out many fiszhers^c to take them, and after ^d wil I sende out many hunters to hunte the out, from all mountaynes and hilles ad out of the caues of stones. For myne eyes beholde all their wayes, and they can not be hyd fro my face, nether can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. But first will I sufficiently rewarde their shamefull blasphemies and synnes, wherwith they haue defyled my londe: Namely, with their stinckinge Idols and abhominacions, wherwith they haue fylled myne heretage. ^eO LORDE, my strength, my power, and refuge in tyme off trouble. The Gentiles shall come vnto the from the endes off the worlde, and saye: Verely oure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therfore, I will once teach them (saith ^f LORDE) I wil shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, ^g my name is ^h LORDE.

The xviij. Chapter.

YOURE synne (o ye off the trybe of Iuda) is writtē in the table of youre hertes, & graue so vpon the edges of youre altuers with a penne of yron & with an Adamāt clawe: ⁱ youre children also maye thynke vpon youre altuers, woddes, thicke trees, hie hilles, mountaynes & feldes. ^kWherefore, I will make all youre substance & treasure be spoyled, for the greате synne that ye haue done vpon youre hie places, thorow out all ^l coostes off youre lode. Ye shal be cast out also from the heretage, that I gaue you. And I wil subdue you vnder the heuy bōdage of youre enemies, in a londe that ye knowe not. For ye haue ministred fyre to my indignacion, which shal burne euermore. Thus saith the LORDE: ^mCursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, ad that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from ⁿ LORDE. He shall be like the heeth, that groweth in the wildernes. As for the good thinge that is for to come, he shall not se it: but dwell in a drie place off the wildernes, in a salt and vnoccupied londe. O Blissed is the man, ^o that putteth his trust in the LORDE, and whose hope the LORDE is himself. For he shalbe as a tre, that is planted by the water syde: which spredeth out the rote vnto moystnesse, whom the heate can not harne, when it commeth, but his leaues are grene. And though there growe but litle frute because off drouth, yet is he not carefull, but he neuer leaueth off to bringe forth frute. Amonge all thinges lyuynge, man hath the most disceatfull and vnsercheable hert.

Who shall then knowe it? ^pEuen I the LORDE ripe out the grounde off the hert, ad search the reynes and rewarde euery mā accordinge to his wayes, and accordinge to the frute off his counsels.

The disceatfull maketh a nest, but bringeth forth no yonge: He commeth by riches, but not rightuously. In the myddest off his life must he leaue them behinde him, and at the last be founde a very foole. But thou (o LORDE) whose trone is most glorious, excellent and off most antiquite, which dwellest in the place of oure holy rest: Thou art the comforte off Israel. All they that forsake the, shalbe confounded: ^qall they that departe from the, shalbe written in earth, for they haue forsaken the LORDE, the very condite off the waters of life.

Heale me (o LORDE) and I shall be whole: saue thou me, and I shalbe saued, for thou art my prayse. Beholde, these men saye vnto me: Where is the worde of the LORDE? Let it come. Where as I neuertheles ledinge

Thou shalt bringe vpon the the tyme off their plage, and shalt destroye them right sore.

Agayne, thus hath the LORDE sayde vnto me: "Go and stonde vnder the gate, where thorow the people and the kinges of Iuda go out and in, yee vnder all the gates of Ierusalem, and saye vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, and all thou people of Iuda, and all ye citesyns of Ierusalem, that go thorow this gate: Thus the LORDE commaundeth: "Take hede for youre lyues, that ye carie no burthen vpon you in the Sabbath, to bringe it thorow the gates of Ierusalem: ye shall beare no burthen also out of youre houses in the Sabbath: Ye shall do no labour there in, but halowe the Sabbath, as I commaunded youre fathers. There shall come men also from the cities of Iuda, from aboute Ierusalem, ād from ſ londe of Ben Iamin, from the playne felde, from the mountaynes and from the wilderness: which shall bringe burntofferings, sacrifices, oblations, and incense, and offre vp thankesgeuyng in the house of the LORDE. thorow the gates off Ierusalem vpon the Sabbath: Then shall I set fyre vpon the gates off Ierusalem, ād it shal burne vp the houses off Ierusalem, and no man shal be able to quench it.

The xviij. Chapter.

This is another communicacion, that God had with Ieremy, sayenge:

ARISE, and go downe in to the Potters house, and there shall I tell the more off my mynde. Now when I came to the Potters house, I founde him makinge his worke vpon a whele. The vessel that the Potter made off claye, brake amonge his hōdes: So he beganne a new, and made another vessell, accordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: "Maye not I do with you, as this Potter doth, O ye house off Israel? saith the LORDE? Beholde, ye house off Israel: ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the Potters honde.

"When I take in honde to rote out, to destroye, or to waite awaye eny people or kigdome: yff that people (agaynst whom I haue thus deuysed) cōuerte from their wickednes: Immediately, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bringe vpon the. Speake now therefore vnto whole Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thinge in honde agaynst you.

"Therefore, let euery man turne from his euell waye, 'take vpon you the thinge that is good, and do right. But they saye: "No more of this, we will folowe oure owne ymaginacions, and do euery mā accordinge to the wilfulness of his owne mynde.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Axe amonge the Heithen, yf eny man hath herde soch horrible thinges, as the daughter of Sion hath done. Shal not ſ snowe (ſ melteth vpon the stony rockes of Libanus) moysture the felde? Or maye the springes off waters be

"Yet LORDE, thou knowest all their coicell, that they haue deuyd, to slaye me. And therefore forgeue them not their wickednes, and let not their synne be put out of thy sight: but let them be iudged before the as the giltye: this shalt thou do vnto thē in ^ŷ tyme of thy indignacion.

The xix. Chapter.

^A MOROUER, thus saide the LORDE vnto Ieremy: Go thy waye, and bye the an erthen pytcher, and bringe forth the Senatours and chefe prestes in to the valley of the children off Ennon, which lieth before the porte that is made of brick, ^ŷ shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, ad ye citesyns of Ierusalem: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe soch a plage vpon this place, that ^ŷ eares of all that heare it, shal glowe. "And that because they haue forsakē me, and vnhalowed this place, and haue offred in it vnto straunge goddes: whō nether they, their fathers, ner the kinges off Iuda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also with the bloude of innocentes, ^ŷ for they haue set vp an alter vnto Baal, to burne their children for a burnt-offering vnto Baal, which I nether commaunded, ner charged them, nether thought once there vpon.

Beholde therefore, ^ŷ tyme cōmeth^a (saith the LORDE) ^ŷ this place shal nomore be called Tophet, ner ^ŷ valley of ^ŷ childrē of Ennō, but ^ŷ valley of slaughter. For in this place wil I slaye the Senatours of Iuda ^ŷ Ierusalē, ^ŷ kill thē downe with the swearde in ^ŷ sight of their enemies, ad of them that seke their lyues. And their deed carcases wil I geue to be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. And I wil make this cite so desolate, ad despyd: that ^ŷ who so goeth there by, shal be abaszhed ^ŷ geast vpon her, because of all hir plages.

I will fede them also with the flesh^m of their sonnes ^ŷ their daughters. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saith the LORDE, and to thē ^ŷ dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (For the houses of Ierusalē ^ŷ the houses of the kinges of Iuda are defyled, like as Tophet,) because off all the houses, in whose parlors they dyd sacrifice vnto all the hooste of heauē, and poured out

And so Ieremy came from Tophet, where the LORDE had sent him to prophecie, and stode in the courte off the house off the LORDE, and spake to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe vpon this cite and vpon euery towne aboute it, all the places that I haue deuyed agaynst them: for they haue bene obstinate,^a ad wolde not obeye my warnynges.

The rr. Chapter.

WHEN Pashur the preast, the sonne off Emmer, chefe in the house of ȝ LORDE, herde Ieremy preach so stedfastly: ^bhe smote Ieremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate of Ben Iamin, in the house of ȝ LORDE. The nexte daye folowing, Pashur brought Ieremy out of the stockes agayne. Then sayde Ieremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the nomore Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull ad afrayed) euery where. For thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make the afrayed, the thy self, and all that fauoure ȝ: which shal perish with the swearde off their enemies, euen before thy face.

B And I wil geue whole Iuda vnder the power of the kinge of Babilon, which shall carie some vnto Babilon presoners, and slaye some with the swearde. Morouer, ^call ȝ substaunce of this londe, all their precious and gorgeous workes, all costlynnesse, and all the treasure of the kinges of Iuda: wil I geue in to the hōdes of their enemies, which shal spoyle them, and carie them vnto Babilon. But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be caried vnto Babilon with all thine housholde, ^dto Babilō shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy fauourers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weakie, but thou refrezhest me, ^eand makest me stronge agayne. ^fAll the daye longe am I despyed, and laughed to scorne of euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruccion. ^gFor ȝ which cause they cast the worde off the LORDE in my teth, and take me euer to the worst.

C Wherefore, I thought from hence forth, not to speake of him, ner to preach eny more in his name. But the worde off the LORDE was a very burnynge fyre in my hert and in my bones, which when I wolde haue stopped, I might not. For why, I herde so many derisios and blasphemies, ^hyee euen of myne owne companions, and off soch as were conuersaunte with me: which wente aboute, to make me afrayed sayenge: vpon him, let vs go vpon him, to feare him, and make him holde his tonge: ⁱȝ we maye ouercome him, and be avenged off him.

But the LORDE stode by me, like a mightie giaunte: therfore my persecuters fell, and coude do nothinge. They shal be sore confounded, for they haue done vnwisely, they shal haue an euerlastinge shame. And now, o LORDE of hoostes, ^jthou rightuous sercher (which knowest the reynes and the very hertes:) let me se them punyshed, for vnto the I committe my cause.

D Synge vnto the LORDE, and prayse him, for he hath delyuered the soule off the oppressed, from the honde off the violent. Cursed be the daye, wherein I was borne: ^kvnhappie be ȝ daye, where in my mother brought me forth. Cursed be the man, that brought my father the tidinges, to make him glad, sayenge: thou hast gotten a sonne. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the cities^l which ȝ LORDE turned vpside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure of them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue hirself, that the byrth might not haue come out, but remayned still in her. ^mWherefore came I forth off my mothers wombe? To haue experience of laboure and sorowe? and to lede my life with shame?

The rri. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes that the LORDE A spake vnto Ieremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Melchia, and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia, prest, sayenge: Axe counsell at the LORDE (we praye the) of oure behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peradventure) will deale with vs, accordinge to his maruelous power, and take him from vs.

Then spake Ieremy: Geue Sedechias this answer, ^aThus saith the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapens, that ye haue in youre hondes, wherwith ye fight agaynst the kinge of Babilō & the Caldees, which besege you rounde aboute ^ȳ wallis: & I wil brige the together in to the myddest of this cite, and I my self will fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, ^{ād} with a mightie arme, in greate displeasure and terrible wrath: and will smyte them, that dwell in this cite: yee both mē ^{ād} catell shal dye of the pestilence.

And after this (saith the LORDE) I shall deliuer Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, & his seruantes, his people (and such as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, swerde, and hunger) ^ā in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon: yee in to the hōdes of their enemies, in to the hōdes of those ^ȳ folowe vpon their lyues, which shall smyte them with ^ȳ swerde: they shal not pite the, they shal not spare them, they shall haue no mercy vpon them.

But who so goeth out to holde on ^ȳ Caldees parte, ^ȳ besege it, he shal saue his life, and shall wyne his soule for a pray. For I haue set my face agaynst this cite ^d (saith the LORDE) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be geue in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, & be brent with fyre.

And vnto the house of the kinge off Iuda, saye thus: Heare the worde of ^ȳ LORDE (o thou house off Dauid) for thus saith the LORDE: ^eMinistre rightuousnes, and that soone, deliuer the oppressed frō violent power: or euer my terrible wrath break out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quēch it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginations. Beholde (saith the LORDE) ^fI wil come vpō you, that dwel in the valles, ^grockes and feldes and saye: Tush, who will make vs afraied? or who will come in to oure houses? For I will vyset you (saith the LORDE) because off the wickednes off youre inuencions, and will kyndle such a fyre in youre wod, as shall cōsume all, that is aboute you.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THUS sayde the LORDE also: Go ^a downe in to the house of the kinge off Iuda, and speake there these wordes, & saye: Heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off Dauid: thou and thy seruantes and thy people, that go in & out at this gate. ^bThus the LORDE commaundeth: kepe equite and rightuousnesse, deliuer the oppressed frō the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, ^{ād} shed no innocēt bloude in this place.

And yf ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the dore off this house kynges, to syt vpō Dauids seate: they shal be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon horses, both they & their seruantes, ^{ād} their people. ^cBut yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by myne owne self (saith ^ȳ LORDE) this house shal be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vpon the kinges house of Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye of it, yf I make the not so waist (& thy cities also) that no man shal dwell there in? I will prepare a destroyer with his weapēs for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherefore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenant off the LORDE their God, ^dand haue worshipped and serued straūge goddes. Mourne not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth awaye: for he commeth not agayne, ^{ād} seeth his natyue cōtre no more. For thus saith the LORDE, ^eas touchinge Sellum the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, which reigned after his father, and is caried out off this place:

He shal neuer come hither agayne, for he shal dye in the place, where vnto he is led captiue, and shall se this londe nomore. ^fWo worth him, that buyldeth his house with vn-rightuousnes, ^{ād} his perlers with the good, that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neighbors labour, ner payeth him his hyre. He thinketh in himself: I wil buyld me a wyde house, ad gorgeous perlers: He causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes maketh he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkest thou to reigne, now that thou prouokest me to wrath with thy Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as lōge as he dealt with equite ad rightuousnesse? Yee when he helped f oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saith the LORDE. Neuertheles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wronge and violence. And therefore, thus saith the LORDE agaynst Ioachim, f sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda: "They shall not mourne for him (as they vse to do) alas brother, alas syster: Nether shall they saye vnto him: Alas sy, alas for that noble pryncce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast without the gates of Ierusalem.

B Clymme vp the hill off Libanus (o thou doughter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, crie from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. O how greate shal thy mournynge be, when thy sorowes come vpon the, as a woman trauelinge with childe?

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE.) ^c Though Iechonias the sonne off Ioachim kinge off Iuda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him off: And I wil geue the in to f power off thē that seke to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou fearest: in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the

But as for the lond that ye will desyre to returne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayne. This mā Iechonias shal be like an ymage robbed and torne in peces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherefore both he and his sede shalbe sent awaye, and cast out in to a lōde, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth: heare the worde off the LORDE: Wryte this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall eny of his sede be so happie, as to syt vpon the seate off Dauid, and to beare rule in Iuda.

The xxiij. Chapter.

WO be vnto the shepherdes, ^a that destroye, and scatre my flocke, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, this is the cōmaundemēt of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that fede my people: Ye scatre ad thrust out my flocke, and loke not vpon them. Therefore, now will I vyset the wickednes of youre ymaginacions, saith f LORDE: And will gather together the remnant of my flocke, from all londes that I had dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye growe and increace. I will set shepherdes also ouer them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saith the LORDE. ^c Beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I wil rayse vp the rightuous braunch off Dauid, which shall beare rule, and discusse matters with wysdome, and shall set vp equyte and rightuousnes agayne in the earth.

the north londe, and from all countrees where I had scatred them, and they shal dwell in their owne londe agayne.

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shake: I am become like a droncken man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very feare of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes: Because the londe is full of aduoterers, where thorow it is destroyed and mourneth, and y^e pleasaunt pastures of the deserte are dried vp. Yee the waye that men take, is wicked, and their gouernance is nothinge like the holy wordes of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are polluted Ypocrytes, and their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, their waye shall be slippery in the darknesse, wherein they maye stacker and fall. For I will bringe a plague vpon them, euen the yeaere of their visitacion, saith the LORDE. I haue sene folly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, y^e they preched for Baal, and disceaue my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the Prophetes off Ierusalem foule aduoutery, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hode, flatteringe them, so that they can not returne from their wickednes. All these with their citesyns are vnto me, as Sodom, and as the inhabitours off Gomorre.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes concernynge the prophetes: Beholde, I wil fede them with wormwod, and make them dryncke the water of gall. For fro the prophetes of Ierusalem is the sicknes of Ypocrisie come in to all the londe.

And therefore the LORDE of hoostes geueth you this warnynge: Heare not the wordes of the prophetes, that preach vnto you, and disceaue you: for they speake the meanyng of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prospere right well. And vnto all them, that walke after the lust of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no mysfortune happen you. For who hath sytten in the counsell of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? Who hath marked his deuyce, and herde it? Beholde, the stormy wether of the LORDE (that is, his indignacion) shal go forth, and shal fall downe vpon the heade of the vngodly. And the wrath of the LORDE shal not turne agayne, vntill he perfourme, and fulfill the thoughte of his herte. And in the latter dayes ye shall knowe his meanyng.

I haue not sent these prophetes, (saith the LORDE) and yet they ranne. I haue not spoken to them, and yet they preached. But yf they had continued in my counsell and herde my wordes: they had turned my people from their euell wayes and wicked ymaginations. Am I the God that seeth but the thinge, which is nye at honde, and not that is farre off? saith the LORDE. Maye any man hyde him self so, that I shal not se him? saith the LORDE. Do not I fulfill heauen and earth? saith the LORDE. I haue herde well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach lyes in my name, saye: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this cōtinue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes, and to preach the craftie sotyلة of their owne herte? Whose purpose is, (with the dreames that euery one tell) to make my people forget my name, as their fore fathers dyd, when Baal came vp. The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell it: and he that vnderstandeth my worde, let him shewe it faithfully.

For what hath chaffe and wheat to do together? saith the LORDE. Is not my worde like a fyre, (saith the LORDE) and like an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone? Therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil vpo the prophetes, that steale my worde priuily from euery man. Beholde, here am I (saith the LORDE) agaynst the prophetes, that take vpon their tungenes to speake: The LORDE hath sayde it. Beholde, here am I (saith y^e LORDE) agaynst those prophetes, that darre prophecy lyes, and disceaue my people with their vanities and miracles, whom I neuer sent, ner commaunded them. They shal do this people greate harme, saith the LORDE.

But thus shall ye saye, euery one to another: What answer hath the LORDE geuen? or, what is the LORDES commaundement? And as for the burthen of the LORDE, ye shal speake nomore of it: for euery mans owne worde is his burthen, because ye haue altered the wordes of the luyngye God the LORDE of hoostes oure God.

Thus shall euery man saye to the prophetes: what answer hath the LORDE geuen the? Or, what saieth the LORDE? And not once to name the burthen of the LORDE. Therefore thus saieth the LORDE: For so moch as ye haue vsed this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) where as I notwithstandinge sent vnto you, and forbade you to speake of the LORDES burthen:

Beholde therefore, I will repute you as a burthen, and will cast you out of my presence: yee and the cite also, that I gaue you and youre fathers: and will bringe you to an euerlastinge confucion, and in to soch a shame, as shal neuer be forgotten.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THE LORDE shewed me a visiō: Beholde, there stode two maundes of figes before y^e Tēple of the LORDE, ^aafter y^e Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilō had led awaye captiue Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim kinge of Iuda, the mightie men also of Iuda, with the workemasters and cōnyng men of Ierusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good figes, euen like as those that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very naughtie figes,^b which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

3 Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seiist thou Ieremy? I sayde: figes, where of some be very good, and some so euell, that no man maye eate them.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saieth y^e LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good figes, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place in to the londe of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne in to this londe: I will buylde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God, for they shal returne vnto me with their whole herte.

^cAnd like as thou knowest the naughtie figes, which maye not be eatē, they are so euell: Euen so wil I (saieth the LORDE) let Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, (ye and all his prynces, & the residue of Ierusalem that remaine ouer in this londe, & them also that dwell in Egip̄te) to be vexed & plaged in all kingdomes & londes. And will make them to be a reprove, ^da comon byworde, a laughinge stocke & shame, in all the places, where I shal scatre them. I will sende the swearde, hunger & pestilence amonge them, vntill I haue cleene consumed them out of the londe, that I gaue vnto them & their fathers.

The xxiij. Chapter.

ASERMON that was geuen vnto Ieremy, vpon all the people of Iuda: In the fourth yeare of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, that was, in the first yeare of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon. Which sermone, Jeremý the prophet made vnto all the people of Iuda, & to all y^e Inhabitours of Ierusalē, on this maner:

From the xiiij yeare of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, vnto this present daye, (that is euen xxiiij yeare) the worde of the LORDE hath bene committed vnto me. And so I haue spokē to you, I haue rysen vp early, I haue geuē you warnynge in season, but ye wolde not heare me. He sayde: turne agayne euery man from his euell waye, ^f& from youre wicked ymaginacions, & so shal ye dwell for euer in the londe, that the LORDE promised you & youre

33 Wherefore, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Because ye haue not herkened vnto my worde, lo, I will sende out, & call for all the people, & dwell in the north^a (saith the LORDE) & wil prepayre Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauant, & wil bringe them vpon this londe, and vpon all & dwell therein, & vpon all the people that are aboute them, and will vterly rote them out. I will make of them a wildernes, a mockage, and a continuall deserte.

Morouer, I will take from them the voyce of gladnesse and solace, the voyce of the brydegrome & the bryde, the voyce of the anoynted, with the creszshettes: & this whole londe shal become a wildernes, & they shall serue the sayde people and the kinge of Babilon, thre score yeares and ten. ^dWhen the lxx yeares are expyred, I wil viset also the wickednesse of the kinge of Babylon & his people, saith the LORDE: yee & the londe of the Caldees, & wil make it a perpetuall wildernes, & wil fulfil all my wordes vpon that londe, which I haue deuynd agaynst it: yee all that is written in this boke, which Ieremy hath prophecied of all people: so that they also shal be subdued vnto dyuerse nacions & greate kynges, for I wil recompense them, ^eacordinge to their dedes & workes of their owne hondes.

C For thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken vnto me: ^fTake this wyne cuppe of indignacion fro my honde, that thou mayest cause all the people (to whom I sende the) for to drinke of it: that when they haue drunkē thereof, they maye be madd, & out of their wyttes, when the swearde commeth, that I wil sende amōge them. Then toke I the cuppe from the LORDES honde, & made all the people drynke there of, vnto whom the LORDE had sent me.

But first the cite of Ierusalem, & all the cities of Iuda, their kinges & prynces: to make the desolate, waist, ^gdespysed & cursed, acordinge as it is come to passe this daye. Yee & Pharaō & kinge of Egipte, his seruauantes, his prynces & his people altogether one with another and all kinges of the londe of Hus, all kinges of the Philistynes londe, Ascalon, Gaza, Accaron & the remnaunt of Aszdod, the Edomites, the Moabites & the Ammonites: all the kinges of Tirus & Sidon: the kinges of the Iles, that are beyonde the see: Dedan, Thema, Buz & the shauen Ismaelites: & all the kinges of Araby, & (generally) all the kinges that dwell in the deserte: all the kinges of Simri, all the kinges of Elam, all & kinges of the Meedes, all kinges towarde the north (whether they be farre or nye) euery one with his neighbours: Yee and all the kingdomes that are vpon the whole earth. The kinge of Sesach (sayde he) shal drinke with them also.

And saye thou vnto them: this is the commaundement of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: drinke and be droncken, spewe, and fall, that ye neuer ryse: and that thorow the swearde, which I wil sende amonge you. But yf they will not receaue the cuppe of thy honde, and drinke it, then tell them: Thus doth the LORDE of hoostes threaten you: ^hdrynke it ye shal, and that shortly. For I begynne to plague the cite, that my name is geuen vnto: thynke ye then, that I will leaue you vnpunyshe? Ye shall not go quyte. For why, I call for a swearde vpō all the inhabitours of the earth, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

Therefore tell them all these wordes, and saye vnto them: ⁱThe LORDE shal crie from aboue, and let his voyce be herde from his holy habitation. With a greate noyse shall he crie from his courte regall. He shal geue a greate voyce (like the grape gatherers) and the sounde thereof shalbe herde vnto the endes of the worlde. For the LORDE hath a iudgment to geue vpon all people, and will holde his courte of iustice with all flesh and punyshe the vngodly, saith the LORDE.

The xxij. Chapter.

IN the begynnynge of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE: “Stonde in the courte of the LORDES house, and speake vnto all them which (out of the cities of Iuda) come to do worshippe in the LORDES house, all the wordes [¶] I commaunde the to saye. Loke that thou kepe not one worde backe, yf (perauenture) “they will herke, and turne euery man from his wicked waye: that I maye also repente of the plage, which I haue determed to brynge vpon them, because of their wicked inuencions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: yf ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruauantes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vp tynely, and still sendinge: Yf ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhorred of all the people of the earth. “And the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Jeremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

Now when he had spoken out all the wordes, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the name of the LORDE: it shal happen to this house as it dyd vnto Silo? and this cite shalbe so waist, that no man shal dwell there in?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Jeremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Iuda herde of this rumoure, & they came soone out of the kinges Palace in to the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LORDE. “Then spake the prestes and the prophetes vnto the rulers & to all the people, these wordes: / This man is worthy to dye, for he hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye youre selues haue herde with youre eares.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto the rulers and to all the people: The LORDE hath sente me to preach agaynst this house & agaynst this cite all the wordes that ye haue herde. “Therefore amende youre wayes, and youre advysementes, and be obedient vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God: so shal the LORDE repēt of the plage, [¶] he had deuyd agaynst you. Now as for me: I am in youre hondes, do with me, as ye thinke expediēt and good. But this shall ye knowe: yf ye put me to death, ye shal make youre selues, this cite & all the inhabitours there of, [¶] giltye of innocent bloude. For this is of a treuth: that the LORDE hath sente me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in youre eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes: This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORDE oure God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp, & sayde thus vnto all the people: “Micheas the Morascite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Iuda, spake to all the people of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: “Sion shalbe plowed like a felde, Ierusalē shalbe an heape of stones, & the hill of the LORDES house shalbe turned to an hie wod. Dyd Ezechias [¶] kinge of Iuda & the people of Iuda put him to deeth for this? No verely, but rather feared [¶] LORDE, & made their praier vnto him. E he had deuysed agaynst them. Shulde we then do soch a shamefull dede agaynst oure soules? There was a prophet also, that preached stiffly in the name of the LORDE, called Vrias the sonne of Semeia of Cariathiarim: this mā preached also agaynst this cite & agaynst this lōde, accordinge to all as Ieremy saith. ^a Now when Ioachim the kinge with all the estates & prynces had herde his wordes, the kinge went aboute to slaye him. ^b When Vrias perceaued that, he was afraied, & fled, & departed in to Egipte.

Then Ioachim the kinge sent seruantes in to the lōde of Egipte, Namely: Elnathā the sonne of Achbor, & certayne men with him in to Egipte, which fetched Vrias out of Egipte, & brought him vnto kinge Ioachim that slewe him with the swearde, & cast his deed body in to y^c comō peoples graue. But Ahicam the sonne of Saphan helped Ieremy, that he came not in to the hondes of the people to be slayne.

The xxvij. Chapter.

IN the begynnynge of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda, came this worde vnto Ieremy from the LORDE, which spake thus vnto me: Make the bondes & chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, & sende thē to the kinge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge of Amōn, the kinge of Tirus, & to the kinge of Sidon: & that by the messaungers, which shal come to Ierusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and byd them saye vnto their masters: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel, speake thus vnto youre masters: 'I am he that made the earth, the men & y^c catell that are vpon the grounde, with my greate power & outstretched arme, & haue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. ^d And now will I deluyr all these londes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauant. The beestes also of the felde shal I geue him to do him seruyce. And all people shal serue him, & his sonne, and his childes children, vntil the tyme of the same lōde be come also: Yee many people & greate kinges shal serue him.

Morouer, that people & kingdom which wil not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that wil not put their neckes vnder y^c yock of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I viset with swearde, with hunger, with pestilence, vntill I haue consumed them in his hondes, saith the LORDE. ^e And therefore, folowe not youre prophetes, soythsayers, expounders of dreames, charmers & witches, which saye vnto you: ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon. For they preach you lies, to bringe you farre from youre londe, & that I might cast you out, & destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, & serue him, those I wil let remayne still in their owne lōde (saith the LORDE) & they shal occupie it, & dwell there in.

I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE: ^h Heare not the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, & saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDES house shall shortly be brought hither agayne from Babilon: For they prophecie lies vnto you. Heare them not, but serue the kinge of Babilon, y^c ye maye lyue. Wherefore will ye make this cite to be destroyed? But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be comyttyd vnto them, then let them praye the LORDE of hostes, that the remnaunt of the ornamentes (which are in the house of the LORDE, and remayne yet in the house of the kinge of Iuda and at Ierusalem) be not caried to Babilon also. For thus hath the LORDE of hostes spoken concernynge the pylers, the lauer, the seate and the residue of the ornamentes that yet remayne in this cite, which Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon toke not, when he caried awaye Iechonias

Yee thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, as touchinge the residue of the ornamentes of the LORDES house, of the kinge of Iudaes house, and of Ierusalem: ^b They shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there they shall remaine, vntil I vyset them, saith the LORDE. Then wil I bringe them hither agayne. ^c And this was done in the same yeare: euē in the begynnyng of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda.

The xxviiiij. Chapter.

BUT in the fourth yeare of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, in the fifth Moneth, It happened, that Hananias ^d sonne of Assur the prophet of Gabaon, spake to me in the house of the LORDE, in the presence of the prestes ^e and of all the people, and sayde: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I haue brokē the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yeare will ^f I bringe agayne in to this place, all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, ^g Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon caried awaye from this place vnto Babilon. Yee I wil bringe agayne Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim the kinge of Iuda himself, with all the presoners of Iuda, (^h y are caried vnto Babilon,) euē in to this place, saith ⁱ ^j LORDE, for I wil breake ^k y yock of the kinge of Babilō.

Then the prophet Jeremy gaue answer vnto that prophet Hananias, before the prestes and before all the people that were present in the house of the LORDE. And the prophet Jeremy sayde: ^l Amen, the LORDE do that, and graunte the thinge, which thou hast prophesied: that he maye bringe agayne all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, and restore all the presoners from Babilon in to this place. Neuertheles, herken thou also, what I will saye, that thou and all the people maye heare: The prophetes that were before vs in tymes past, which prophesied of warre, or trouble, or pestilence, ether of peace, vpon many nations and greate kingdomes, were proued by this (yf God had sende them in very dede) when the thinge came to passe, which that prophet tolde before.

^m And Hananias the prophet toke the chayne from the prophet Ieremias neck, and brake it: and with that sayde Hananias, that all the people might heare: Thus hath the LORDE spoken: Euen so will I breake the yock of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilō, from the neck of all nacions, yee and that within this two yeare. And so the prophet Jeremy wente his waye. C After now that Hananias the prophet had taken the chayne from the prophet Ieremias neck, and broken it: The worde of the LORDE came vnto the prophet Jeremy sayenge: Go, and tell Hananias these wordes: Thus saith the LORDE: Thou hast broken the chayne of wodd, but in steade of wodd, thou shalt make chaynes of yron. For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I wil put a yock of yron vpon the neck of all this people, that they maye serue Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, yee and so shal they do. And I wil geue him ⁿ y beestes in the felde. ^o Then sayde the prophet Jeremy vnto ^p y prophet Hananias: Heare me (I praye the) Hananias: The LORDE hath not sent the, but thou bringest this people in to a false beleue. And therefore thus saith ^q y LORDE: beholde, I wil sende the out of the lōde, and within a yeare thou shalt die, because thou hast falsely spokē agaynst the LORDE. So Hananias the prophet died the same yeare in the seuenth Moneth.

Laboure not to be fewe, but seke after peace & prosperite of the cite, where in ye be presoners, & praye vnto God for it. ^aFor in the peace there of, shal youre peace be.

^bFor thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Let not those prophetes and soythsaies ^cbe amonge you, disceaue you: & beleue not youre owne dreames. ^dFor why, they preach you lies in my name, & I haue not sent them, saith the LORDE. But thus saith the LORDE: When ye haue fulfilled lxx yeares at Babilon,^e I wil bringe you home, and of myne owne goodnes I will carie you hither agayne vnto this place. For I knowe, what I haue deuysed for you, saith the LORDE. My thoughtes are to geue you peace, & not trouble (which I geue you all redie) & that ye might haue hope agayne. ^fYe shall crie vnto me, ye shal go & call vpō me, & I shal heare you. ^gYe shal seke me, & fynde me: Yee, yf so be that ye seke me with youre whole herte, I will be founde of you (saith the LORDE) and will deluyder you out of preson, & gather you together agayne out of all places, where in I haue scatred you, saith the LORDE: and wil bringe you agayne to the same place, from whence I caused you to be caried awaye captiue.

But where as ye saye, that God hath raysed you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the kinge that sytteth in the stole of David, and all ^h people that dwell in this cite, ⁱyour brethren that are not gone with you in to captiuite.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil sende a swerde, hunger & pestilence vpon them,^j and wil make them like vntymely fyges, that maye not be eatē for byternes. And I wil persecute them with the swerde, with hunger & death.

I will deluyder them vp to be vexed of all kindgomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scorne, & put to confucion of all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred them: & that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saith the LORDE) which I sent vnto them by my seruantes the prophetes. ^kI stode vp early, and sent vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saith the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, all ye presoners, whom I sent from Ierusalē vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab ^lsonne of Colaas, & of Sedechias the sonne of Maasia, which prophecie lies vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil deluyder them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye slaye them before youre eyes. And all ^m presoners of Iuda that are in Babilon, shal take vpō them this terme of cursinge, and saye: Now God do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sedechias & Achab, whom the kinge of Babilon rosted in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their neighbours wyues, but also preached lyenge wordes in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This I testifie, & assure, saith the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehe-ⁿlamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at Ierusalem, & to Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest, yee and sent them to all the prestes: where in thou wrytest thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordered the to be prest in steade of Ioiaza the prest, that thou ^oshuldest be the chefe in the house of the LORDE aboute all prophetes, & preachers, & that thou mightest put them in preson, or in ^p stocks. How happeneth it then, that thou hast not reprobued Jeremy of Anathot, which neuer leaueth of his prophecience. And beside all this, he hath sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and tolde vs planely, that oure captiuite shal longe endure: that we shulde buylde vs houses to dwell therein, & to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes thereof. Which lettre Sophonias the prest dyd rede, and let Jeremy the prophet heare it.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Sende worde to all them that be in captiuite, on this maner: ^qThus hath the LORDE spoken concerninge

The xix. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE shewed vnto Ieremy, saienge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Wryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue spoken vnto the, in a booke. For lo, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I will bringe agayne the prisoners of my people of Israel and Iuda, saith the LORDE: For I will restore them vnto the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they shall haue it in possession.

Agayne, these wordes spake the LORDE, cōcernynge Israel and Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and disquietnesse. For what els doth this signifie, that I se? Namely, that all stronge men smyte, euery man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir trauayle. Who euer sawe a man trauayle with childe? Enquire therafter, & se. Yee all their faces are maruelous pale.

Alas for this daye, which is so dredefull, that none maye be lickened vnto it: and alas for the tyme of Iacobs trouble, from the which he shall yet be deliuered. For in that daye, saith the LORDE, I will take his yock from of thy neck, & breake thy bondes. They shall nomore serue straunge goddes vnder him, but they shall do seruyce vnto God their LORDE, and to Dauid their kinge, whom I will rayse vp vnto them. And as for the, o my seruaut Iacob, feare not (saith & LORDE) and be not afraied, o Israel. For lo, I will helpe the also from farre, & thy sede from the londe of their captiuyte.

And Iacob shall turne agayne, he shalbe in rest, and haue a prosperous life, and no man shall make him afraied. For I am with the, to helpe the, saith the LORDE. And though I shal destroye all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred the, yet will I not destroye the, but correcke the, and that with discrecion. For I knowe, that thou art in no wise without faute. Therefore thus saith & LORDE: I am sory for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to medle with thy cause, or to bynde vp thy woundes: there maye no man helpe the.

All thy louers haue forgotten the, and care nothinge for the. For I haue geuen the a cruell stroke, and chastened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy myszdedes, for thy synnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makest thou mone for thy harme? I my self haue pite of thy sorowe, but for the multitude of thy myszdedes and synnes, I haue done this vnto the.

And therefore all they that deuoure the, shalbe deuoured, and all thine enemies shal be led in to captiuyte. All they that make the waist, shalbe waisted them selues: and all those that robbe the, will I make also to be robbed. For I will geue the thy health agayne, and make thy woundes whole, saith the LORDE: because they reuyled the, as one cast awaye and despised, o Sion.

For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will set vp Iacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The cite shalbe buylded in hir olde estate, and the houses shal haue their right foundation. And out of them shall go thankesgeuyng, and the voyce of ioye.

I will multiplie them, and they shall not mynische: I shall endue them with honoure, and no man shall subdue them. Their children shalbe as afore tyme, and their congregacion shal cōtinue in my sight. And all those that vex the, will I viset.

A captayne also shall come of them, and a prynce shall springe out from the myddest of them: him will I chalenge to myself, and he shall come vnto me. For what is he, that geueth ouer his herte, to come vnto me? saith the LORDE. Ye shalbe my people also, and I wilbe youre God. Beholde, on the other syde shall the wrath of the LORDE breake out as a stormy water, as a mightie whyrle wynde: and shal fall vpon the heades of the vngodly.

The xxi. Chapter.

THUS saith the LORDE: The people of Israel which escaped in y^e wilderness from the swearde, ¹founde grace to come in to their rest. Euen so shal the LORDE now also apeare vnto me from farre, and saye: I loue the with an euerlasting loue, therefore do I sprede my mercy before the. ²I will repayne the agayne (o thou daughter of Israel) that thou mayest be fast and sure. Thou shalt take thy tabrettes agayne, & go forth with them, that lede the daunce.

Thou shalt plante vynes agayne vpon y^e hilles of Samaria, and the grape gatherers shall plante, and synge.

And when it is tyme, the watchmen vpon the mount of Ephraim shall crie: ³"Arise, let vs go vp vnto Sion to oure LORDE God, for thus saith the LORDE: Reioyce with gladnes because of Iacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye:
The LORDE shall deluyher his people, the remnaunt of Israel, & make them whole. Be-holde, I will bringe them agayne from out of the north lode, and gather them from the endes of the worlde, with the blynde and lame that are amonge them, with the women that be greate with childe, and soch as be also deluyered: and the company of them that come agayne, shal be greate.

They departed from hence in heuynes, but with ioye will I bringe them hither agayne.
I will lede them by the ryuers of water in a straight waye, where they shall not stamble:
For I will be Israels father, and Ephraim shalbe my firstborne.

Heare the wordes of the LORDE (o ye Gentiles) preach in the lles, that lie farre of, and saye: he that hath scatred Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORDE shall redeme Iacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shal come, & reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, & shall haue plenteousnes of goodes, which the LORDE shall geue them: Namely, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shalbe as a well watred garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

Then shal the mayde reioyce in the daunce, C yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shalbe satisfied with good thinges, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: ⁴"The voyce of heuynes, wepynge and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saith the LORDE: leaue of from wepynge and crienge, witholde thyne eyes from teares, for thy labour shalbe rewarded, saith the LORDE. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies:
Yee euen thy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saith the LORDE) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Morouer I herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye captiue) complayne on this maner: O LORDE, thou hast correcte me, ⁵and thy chastenyng haue I receaued, as an vntamed calfe. ⁶Conuerte thou me, and I shalbe con-uerted, for thou art my LORDE God. Yee as soone as thou turnest me, I shall refourme my self: and when I vnderstonde, I shall smyte vpon my thee. For verely I haue comitted shamefull thinges: O let my youth beare this reprove and confucion.

Vpon this complaynte, I thought thus by D
my self: 'is not Ephraim my deare sonne?
Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence the tyme that I first comened with him, I haue him euer in remembraunce: therefore my very herte dryueth me vnto him: gladly and louyngly will I haue mercy vpon him, saith the LORDE. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (o thou daughter of Israel,) turne agayne to these cities of thyne. How longe

For the LORDE will worke a new thyng vpon earth: A woman shall compasse a man.

For thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: It will come therto, that when I haue brought Iuda out of captiuyte, these wordes shalbe herde in \hat{y} londe and in his cities: "The LORDE, which is the fayre brydegrome of rightuousnesse, make the frute-full, o thou holy hill: And there shall dwell Iuda and all hir cities, the shepherdes and huszbonde men: For I shall fede the hongrie soule,^a and refresh all faynte hertes. When I herde this, I came agayne to my self, and mused, like as I had bene waked out of a swete slepe.

Beholde (saieth the LORDE) the dayes come, that I will sowe the house of Israel and the house of Iuda, with men and with catell. Yee it shall come therto,^c that like as I haue gone aboute in tymes past to rote them out, to scatre them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chastē them: Euen so will I also go diligently aboute, to buylde them vp agayne, and to plante them, saieth the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THESE wordes spake the LORDE vnto Jeremy, in the tenth yere of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, which was \hat{y} xviij yere of Nabuchodonosor, what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste layed sege vnto Ierusalem. But Jeremy the prophet laye bounde in \hat{y} court of the preson, which was in the kinge of Iudaes house: where Sedechias the kinge of Iuda caused him to be layed, because he had prophecied of this maner: "Thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will deluyer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shal take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, he shal not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shall speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shall loke another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there shall he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saith the LORDE. But yf thou takest in hōde to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prosper.

3 And Jeremy sayde: Thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Sellum thine Vncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme ¶ londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: ¶ for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the court of the preson, (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anathot in the countre of Ben Iamyn: for by heretage thou hast right to lowse it out for thy self, therefore redeme it. Then I preceaused, that this was the commaundement of the LORDE, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him there the moneye: euen seuen sylces, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the money vpon the waighes. So I toke the euydence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ouer) and I gaue the euydence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the euydence, and before all the Iewes that were therby in the courte of the preson.

I charged Baruch also before them, saienge: The LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel commaundeth the, to take this sealed euydence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vynyardes shalbe possessed agayne in this londe.

4 Now when I had deluyered the euydence vnto Baruch ¶ sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORDE, sayenge: ¶ O LORDE God, It is thou that hast made heauen and earth with thy greate power and hie arme, and there is nothinge to harde for ¶. Thou shewest mercy vpon thousandes, ¶ thou recompēcest the wickednes of the fathers, in to the bosome of the children that come after them.

Thou art the greate and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes: greate in counsell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children, ¶ to rewarde euery one after his waye, and accordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greate tokens and wonders in the londe of Egipte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon those men: to make thy name greate, as it is come to passe this daye: ¶ Thou hast brought thy people of Israel out of the londe of Egipte, with tokens, with wondres, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greate terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vnto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lōde, that floweth with mylke and honye.

¶ Now when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therefore come all these plages vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulworckes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swearde, with hunger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

For lo, all thinges are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (o LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe vnto my self, and take witnesses therto: and yet in the meane season the cite is deluyered in to the power of the Caldees.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therefore thus sayde the LORDE: beholde, I shal deluyer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to the power of Nabuchodonosor^e the kinge of Babilon, they shall take it in: For the Caldees shall come, and wyne this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burne it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlors they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offeringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath.

For seinge the children of Israel and the children of Iuda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth vp, what haue they els done, but prouoked me with the workes of their owne hondes? saith the LORDE.

Or, what hath this cite bene els, but a prouokinge of my wrath, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, vnto this houre? Wherin I cast it out of my sight, because of the greates blasphemies of the childrē of Israel and Iuda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yee they, their kinges, their prynces, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Iuda, and all the cite-syns of Ierusalem.

^a When I stode vp early, and taught them and instructe them, they turned their backes to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be reformed and correcte. They haue set their goddes in ^g house,^b that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded hie places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and daughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Iuda synne with soch abhominacion.

^z Morouer thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concernynge this cite, which (as ye youre selues confesse) shalbe deluyered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with honger and with pestilence. ^c Beholde, I will gather them together from all londes wherin I haue scatred them in my wrath, in my fearfull and greates displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vnto this place, where they shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.

^d And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prospere. ^e And I will set vp an euerlastinge couenaut with them, Namely: that I will neuer cease to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shall not runne awaye from me.

^f Yee I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saith the LORDE: like as I haue brought all this greates place vpon this people: so will I also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shall haue their possessions in this londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal nether be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered in to the hōdes of the Caldees: Yee londe shalbe bought for money, ^g euydēces made ther vpon ^h sealed before witnesses in the countre of Ben Iamin, ⁱ ^j rounde aboute Ierusalem: in the cities of Iuda, in the cities that are vpō the mountaynes, ^k in them that lie beneth, yee ^l in the cities that are in the deserte. For I will bringe their presoners hither agayne, saith the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

MOROUER the worde of the LORDE ^z came vnto Ieremy on this maner, whē he was yet bounde in the courte of the preson: Thus saith the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh, the LORDE which performeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herde the: I haue shewed greates and hie thinges, which were vnknowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concernynge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Iuda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and weapens, when the Caldees come to besege them: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcases of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and treuth.

^a And I will returne the captiuyte of Iuda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all mysdedes (wherin they haue offended agaynst me) I will clēse them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgeue them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shall heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yee they shall be afraied and astonied at all the good dedes and benefites, that I will do for them. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: ^a In this place, wherof ye saye that it shalbe a wilderness, wherin nether people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Iuda and without Ierusalem (which also shalbe so voyde, that nether people ner catell shall dwell there) Shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shall synge: (^b Praise the LORDE of hoostes, for he is louynge, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shall offre vp giftes in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saith the LORDE.

C Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. It shall come yet therto, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities vpon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

In the londe of Ben Iamin, in the feldes of Ierusalem, and in the cities of Iuda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that tellethe them, saith the LORDE. Beholde, ^c the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I wil perfourme that good thinge, which I haue promised vnto the house of Israel and to the house of Iuda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the braunch of rightuousnes, and he shall do equite and rightuousnesse in the londe. ^d In those daies shall Iuda be helped, and Ierusalem shall dwell safe, and he that shall call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: ^e Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of Israel: ^f nether shall the prestes and Leuites want one to offre all waye before me, burntofferings, to kyndle the meatofferings, and to prepare the sacrifices.

D And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy after this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: ^g Maye the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season? Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruauant, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. ^h So shall also the prestes and Leuites neuer fayle, but serue me. ⁱ For like as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the sonde of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruauant, and of the Leuites my ministers.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came to Ieremy, sainge: Cosidrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kynredes (saye they) had the LORDE chosen, and those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, ^j they haue no hope to come together eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Yf I haue made no couenaunt with daye and night, and geue no statute vnto heauen and earth: then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid my seruauant: so that I will take no prynce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abrahā, Isaac and Iacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuyte, and be mercifull vnto them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes which the LORDE ^a spake vnto Ieremy, ^b what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, and all his hoostes (out of all the kingdomes ^c were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Ierusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Go, and speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and tell him: ^d The LORDE sendeth the this worde: Beholde, I will delyuer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his hondes, but shalt be led awaye presoner, and delyuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE, ^e o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swerde, but shalt die in peace. Like as thy fore fathers, ^f the kinges, thy progenitours were brente: so shalt thou be brente also, and in the mournynge they shal saye: oh lorde. For thus haue I determed, saith the LORDE.

Then spake Ieremy the prophet all these ^g wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Ierusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste beseged Ierusalem, and the remnaunt of the cities: Namely, Lachis and Azecha, ^h which yet remayned of the stronge defended cities of Iuda.

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Ierusalem, that there shulde be proclaimed a liberte: ^a so that euery man shulde let fre go his seruauant and handmayde, Hebrue & Hebruesse, & no Iewe to holde his brother as a bonde man. Now as they had consented, euen so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But afterwarde they repented, & toke agayne the seruantes and handmaydens, whom they had letten go fre, and so made them bonde agayne.

C For the which cause the worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy from the LORDE himself, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: I made a couenaunt with youre fathers, when I brought them out of Egipte, (that they shulde no more be bondmen,) sayenge: ^b When seuen yeares are out, euery man shal let go fre his bought seruauante an Hebrue, yf he haue serued him sixe yeares. But youre fathers obeyed me not & herkened not vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in ^y ye proclaimed, euery mā to let his neghbour go fre, & in ^y ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that beareth my name: But yet ye haue turned youre selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, ^y euery man hath requyred his seruauant and hand mayden agayne, whom ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be youre bonde men. And therefore thus saith the LORDE: Ye haue not obeyed me, euery man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neghbour: wherfore, I will call you vnto a fredome, saith the LORDE: euen vnto the swearde, to the pestilence, and to honger, and will make you to be plaged in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Yee those men that haue brokē my couenaunt, and not kepte the wordes of the apoyntmēt, which they made before me: ^c when they hewed the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halfes therof: The prynces of Iuda, the prynces of Ierusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the londe (which wete thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the hondes of them that folowe vpon their lyues.

^d And their deed bodies shall be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda & his prynces, I will deluyer them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that desyre to slaye them, and in to the honde of the kyng of Babylons hooste, ^e which now is departed from you: But thorow my commaundement (saith the LORDE) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shall fight agaynst it, wyne it, and burne it. Morouer I will laye the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shall dwell therein.

The xxxv. Chapter.

THE wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy, (in the reigne of Iochim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda) are these: Go vnto ^y house of the Rechabites, & call them out, & bringe thē to ^y house of the LORDE in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I Iasania the sonne of Ieremy, the sonne of Habazania, and his brethre and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORDE, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igdalia the man off God: which was by the closet off the prynces, that is aboute the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the chefe off the treasury. And before the sonnes of the kynred of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, For Ionadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and youre sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne, ^f buylde no houses, sowe no sede, plante no vynes, yee ye shall haue no vynyards: but for all youre tyme ye shall dwell in tētes, ^y ye maye lyue lōge in the lōde, wherin ye be straūgers.

B Thus haue we obeyed the cōmaundemēt of Ionadab ^y sonne of Rechab oure father, in all ^y he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, oure sonnes & oure daughters. Nether buylde we eny house to dwell therein, we haue also amonge vs nether vynyards, ner corne lōde to sowe : but we dwell in tentes, we obeye, & do acordinge vnto all, that Ionadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now [¶] Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilō came vp in to the lōde, we sayde : come, let vs go to Ierusalē, [¶] we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees ad the Assiriās : & so we dwell now at Ierusalē. Then came [¶] worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayenge : Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : Go & tell whole Iuda & all the inhabitours of Ierusalē : Wyll ye not be reformed, to obeye my wordes ? saith the LORDE. The wordes which Ionadab the sonne off Rechab cōmaunded his sonnes, [¶] they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast & surely kepte : for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne : but obeye their fathers cōmaundement.

But as for me,^a I haue stōde vp early, I haue spokē vnto you, & geuen you earnest warnynge : & yet haue ye not bene obediēt vnto me. Yee I haue sent my seruauētes, all the prophetes vnto you, I rose vp early, & sent you worde, sayenge : O turne you, euery man from his wicked waye : amēde youre lyues, & go not after straūge goddes, to worshippe the : [¶] ye maye cōtinue in the lōde, which I haue geuen vnto you and youre fathers, but ye wolde nether heare me, ner folowe me.

The childrē of Ionadab Rachabs sonne haue stedfastly kepte their fathers cōmaūdemēt, [¶] he gaue them, but this people is not obedient vnto me. And therfore thus saith the LORDE of hostes [¶] God of Israel : Beholde, I wil bringe vpō Iuda & vpō euery one [¶] dwelleth in Ierusalē, all the trouble [¶] I haue deuyed agaynst thē. ^b For I haue spokē vnto thē, but they wolde not folowe : I haue called vnto them, neuertheles they wolde geue me no answer. Ieremy also spake vnto the housholde off the Rechabites : Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : For so moch as ye haue obeyed [¶] cōmaundemēt of Ionadab youre father, & kepte all his preceptes, & done acordinge vnto all [¶] he hath bydden you : Therfore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : Ionadab the sonne of Rechab shal not fayle, but haue one out of his stocke, to stōde allwaye before me.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

IN the fourth yere of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kyng of Iuda, came [¶] worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayēge : Take a boke, & ^c write therein all [¶] wordes, [¶] I haue spokē to the, to Israel, to Iuda & to all the people, frō the tyme [¶] I begāne for to speake vnto the (in [¶] reigne of Iosias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Iuda heareth of the plage, which I haue deuyed for thē, they maye peraduenture turne, [¶] euery man frō his wicked waye, that I maye forgeue their offences and synnes.

Then dyd Ieremy call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, & Baruch wrote in the boke at [¶] mouth of Ieremy, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had spoken vnto him. And Ieremy commaunded Baruch sayenge : I am in prison, so that I maye not come in to the house of [¶] LORDE : therfore go thou thither, & rede the boke, that thou hast writtē at my mouth : Namely, the wordes off the LORDE, & rede thē in the LORDES house vpon the fastinge daye : that the people, whole Iuda, & all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peraduenture they will praye mekely before the face of the LORDE, and turne, euery one from his wicked waye. For greate is the wrath and displeasure, that the LORDE hath taken agaynst this people.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, acordinge vnto all that Ieremy the prophet cōmaūded him, readinge the wordes off the LORDE out off the boke in the LORDES house. And this was done in the fyfth yere off Ioachim [¶] sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, in the ix. moneth ^e when it was commaunded, that all the people of Ierusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Iuda vnto Ierusalem.

Then red Baruch the wordes of Ieremy out of the boke within the house of the LORDE, out of [¶] treasury of ^a Gamarias the sonne off Saphan the scribe, which is besyde the hyer loftte off the new dore of the LORDES house : that all [¶] people might heare. Now whē Micheas the sonne of Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of [¶] boke, he wēt downe to the kinges palace in to [¶] scribes chābre, for there all þy prynces were set: Elisama the scribe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnathā the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Hananias, with all the princes. And Micheas tolde them all the wordes, þy he herde Baruch rede out of the boke before the people.

Then all the prynces sent Iehudi þy sonne of Nathanias the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the boke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Baruch the sonne of Nerias toke þy boke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Syt downe, and rede the boke, þy we maye heare also. So Baruch red, þy they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abaszhed one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how didest thou wryte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the boke.

Then sayde the prynces vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Ieremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they keppe the boke in the chambre off Elisama the scribe, ad tolde the kyng the wordes, that he might heare. So the kyng sent Iehudi to fetch him þy boke, which he brought out of Elisama þy scribes chambre. And Iehudi red it, that the kyng and all the prynces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kyng sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Iehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof, he cut the boke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpon the herth, vntil the boke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Yet no man was abashed therof, or rente his clothes: nether the kyng himselfe, ner his seruauntes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias ad Gamarias, besougte the kinge, that he wolde not burne the boke: notwithstandinge þy kyng wolde not heare them, but commaunded Ieremyhel the sonne off Amalech, Sarias the sonne of Esriel and Selamia þy sonne of Abdiel, to laye hondes vpon Baruch the scribe, and vpon Ieremy the prophet: but the LORDE keppe them out of sight. After now that the kyng had brente the boke, ad þy sermons which Baruch wrote at þy mouth off Ieremy: The worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy sayenge: Take another boke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first boke, which Ioachim the kyng off Iuda hath brente.

And tell Ioachim the kyng off Iuda, Thus saith the LORDE: thou hast brente þy boke, and thoughtest within thy self: Why hast thou written therin, that the kyng off Babilon shal come, and make this lōde waist? so that he shal make both people and catel to be out of it? Therefore thus the LORDE saith of Ioachim the kyng of Iuda: There shal none of his generacion syt vpon the trone of Dauid. His deed corse shalbe cast out, that the heat off the daye, and the frost of the night maye come vpon him: And I will vyset the wickednes of him, of his sede, and of his seruauentes. Morouer all the euell that I haue promised the (though they herde me not) will I bringe vpon them, vpon þy inhabitours of Ierusalem, and vpon all Iuda. Then toke Ieremy another boke, and gaue it Baruch the scribe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therin out of the mouth off Ieremy: all the sermons that were in the first boke, which Ioachim the kyng off Iuda dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

SEDECHIAS þy sonne of Iosias (which was made kyng thorow Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon) reigned in the lōde off Iuda, in the steade off Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim. But nether he, ner his seruauentes, ner the people in the lōde wolde obeye the wordes of þy LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Ieremy. Neuertheles Sedechias the kyng sent Iuchal the sonne of Selamia and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest to the prophet Ieremy, sayenge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Ieremy walked fre amonge the people at that tyme, and was not put in preson as yet. Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egype: which when the Caldees that beseged Ierusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy the prophet, sayēge: Thus saieih ſ LORDE God of Israel, This answere shal ye geue to the kynge of Iuda, that sent you vnto me for counsell: "Beholde, Pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shall returne to Egipte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shall come agayne, & fight agaynst this cite, wyne it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saieih the LORDE: disceauē not youre owne myndes, thinkynge on this maner: Tush, the Caldees go now their waye from vs: No, they shall not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees that besege you, and euery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whē the hooste of the Caldees was brokē vp from Ierusalē for feare of the Egipcians armye, Ieremy went out of Ierusalē towardē the lōde of Ben Iamin, to do certayne busynesse there amōge ſ people. And whē he came vnder Ben Iamyns Porte, there was a porter called Ierias the sonne of Selamiah^a ſ zōne of Hananias, which fell vpō him & toke him, sayēge: thy mynde is to runne to the Caldees. Then sayde Ieremy: It is not so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Ierias wolde not beleue him, but brought Ieremy boūde before the princes. Wherefore the princes were angrie with Ieremy, causinge him to be beaten, & to be layed in preson in the house of Ionathas the scribe. For he was the ruler of the preson. Thus was Ieremy put in to the dongeon & preson, and so laye there a longe tyme. "Then Sedechias the kynge sent for him, & called him, & axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynesse (that now is in honde) cōmeth of the LORDE? Ieremy answerde: yee ſ it doth: & thou (sayde he) shalt be deluyered in to the kynge of Babilons power.

Morouer, Ieremy sayde vnto kynge Sedechias: What haue I offended agaynst ſ, agaynst thy seruantes, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me to be put in preson? "Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophced vnto you and sayde, that ſ kynge of Babilō shulde not come agaynst you & this lōde? And therefore heare now, o my lorde the kynge: let my prayer be accepte before the, & sende me nomore in to ſ house of Ionathas the scribe, that I dye not there. Then Sedechias the kynge commaunded to put Ieremy in the fore entrie off the preson, and dayly to be geuen him a cake of bred, and els no dighte meate, vntill all the bred in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Ieremy remayned in ſ fore entrie off the preson.

SAPHATIAS the sonne off Mathā, Gedolia the sonne of Pashur, Iuchal the sonne of Selamiah, & Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, ſ Ieremy had spokē vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saieih the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shall perish, ether with the swearde, with hunger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Caldees, shal escape, wyunnyng his soule for a pray, & shal lyue. For thus saieih the LORDE: This cite (no doute) must be deluyered in to ſ power of the kīge of Babilō, & he also shal wyne it. Thē sayde the prynces vnto ſ kynge: Syr, we besech you let this man be put to death, For thus he discourageth the hōdes of the soudyers ſ be in this cite, & the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh soch wordes vnto thē. This mā verely laboureth not for peace of ſ people, but mischefe. Sedechias the kīge answered and sayde: lo, he is in youre hōdes, for ſ kīge maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Ieremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entrie off the preson. And they let downe Ieremy with coardes in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Ieremy stack fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Morian beyngē a chamberlayne in the kynges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast Ieremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynges house, and spake to the kynge (which thē sat vnder the porte off Ben Iamin) these wordes: My lorde the kynge, where as these men medle with Ieremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in preson, there to dye of hunger, for there is no more bred in the cite. Thē the kynge commaūded Abdemelech the Morian, and sayde: Take from hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, & drawe vp Jeremy the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdemelech toke the men with him, & went to the house of Amalech, & there vnder an almery he gat olde ragges & worne cloutes, & let the downe by a coarde, in to the dongeon to Jeremy.

And Abdemelech the Morian sayde vnto the prophet Jeremy: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte the and the coardes: ad Jeremy dyd so. So they drewe vp Jeremy with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and he remayned in the fore entrie of the preson. The Sedechias the kynge sent and caused Jeremy the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the LORDE.^a And the kynge sayde vnto Jeremy: I wil axe the somwhat, but hyde nothinge fro me. The Jeremy answerde Sedechias: Yf I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffice death: yf I geue the coucell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kynge swore an ooth secretly vnto Jeremy, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto Sedechias: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Yf case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kynge off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, and this cite shall not be brēt, yee both thou and thy housholde shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kynge off Babilons prynces, then shalt this cite be deliyuered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shal set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Jeremy: I am afrayde for the Iewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Jeremy answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: O herken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseke the) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this planely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kynge of Iudaes house, shal go out to the kynge of Babilons prynces. For they thinke, the thou art disceaused: and that the men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy fete fast in the myre, and gone their waye from the. Therefore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be the kynge of Babilons presoner, & this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Jeremy: loke the no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceauē, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what sayde the kynge to the? hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what sayde the kynge to the? Se thou geue them this answer: I haue humbly besought the kynge, that he will let me lye no more in Ionathas house, that I dye not there? Then came all the princes vnto Jeremy, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kynge bad him.^c Then they helde their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So Jeremy abode still in the fore entrie off the preson, vntill the daye that Ierusalem was wonne.

The xxxix. Chapter.

NOW when the cite off Ierusalē was taken^d (for in the ix. yere of Sedechias kynge of Iuda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Ierusalem. And in the xi. yere of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth the ix. daye of the Moneth, he brake in to the cite). Then all the kynge of Babilons prynces came in, & sat the downe vnder the porte: Nergall, Sarezzer, Samgarnebo, Sarsechim, Rabsaris, Nergal, Sarezzer, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kynge of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kynge of Iuda with his soudyers sawe them, they fled, and departed out of the cite by night thorow the kynges gardē, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wilderness.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Iericho, and brought him presoner to Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō vnto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iudgment vpon him. So the kynge of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Iuda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and boude him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Morouer, the Caldees brēt vp the kynges palace, with [¶] other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Ierusalem. As for the remnaunt of the people that were in the cite, and such as were come to helpe them (what so euer was left of the comē sorte) Nabuzaradan the chefe captayne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge) dwell still in the lōde off Iuda, and gaue them vynyardes and corne feldes at the same tyme. Nabuchodonosor also the kyng of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne a charge, cōcernynge Ieremy, sayenge: take and cherish him, and make moch off him: se thou do him no harme, but in-treate him after his owne desyre.

^c So Nabuzaradā [¶] chefe captayne, Nabuzaszbā the chefe chamberlayne, Nergalsarezor the treasurer and all the kyng of Babilons lordes, ^b sent for Ieremy, and caused him be fet out off the fore entrie off the preson, and committed him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam the sonne of Saphan: that he shulde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. ^a Now whyle Ieremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie of the preson, [¶] worde off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Morian: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes [¶] God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plage that I haue deuysed for this cite, will I brynge vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil delyuer the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the hondes off those men, whom thou fearest. For doutles I will saue the, so that thou shalt not perish with the swearde: but thy life shalbe saued, and that because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORDE.

The xl. Chapter.

^a THIS is the maner, how the LORDE in-treated Ieremy, when Nebuzaradan the ^a chefe captayne had let him go fre from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the presoners, that were caried from Ierusalem and Iuda vnto Babilon. The chefe captayne called for Ieremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spake mightely before off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and performed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therefore commeth this plage vpon you. Beholde, I lowse the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vp thē: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: ^a loke where thou thinkest conueniēt and good for the to Abyde, there dwell. Yf thou canst not be content to dwell alone, then remayne with Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, ^f whom the kyng of Babilō hath made gouernoure ouer [¶] cities of Iuda, and dwell with him amonge the people, or remayne, where so euer it pleaseth [¶]. So the chefe captayne gaue him his expēs with a rewarde, and let him go. ^e Then wēt Ieremy vnto Godolias [¶] sonne of Ahicā to Masphat, and dwelt there with him amonge the people that were left in the londe.

Now when [¶] captaynes of the hooste of Iuda (which with their felowes were scatred abrode on euery syde in [¶] lōde) vnderstode, [¶] the kyng of Babilō had made Godolias [¶] sonne of Ahicā gouernoure in the lōde, and [¶] man, wife and childe, yee and the poore men in the londē ([¶] were not led captiue to Babilon) shulde be vnder his Iurisdiction: They came to Godolias vnto Masphat: Namely, Ismael the sonne of Nathanias, Iohāna and Ionathas the sonnes of Carea, Sareas the sonne of Tanhomet, the sonnes of Opheus [¶] Netophetite, Iesania [¶] sonne of Machati, with their cōpanyons. And Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne off Saphā, swore vnto thē and their felowes on this maner: ^a Be not afraied to serue the Caldees, dwell in the lōde, and do the kyng of Babilon seruyce, so shal ye prospere. Beholde, I dwell at Masphat to be an officer in the Caldees behalfe, and to satisfie such as come to vs. Therefore gather you wyne, come and oyle, and kepe them in youre ware houses, and dwell in youre cities, that ye haue in kepyng.

Yee all the Iewes also [¶] dwelt in Moab vnder [¶] Ammonites, in Idumea and in all [¶] cōtrees, whē they herde, ⁊ the kinge of Babilō had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, gouernoure vpō thē ⁊ were left in Iuda: All the Iewes (I saye) returned out off all places where they were fled vnto: ⁊ came in to the lōde of Iuda to Godolias vnto Masphat, ⁊ gathered wyne and other frutes, and that very much.

D Morouer Iohanna the sonne of Carea ⁊ all ⁊ captaynes of ⁊ hooste, ⁊ were scatred on euery syde in the londe, came to Godolias in Masphat, ⁊ sayde vnto him: knowest thou not ⁊ Baalis kinge of ⁊ Ammonites hath sent Ismael ⁊ sonne of Nathania, to slaye the? But Godolias ⁊ sonne of Ahicā beleued thē not. Thē sayde Iohāna the sonne of Carea vnto Godolias in Masphat these wordes secretly: Let me go (I praye the) ⁊ I will slaye Ismael the sonne of Nathania, so ⁊ no body shal knowe it. Wherefore will he kyll the, ⁊ all the Iewes which resorte vnto the, might be scatred, ⁊ the remnaunt in Iuda perishe? Thē sayde Godolias the sonne of Ahicam to Iohanna the sonne of Carea: Thou shalt not do it, for they are but lies, that men saye of Ismael.

The xli. Chapter.

BUT in the seuenth Moneth it happened, ⁊ Ismael the sonne of Nathania ⁊ sonne of Elisama (one of ⁊ kynges bloude) came with thē that were greatest aboute the kyng, ⁊ ten men that were sworne with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam to Masphat, and eate there together. And Ismael ⁊ sonne of Nathania with those ten men that were sworne to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne of Saphan with the sward, ⁊ slewe hym, whom the kyng off Babilō had made gouernoure off the londe. Ismael also slewe all the Iewes that were with Godolias at Masphat, and all the Caldees that he founde there waitynge vpon him.

B The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vnknowne) there came certayne men from Sichem, frō Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shauen their beerdes, rent their clothes, ⁊ were all heuye, bringinge meat offringes and incense in their handes, to offere it in the house off the LORDE. And Ismael the sonne of Nathania went forth of Masphat wepinge, to mete them. Now whē he met them, he sayde: Go youre waye to Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Ismael the sonne off Nathania (with them that were sworne vnto him) slewe them, euē at the myddest off the pyt. Amonge these lxxx. mē there were ten, ⁊ sayde vnto Ismael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greate treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared thē, and slewe them not with their brethren. Now the pyt wherin Ismael dyd cast the deed bodies off the mē (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kynged Asa caused to be made, ^b for feare off Baasa the kyng off Israel, and the same pit dyd Ismael fyll with slayne men. As for the rēnaunt off the people, the kynges daughters and all the people that were yet left at Masphat, ^c vpon whom Nabusaradan the chefe Captayne had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicam gouernoure: Ismael the sonne off Nathania caried them awaye presoners towarde the Ammonites. But when Iohāna the sonne off Carea and all they which had bene captaynes ouer the kynges hooste with him, ^d herde of all the wickednes that Ismael the sonne off Nathania had done: they toke their companyons, and wente out for to fight with Ismael the sōne of Nathania, and founde him by the waters of Rabim in Gabaon. Now when all the people, whom Ismael led captyue, sawe Iohāna ⁊ sonne off Carea and all the other captaynes off the hooste, they were glad. So all the people that Ismael had caried awaye frō Masphat, were brought agayne.

And whē they returned, they came to Iohanna the sonne off Carea. But Ismael the sonne off Nathania fled from Iohāna with eight of his sworne companyons, ⁊ wente to the Ammonites. Then Iohanna the sonne of Carea and all the captaynes of the hooste that were with him, toke the remnaūt of the people, whom Ismael the sonne of Nathania had led awaye (When he had slayne Godolias the sonne of Ahicā) whom they also had rescued from him: fightinge men, women ⁊ children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and wente from thence, and sat them downe at Geruth Chimham, which lieth besyde Bethleē, that they might go in to Egipte for feare of the Caldees: of whom they were afrayed, because that Ismael the sonne off Nathanias had slayne Godolias Ahicams sonne, whom the kynge off Babilon had ^amade gouernoure in the londe.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO all the rulers, and Iohāna the sonne off Carea, Iesaias the sonne off Osias came with all the people frō the leest vnto the most, & sayde vnto Ieremy the prophet: 'O heare oure peticiō, that thou mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE thy God, and for the remnaunt, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, & tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Ieremy the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Beholde, I will praye vnto God youre LORDE, as ye haue requyred me: and loke what answers the LORDE geueth you, I shall certifie you theroff, and kepe nothinge back frō you. ^aAnd they sayde vnto Ieremy: The LORDE off treuth & faithfulness be oure recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commandeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We will herken vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende the: that we maye prospere, when we haue folowed the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Ieremy. Then called he Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the people that were with him: Yee & all the people from the leest to the most, & sayde vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto whom ye sent me, to laye forth youre prayers before him: Yf ye wil dwell in this londe, I shall buylde you vp, & not breake you downe: I shall plante you, & not rote you out: for I am pacified, as cōcernynge the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kynge off Babilon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saith the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and deluyer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I wil haue mercy vpon you, and brynge you agayne in to youre owne londe.

Neuertheles, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE youre God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egipte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre hunger, there will we dwell. Wherfore heare now the worde of the LORDE, o ye remnaunt of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: 'Yf ye be whole purposed to go in to Egipte, ād to be there as straügers: 'the swearde that ye feare, shall ouer take you in Egipte: and the hunger wheroff ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you in to Egipte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off set purpose vndertake to go in to Egipte, there to ease them selues off their misery, shall perish with the swearde, with hunger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, there shal none escape the plage, that I wil bringe vpon them.

For thus saith the LORDE off hostes the God off Israel: like as my wrath and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitours of Ierusalē, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egipte: For there ye shalbe reuyled, abhorred, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbyddeth you (o ye remnaūt of Iuda) that ye shall not go in to Egipte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye els shal ye begyle youre selues. For ye sent me vnto the LORDE youre God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and loke what answer the LORDE oure God geueth the, that bringe vs agayne, ād we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE youre God, for the which cause he hath sent me to you. ^bYf ye will not folowe it, be sure, yf ye shall perishe with the swearde, with hunger & pestilence: euen in the same place, where youre lust was to go, and dwell.

The xliij. Chapter.

there: But Baruch the sonne of Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs, that he might bringe vs in to the captyute off the Caldees: that they might slaye vs, and carie vs awaye prisoners vnto Babilon

So Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the hooste, and all the people folowed not the commaundement of the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Iuda: But Iohanna the sonne of Carea ⁊ all the captaynes of the hooste, caried awaye all the remnaunt in Iuda, that were come together agayne from the Heithen (amōge whom they had bene scatred)* to dwell in the londe off Iuda: Men, women, childrē, the kynges dough- ters: all those that Nabusaradan the chefe captayne had left with Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. They caried awaye also the prophet Jeremy, Baruch the sonne of Nerias, and so came in to Egipte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement of God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

B And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Ieremy, sayenge: Take greate stones in thine hōde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the dore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men of Iuda maye se, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: ^a Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon my seruauant, and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall sprede his tente ouer them.

And when he commeth, he shal smyte the lōde of Egipte with slaughter, with presonment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples of the Egipcians goddes, and burne them vp, ⁊ take them selues presoners. Morouer he shall araye himself with the lōde of Egipte, like as a shepherde putteth on his cote, and shall departe awaye from thence in peace. The pilers also of the temple of the Sonne that is in Egipte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the tempels of the Egipcians goddes.

The xliiij. Chapter.

A ^a THIS is the worde ^ȳ was shewed to Ieremy cōcerninge all ^ȳ Iewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Taphnis, at Memphis, ⁊ in the londe of Patures. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Ye haue sene all ^ȳ mysery, ^ȳ I haue brought vpon Ierusalem, and vpon all the cities of Iuda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwellinge therein: ⁊ ^ȳ because of the greate blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger: In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ād worshippe vnto straunge goddes: whom neither they, ner ye, ner youre fathers haue knowne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruauētes all the prophetes: ^a I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no soch abhominable thinges, ⁊ thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner herkē, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherefore my indignacion ⁊ wrath was kyn- dled, and it brente vp the cities of Iuda, the feldes with the stretes off Ierusalem: so that they were made waist and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greate euell vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and women, childrē and babes of Iuda? so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the workes of youre owne hondes: whē ye offre vnto straunge goddes in the londe off Egipte, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might vterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all nacions. Or, haue ye now forgotten the wickednes off youre forefathers, the wickednes off ^ȳ kynges of Iuda and their wyues, ^ȳ wickednes that ye youre selues ād youre wyues haue done in the londe of Iuda, in the cite and in the londe off Ierusalem?

Yet are ye not sory this daye, ye feare not, nether walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue geuē vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therfore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God off Israel: ^a I am stedfastly advyced and determed, to punysh you, and to rote out all Iuda. ^a As for the remnaunt off Iuda that purposly wente in to Egipte, there to ease them off their mysery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In ^ȳ londe of Egipte shall they perishe, beyng consumed with the swearde and with hunger. For from ^ȳ leest vnto ^ȳ most, they shal perishe with the swearde and with honger. Morouer they shalbe reuyled, abhorred, shamed, and confounded. For I will viset them that dwell in Egipte,^a as I haue visited Ierusalem: with the swearde, with honger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnaunt off Iuda, which are gone to dwell in Egipte, shall be left to come agayne in to y^e londe off Iuda: all though they thynte to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shal come agayne, but such as are fled awaye.

C Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, & a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, yee and all the people that dwelt there in Egipte in the cite of Patures, answerde Jeremy, & sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, we will in no wyse heare them: but what so euer goeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblations vnto the Quene off heauen: ^blike as we and oure forefathers, oure kynges and oure heades haue done in the cities off Iuda, and in the stretes and feldes of Ierusalem. For then had we plenteousnesse off vytales, then were we in prosperite, and no mysfortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene of heauen, we haue had scarcenes of all thinges, and perish with the swearde and honger. Last of all, when we womē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene of heauē, did we make her cakes and poure vnto her drinckofferings, to do her seruyce, without oure huszbondes wylls?

D Then sayde Ieremy vnto all the people, to the men, to the women and to all the folke, which had geuen him that answer: Dyd not the LORDE remembre the sacrifices that ye, youre forefathers,^c youre kiges & rulers (with all the people) haue offred in the cities of Iuda, in the stretes and londe off Ierusalem? and hath he not considered this in his mynde? In so moch, that the LORDE might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inuencions, and the abhominable thynges which ye dyd? ^dIs not youre londe desolate & voyde, yee and abhorred, so that no mā dwelleth therein any more, as it is come to passe this daye?

Dyd not all this happen vnto you, because ye made soch sacrifice, and synned agaynst the LORDE? Ye haue not folowed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.^e

Yee this is the cause, that all mysfortune happened vnto you, as it is come to passe this daye.

Morouer, Ieremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORDE all Iuda, ye that be in the londe off Egipte: Thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye and youre wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in dede.

Yee thus haue ye sayde: ^fWe will not fayle, E but do the thyng that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynckofferings to the Quene of heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, & hastily haue ye fulfilled youre owne intente. And therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE all Iuda, ye that dwell in the londe off Egipte.

Beholde, ^gI haue sworne by my greate name (saieth the LORDE) that my name shal not be rehearsed thorow eny mans mouth of Iuda, in all the londe of Egipte: to saye: The LORDE God lyueth, for I wil watch, to plague them, and not for their wealth. And all the men of Iuda that be in the lode of Egipte, ^hshal perish with the swearde and with hōger, vntill they be vtterly destroyed.

Neuertheles, those that fled awaye for y^e swearde, shal come agayne in to the lode of Iuda (but there shal be very fewe of them) And all the remnaunt off Iuda, that are gone in to Egipte, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shalbe founde true: theirs or myne. Take this for a token, that I wil viset you in this place (saieth the LORDE) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil perforce my purpose vpon you, to punysh you. Beholde (saieth the LORDE) I wil deluyuer Pharaō Ophram kyng of Egipte in to the hondes of his enemies, y^e seke after his life: euen as I gaue Sedechias the kyng of Iuda ⁱin to the hondes of Nabuchodonosor kige of Babilō, which sought after his life.

of Nerias, "after that he had written these Sermōs in to a boke at the mouth of Jeremy, In the fourth yere of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda.

Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto the, O Baruch: In so moch as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORDE hath geuen me payne for my trauayle: I haue weered my self with sighinge, and shall I fynde no rest? Therefore tell him (O Jeremy) ³ the LORDE saith thus: Beholde, The thige that I haue buylded, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole londe. And sekest thou yet promociō? Loke not for it, and desyre it not. For I will bringe a miserable plage vpō all flesh, saith the LORDE. ⁴ But thy life will I geue the for a pray, where so euer thou goest.

The xlii. Chapter.

² HERE folowe the wordes off the LORDE vnto the prophet Jeremy, which he spake vnto the Gentiles. "These wordes folowinge preached he to the Egipcias concernyng the hoost off Pharaο Necho kynge off Egipte, when he was in Charcanis besyde the water off Euphrates: what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon slewe him, In the fourth yere off Ioachim the sonne off Iosias kynge off Iuda.

"Ye make redy buckler and shyldes, ye go forth to fight: Yee harnessse youre horses, & set youre selues vpon them: Ye set youre saletes fast on, ye bringe forth speares, ye scourre youre sweardes, & put on youre brest plates.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so afraied? why shrēcke ye backe? wherefore are youre worthies slayne? Yee thei runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon euerychone off them, saith the LORDE. The lightest off fote shall not fle awaye, and the worthies shall not escape.

³ Towarde the north by the water of Euphrates they shall stomble and fall. But what is he this, that swelleth vp, as it were a floude, roaringe & raginge like the streames off water? It is Egipte that ryseth vp like the floude, and casteth out the waters with so greate noyse.

For they saye: We will go vp; and will couer the earth: we wil destroye ⁵ cities, with them that dwell therein. Get you to horse backe, roll forth ⁶ Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Morians, ye Libeans with youre buclers, ye Lideans with youre bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORDE God of hoostes, a daye of vēgeaunce, that he maye avenge him of his enemies. The swearde shal deuoure, it shal be satisfied and bated in their bloude: For the LORDE God off hoostes shall haue a slayneoffringe towarde the North, by the water of Euphrates. Go vp (o Galaad) & bringe triacle vnto the doughter off Egipte:

But in vayne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The Heithen shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shalbe full of thy confucion: for one stronge man shall stomble vpon another, how then shulde they not fall both together?

These are the wordes that the LORDE ⁷ spake to the prophet Jeremy, "concernyng ⁸ the hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon, which was to destroye the londe off Egipte: Preach out thorow the londe of Egipte, and cause it be proclaimed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Stonde still, make the redie, for the swearde shal consume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie worthies are fallen? why stode they not fast? Euen because the LORDE thrust them downe. The slaughter was greate, for one fell euer still vpon another. One cried vpon another: Vp, let vs go agayne to oure owne people, and to oure owne naturall countre, from the swearde of oure enimie.

Crie euen there: O Pharaο kynge of Egipte, the tyme will bringe sedicion. "As truly as I lyue (saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) it shall come as ⁹ I mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it stode in the see. O thou daughter of Egipte, make redy thy geer to flyt. For Memphis shalbe voyde and desolate, so that nomā shal dwell therein. ¹⁰ The londe of Egipte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forward. Hir wagied souldyers that be with her, are like fat calves.

They also shall fle awaye together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and the tyme of their visitacion shall come vpon them.

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come with axes, as it were hewers downe of wod. And they shall cut downe hir wod (saith the LORDE) with out eny discrecion. For they shall be mo in nôbre then the greshoppers, so that no man shalbe able to tell thē. The daughter of Egipte shalbe confounded, whē she shalbe deluyered in to the hondes off the people off the north.

¶ Morouer thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vyset that restlesse people off Alexandria, Pharaο and Egipte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharaο, and all them y^e litten vnto him. "Yee I will deluyer them in to the hondes off those, that seke after their lyues: Namely, in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon, and in to the power off his seruaites. "And after all these thinges, it shalbe inhabited as afore tyme, saith the LORDE.

"But be not thou afayed (o my seruauent Iacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For lo, I will helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuyte. Iacob also shall come agayne, and be in rest: he shall be rich, and no man shall do him harme. "Feare thou not (o Iacob my seruauent) saith the LORDE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatred the. Neuertheles I will not consume the, but chasten the and correcke the: yee and that with discrecion: nether wil I spare the, as one that were faultlesse.

The xliiij. Chapter.

¶ THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet agaynst the Phylistines, before that Pharaο smote the cite off Gaza. Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greate floude, runnyng ouer and coueryng the londe, the cities and them that dwell therein.

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noyse and stampyng off their stronge barded horses, at the shakynge off their charettes, and at the romblinge off the wheles. The fathers shall not lōke to their children, so feable and weery shall their hondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to destroye the whole londe off the Phylistynes. He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon and all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all Palestina, and the other Iles, that be deuyded frō the cōuntre. Baldnesse is come vpon Gaza, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kepe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swearde off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to thy sheeth, reste, and leaue off. But how can it ceasse, when the LORDE himself hath geuen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and raysed it vp agaynst the cities off the see coast?

The xliiij. Chapter.

¶ THUS saith y^e LORDE off hoostes y^e God of Israel agaynst Moab: "Wo be to y^e cite of Nebo, for it shal be layed waist, brought to confucion and taken. Yee thy strōge cite of Cariatharim shalbe brought to shame, and afayed: Moab shall nomore be had in honoure: Wicked counsell shalbe taken vpon Hesebon. Come (shall they saye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be nomore amonge the nombre of the Gentiles, yee that they maye nomore be thought vpon: Thus the swearde shall persecute y^e. A voyce shall crie from Horonaim: With greate waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.

And this crie shalbe herde in all hir cities. At the goinge vp vnto Lubith there shall arise a lamētacion: and downe towarde Horonaim, there shall be herde a cruell and a deedly crie: Get you awaye, saue youre lyues and be like vnto the heeth in y^e wildernes. "For, because thou hast trusted in thy stronge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken. Chamos with his prestes and prynces shall go awaye in to captiuyte.

The destroyer shal come vpon all cities, none shall escape. The valleys shalbe destroyed, and the feldes shall be layed waist: like as the LORDE hath determed.

Make a token vnto Moab, that she get hir awaye spedely: for hir cities shalbe made so desolate, that no man shall dwell therein.

Cursed be he that doth the worke of the LORDE negligently, and cursed be he that kepeth backe his swearde from sheddynge off bloude.^a Moab hath euer bene rich and carlesse from hir youth vp, she hath sytten and takē hir ease with hir treasure. She was neuer yet put out off one vessell in to another (ȝ is) she neuer wente awaye in to captyuyte, therefore hir taist remayneth, and hir sauoure is not yet chaunged.

But lo, the tyme commeth (saieith the LORDE) that I shall sende hir trussers to trusse her vp, to prepare and season hir vessels: yee hir tankerdes rattell, and shake to ȝ fro. And Moab shalbe ashamed off Chamos, like as Israel was ashamed off Bethel, wherin she put hir trust.

Wherefore do ye thinke thus: we are mightie, and stronge men off warre?^b Moab shal be destroyed, and hir cities brente vp: hir chosen yonge men shall be slayne, saieith the kinge, whose name is the LORDE off hoostes. The destruction off Moab commeth on a pace, and hir fall is at honde.

All hir neighbours shall mourne for her, and all they that knowe hir name, shal saye: O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou doughter Dibō, come downe from thy glory, and syt in pouerte. For he that destroyeth Moab, shall come vp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, get the to ȝ strete, ȝ loke aboute the: axe them that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thyng is happened? O, Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Mourne and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And myserly shall come vpon the playne londe: Namely, vpō holon, and Iaza: vpon Mephat and Dibō, vpon Nebo and the house of Diplathaim, vpon Cariatharim and Bethgamul, vpon Bethmaon and Carioth, vpon Bosra and all the cities in the lōde off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

The horne of Moab shal be smyttē downe, ȝ hir arme broken, saieith the LORDE. Make hir drunken (for she magnified hir self aboute the LORDE:) that men maye clappe their hondes at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to scorne. O Israel, shalt thou not laugh him to scorne, when he is taken amōge theues? Yee because off thy wordes that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be dryuen awaye. Ye Moabites shal leaue the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like douses, that make their nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off it, she is very hie mynded. I knowe hir stoutnesse, hir boostinge, hir arrogācy and the pryde off hir stomack, saieith the LORDE. For hir furiousnes maye nether vpholde hir with strength, ner dede. Therefore shal there mournynge be made for Moab, and euery mā shal crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shalbe made, to the men that stonde vpon the wall. So will I mourne for the also (o lazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wyne brāuches shal come ouer ȝ see, and the braunches off Iazer but vnto the see: the destroyer shall breake in to thy haruest and grape gatheringe. Myrth and cheare shalbe taken awaye from the tymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shall be no swete wyne in the presse, the treader shall haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shall be none to crie vnto him: which afore tyme were herde from hesebon to Eleale and Ioaz, which lifted vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off thre yeare olde. The waters also off Nemrim shalbe dried vp.

Morouer I will make Moab cease (saieith the LORDE) from the offringes and censinge that she hath made vnto hir goddes in hie places. Wherefore my herte mourneth for Moab, like a crowde playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke wall my herte mourneth also,^c euen as a pype, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shalbe very fewe, and destroyed.

All heades shall be shauen, and all beerdes clipped off: all hondes bounde, and all loynes gyrded aboute with sack cloth. Vpō all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shalbe mournynge: For I will breake Moab like an vnprofitable vessell saieith the LORDE. O how fearfull is she? O how mourneth she? O how doth Moab hange downe hir heade, and is ashamed? Thus shall Moab be a laughinge stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

For thus saith the LORDE: "Beholde, the enemy shal come flyenge as an Aegle, and sprede his wynges vpon Moab. They shall clymme ouer the walles, and wyne the stronge holdes. Then the mighty mens hertes in Moab, shalbe like the herte off a woman trauelinge with childe.

And Moab shalbe made so desolate, that she shal nomore be a people, because she hath set vp her selfe agaynst the LORDE. Feare, pyt, and snare shall come vpo the (o Moab) saith the LORDE. Who so escapeth the feare, shal fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shall be taken in the snare."

For I will bringe a yere off visitacion vpon Moab, saith the LORDE. They that are able to fle, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Hesebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, & shall burne vp that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Wo be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: Yee thy sonnes and daughters shall be led awaye captiue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiuyte agayne, saith the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

The xlix. Chapter.

AS concerninge the Ammonites, thus the LORDE saith: Hath Israel no children, or is he without an heyre? Why hath youe kynge then taken Gad in? wherfore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therefore, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will brynge a noyse off warre in to Rabath off the Ammonites. Lahel shalbe desolate, and hir cities brent vp: and the Israelites shall be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saith the LORDE. Hesebon shall mourne, for it shal be roted out off the grounde, saith the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shall crie out, and gyrdle them selues with sack cloth: they shal mourne, and runne aboute the walles: for their kynge shall be led awaye prisoner: yee his preestes and prynces with him.

Wherfore trustest thou in the water streames, that flowe to and fro, o thou fearede daughter: and thynekst thou art so safe (by reason off thy treasure) that no man shal come to the?

Beholde, I will brynge a feare vpon the, saith the LORDE God off hostes, from all those that be aboute the: so that ye shall be scatred euery man from another, and no mā shall gather them together agayne, that be fled. But after that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captiuyte agayne.

Vpon the Edomites hath the LORDE off hostes spoken on this maner: "Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good counsell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned clen to naught? Get you hence, turne youre backs, crepe downe in to the depe, O ye citesyns off Dedan.

For I will bringe destructio vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. Yf the grape gatherers came vpon the, shulde they not leaue some grapes? Yf the night robbers came vpon the, shulde they not take so moch, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discouer his secretes, so that he shall not be able to hyde them. His sede shalbe waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neighbours, ad he himself shall not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leaue thy fatherlesse children behinde the, and I will kepe them and thy wydowes shall take their comforth in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmte to drinke of the cuppe, haue dronken with the first: and thynekst thou then to be fre?

No, no: thou shalt nether be quyte nor fre, but thou must drynke also: For why, I haue sworne by my self (saith the LORDE) that Bosra shall become a wyldernes, an open shame, a laughinge stocke and cursynge: and hir cities shalbe a continuall deserte.

For I am perfectly informed of the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the Heithen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: I will make the but small amonge the Heithen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Thy hie stomack & the pryde of thy herte haue diseaued the, because thou wilt dwell in the holes of stony rockes, and haue the hie mountaynes in possession. Neuertheles though thy nest were as hie as the Aegles, yet wil I cast the downe, saith the LORDE. Morouer

Idumea shall be a wilderness: "who so goeth by it, shalbe abashed, and wondre at all hir miserable plagcs. Like as Sodom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpsyde downe (saith \hat{y} LORDE) so shal no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shal haue his habitacion there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasaunt medowes of Iordane vnto \hat{y} grene pastures of Ethā, so wil I dryue him, α make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordene therto? Who is like, vnto me? What is he that wil stryue with me? What shepherde maye stonde in my hondcs?

D Therefore heare the counsell of the LORDE, α that he hath taken vpon Idumea: α his purpose, that he hath deuynd vpon the citesyns of Theman: The leest of the flocke shal teare them in peces, α loke what fayre thyng they haue, they shal make it waist, α themselves also. At the noyse of their fall \hat{y} earth shal quake, the crie of their voyce shalbe herde vnto the reed see. Then shal the hertes of the worthies in Edom be 'as the herte of a woman trauelinge of childe. Vpon Damascus, Hemath and Arphad shall come confucion, for they shall heare euell tydings: they shal be tossed to and fro like the see that can not stonde still. Damascus shalbe sore afrayde, α shal fle, tremblinge shal come vpon her. Sorowe and payne shal ouer take her as a woman trauelinge of childe. But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken? Heare therefore: hir yonge men shal fall in the stretes, and all hir men of warre shal be takē awaye in that tyme, saith the LORDE of hoostes. I wil kyndle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shal cōsume the palace of Benadad.

E As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Hasor, α whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon smote downe, the LORDE hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vp vnto Cedar, and destroye the people towardes the easte. Their tentes and their flockes shal they take awaye, yee their hanginges and their vessel. Their Camels also shall they carie awaye with them. They shall come aboute them on euery syde with a fearfull crie.

Fle, get you soone awaye, crepe in to caues, that ye maye dwell there: O ye inhabitours of Hasor, saith the LORDE: for Nabuchodonosor \hat{y} kinge of Babilon hath holden a councel concernynge you, α concluded his deuyce agaynst you. Arise, α get you vp agaynst yonder rich α carelesse people (saith the LORDE) which haue nether gates ner dore barres, α that dwell not together. Their Camels shalbe stollen, α the droues of their catell dryuen awaye.

Morouer, these that be shauen wil I scatrec towardes all the wyndes, α bringe them to destruction: Yee α that thorow their owne familiers, saith the LORDE. Hasor also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an euerlasting wilderness: so that no body shal dwell there, and no man shal haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE F 'spake to the prophet Ieremy concernynge Elam, in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bringe the foure wyndes from \hat{y} foure quarters of heauen, α wil scatrec them agaynst the same foure wyndes. And there shal be no people, but some of Elam shal fle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be afrayed of their enemies, α of them that seke their lyues: α wil bringe vpō them the indignacion of my wrath, saith the LORDE. And I wil persecute them with the swearde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my stole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kinge α \hat{y} prynces from thence, saith the LORDE. But in processe of tyme, I wil bringe Elam out of captiuyte agayne, saith the LORDE.

The I. Chapter.

THE wordes \hat{y} the LORDE spake vnto A the prophet Ieremy, concernynge Babilon, α the londe of the Caldees: \hat{y} Preach amonge the Gentiles, let youre voyce be herde, make a tokē: crie out, kepe no sylence, but saye: Babilon shal be wonne, Bel shalbe cōfounded, and Merodach shalbe ouercome.

Yee their goddes shal be brought to shame, and their ymages shal stonde in feare. For out of the north there shal come a people agaynst her, which shal make hir londe so waist, that no body shal dwell therin: nether man ner beast, for they shall fle and departe from thence. In those dayes ¶ at that tyme (saith the LORDE) "the childre of Israel shall come, they ¶ the children of Iuda, wepinge ¶ makinge haist, ¶ shal seke the LORDE their God. They shall axe the waye to Sion, thither shall they turne their faces, ¶ come, and hange vpon the, in a counaunt that neuer shal be broken.

¶ My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes haue disceaued them, ¶ haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the litle hill, ¶ forgotten their folde. All they ¶ came vpon them, haue deuoured the: ¶ their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeased the LORDE, yee euen the LORDE which is the bewtie of their righteousnes, ¶ ¶ defended their fathers. Yet shal ye fle from Babilon, ¶ departe out of ¶ londe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. ¶ For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from ¶ northren londe, ¶ bringe them vpon Babilon: these shal laye sege to it, ¶ wyne it: Their arrowes shal not mysse, like as a connynge archer shuteth not wronge. And the Caldees shalbe spoyled, ¶ all they that spoyle them, shalbe satisfied, saith the LORDE: ¶ because ye were so chearfull ¶ glad, to treade downe myne heretage, ¶ fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calues in the grasse: and triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Your mothers shalbe sore confounded, and they that bare you, shal come to shame. She shall be the leest set by amonge the nacions, voyde, waist, ¶ dried vp. No man shal be able to dwell there, for the feare of ¶ LORDE, but she shal be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, ¶ shall stonde still, ¶ be abashed, ¶ shal wondre at all hir plages.

¶ Go forth in youre aray agaynst Babilon rounde aboute, all ye that can handle bowes: shute at her, spare no arrowes, for she hath synned agaynst the LORDE. Crie out: vpon her, vpon her, agaynst her roude aboute: she shal yelde her selfe, her foundaciōs shal fall, ¶ hir walles shall come downe, for it shalbe the vengeance of the LORDE. ¶ Yee vengeance shalbe taken of her, ¶ as she hath done, so shal she be dealt withall. They shal rote out the sower from Babilon, ¶ him ¶ handleth the sickle in haruest. For feare of the swearde of the enemye, euery man shall get him to his owne people, ¶ euery man shal fle to his owne londe. Israel is a scatred flocke, the Lyons haue dispersed them. ¶ First the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon hath brusseed all their bones.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will viset the kinge of Babilon ¶ his kingdome, ¶ as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bringe Israel agayne to his pleasaunt pasture, that he maye fede vpon Chamel ¶ Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mount of Ephraim ¶ Galaad. In those dayes and at the same tyme (saith the LORDE) ¶ yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shal none be founde: Yf men enquire for the synne of Iuda, there shal be none: for I wil be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remayne ouer.

Go downe (o thou avenger) in to the enemies londe, ¶ viset them that dwell therin: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saith the LORDE: do accordinge to all, that I haue commanded the. There is gone aboute the londe a crie of a slaughter ¶ greate murthur, namely on this maner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken ¶ brusseed in sonder? How chaunceth it, that Babilon is become a wildernes amonge the Heithen on this maner? them to death. Wo be vnto thē, for the daye ⁊ tyme of their visitacion is at honde. Methinke I heare already a crie, of them that be fled ⁊ escaped out of the londe of Babilon, which shewe in Sion the vengeance of the LORDE oure God, the vengeance of his temple: Yee a voyce of them, that crie agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers agaynst Babilon, ptych youre tentes rounde aboute her, that none escape. ^aRecompence her, as she hath deserued: and acordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp her self agaynst the LORDE, agaynst ⁊ holy one of Israel. Therefore shal hir yonge men fall downe in the stretes, ⁊ all hir men of warre shal be roted out in ⁊ daye, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I speake vnto the (o thou proude) saith the LORDE God of hostes: for thy daye shal come, eue the tyme of thy visitaciō. And the proude shal stumble ⁊ fall, ⁊ no man shal helpe him vp.
 I wil burne vp his cities with fyre, ⁊ it shal consume all that is rounde aboute him.

^f Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: The children of Israel ⁊ Iuda suffre violence together. All they that haue them in captiuyte, kepe them fast, ⁊ wil not let them go: but their avēger ⁊ redemer is mightie, whose name is the LORDE of hostes: he shal manteyne their cause, he shal make the londe shake, ⁊ iudge them that dwell therin, one with another.
 The swearde shall come vpon the Caldees (saith the LORDE) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their prynces, ⁊ vpō their wyse mē: The swearde vpon their soythsayers, (as for those, they shall become fooles.) The swearde vpō their worthies, so that they shal stonde in feare: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charettes, ⁊ vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder thē: so that they all shal become like women: The swearde vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stolen awaye: ^g The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shalbe dried vp: For the londe worshippeth ymages, ⁊ delyteth in straunge wondrefull thynges. Therefore shal wilde beestes, Apes ⁊ Estriches dwell therein: for there shal neuer man dwell there, nether shal eny man haue his habitacion there for euer more. ^bLike as God destroyed Sodom ⁊ Gomorre, with the cities that laye there aboute, saith the LORDE: So shal noman dwell there also, nether shal eny mā haue there his habitacion.

^cBeholde, there shal come a people from the north, with a greate bonde of men, ⁊ many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes ⁊ buclers, cruell are they ⁊ vmercifull.

Their voyce roareth like the raginge see, ^d they ryde vpon horses, ⁊ come weapened to fight agaynst the: O Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his hondes shal waxe feable: Sorowe and heynyes shall come vpon him, as a woman traueling with childe. Beholde, ^elike as the Lyon commeth vp from the pleasaunt medowes of Iordane vnto the grene pastures of Ethan, so wil I dryue thē forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, ⁊ ordene to such thinge? ^fFor who is like me, or who wil stryue with me? or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me? Therefore heare the council that the LORDE hath geuen vpon Babilon, and the deuyce that he hath taken vpon the londe of the Caldees. The leest amōge the people shal teare them in peces, ⁊ loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue:
 they shal laye it waist. The noyse at ⁊ wynnyng of Babilon shal moue the earth, ⁊ the crie shalbe herde amonge the Gētiles.

The li. Chapter.

^g THUS hath the LORDE sayde: ^aBe-will agaynst me. I wil sende also in to Babilō fanners, to fanne her out, ⁊ to destroye hir londe: for in the daye of hir trouble they shal be aboute her on euery syde. Morouer, the LORDE hath sayde vnto the bowe men, ⁊ to them ⁊ clymme ouer the walles in brest plates:

 Ye shal not spare hir yonge mē, kyll downe all hir hoost. Thus the slayne shal fall downe in the londe of the Caldees, and the wounded in the stretes. ^bAs for Israel ⁊ Iuda, they shall not be forsakē of their God, of the LORDE of hostes, of the hollyone of Israel:
 no, though they haue fylled all their londe full of synne. ^cFle awaye from Babilon, euery

B rewarder her agayne. Babilon hath bene in the LORDES honde a golden cuppe, ^a þy maketh all londes droncken. Of hir wyne haue all people droncken, therefore are they out of their wittes. ^b But sodenly is Babilon fallen, and destroyed. Mourn for her, brynge plasters for hir woundes, yf she maye peraduenture be healed agayne. We wolde haue made Babilon whole (saye they) but she is not recouered. Therefore wil we let her alone, ^c & go euery mā in to his owne countre. For hir iudgmēt is come in to heauen, ^d & is gone vp to the cloudes. And therefore come on, we will shewe Sion the worke of the LORDE oure God.

C Make sharpe the arowes, and fyll the quyuers: ^e for the LORDE shall rayse vp the sprete of the kyng of the Meedes, which hath allready a desyre to destroye Babilon. This shalbe the vengeance of the LORDES, and the vengeance of his temple.

Set vp tokens vpon the walles of Babilon, make youre watch stronge, set youre watchmen in araye, yee holde preuye watches: ^f & yet for all that shall the LORDE go forth with the deuyce, which he hath taken vpon them that dwell in Babilon.

O thou that dwellest by the greete waters, o thou that hast so greate treasure and riches, thyne ende is come: ^g & the rekenyng of thy wynnynges. ^h The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne by himself, that he wil ouerwhelme the with men like greshoppers in nombre, which with a corage shall crie Alarum Alarum agaynst the. ⁱ Yee euen the LORDE of hoostes, that with his power made the earth, with his wysdome prepayred ^j þy rounde worlde, & with his discrecion spred out the heauens. As soone as he letteth his voyce be herde, the waters in the ayre waxe feare: ^k He draweth vp the cloudes from the endes of the earth. He turneth ^l þy lightenynges to rayne, he bringeth the wyndes out of their secrete places. By the reason of wysdome, all men are become fooles. ^m Confounded be all the casters of ymages: for ⁿ þy thinge that they make, is but disceate, & hath no breath. Vayne is it, & worthy to be laughed at: ^o & in the tyme of visitacion it shal perish.

D Neuertheles, the porcion of Iacob is none such: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes, he is the rodde of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, & yet thorow the I haue scatred the nacions & kyngdomes: Thorow the haue I scatred horse & horse man, yee the charettes, & soch as sat vpon them: Thorow the I haue scatred man & woman, olde and yonge, bachelor & mayden. Thorow the I haue scatred the shepherde & his flocke, the husband man & his catell, the prynces & the rulers. Therefore wil I rewarder the cite of Babilon & all hir citesyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noysome hill) saith the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londes. I wil stretch out my honde ouer the, & cast the downe from the stony rockes: ^p & wil make the a brente hill, so that nether corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundation stones shalbe taken eny more out of the, but waist & desolate shalt thou lie for euermore, saith the LORDE.

Set vp a tokē in the londe: blowe the ^q trompettes amonge the Heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her, call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Menni & Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greate a sorte of horses agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them ^r þy people of the Meedes with their kynges, prynces & all their chefe rulers, yee and the whole londe that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake & be afayed, when the deuyce of the LORDE shall come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waist, that no mā shal dwell eny more therin. The Worthies of Babilon shal leaue the batell, & kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shalbe like women. Their dwellinge places shal be brent vp, their barres shalbe broken. One purseuaunt shal mete another, yee one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kinge of Babilon tydinges: that his cite is taken in on euery syde, the foordes occupyde, the fennes brent vp, and the souldyers sore afayed.

E For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: The daughter of Babilon hath bene in hir tyme like as a threszshinge floore, but shortly shal hir haruest come. Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon hath deuoured and destroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessell. He swallowed me vp like a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my delicates: he hath cast me out, he hath takē my substance awaye, & the thinge that was left me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saith the doughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee & my bloude also, vnto the Caldees, saith Ierusalem. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, & avenge the: I will drynke vp hir see, & drye vp hir water sprynges.

“Babilon shal become an heape of stones, a dwellinge place for dragons, a fearfulness & wondringe, because no man dwelleth there. They shal roare together like lyons, & as the yonge lyons when they be angrie, so shal they bēde them selues. In their heate I shal set drynke before thē, & they shalbe droncken for ioye: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, & neuer wake, saith the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers & gootes. O, how was Sesah wonne? O, how was the glory of y whole londe taken? how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wondred at amonge the Heithē? The see is rysen ouer Babilon, & hath couered her with his greate wawes. Hir cities are layed waist, the londe lieth vnbylded and voyde: it is a londe where no man dwelleth, & where no mā traueleth thorow. Morouer, I wil vyset Bel at Babilō: & the thinge that he hath swallowed vp, that same shal I plucke out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shall runne nomore vnto him, yee and the walles of Babilon shal fall.

“O my people, come out of Babilon, that euery man maye saue his life, from the fearful wrath of the LORDE. Be not faynte herted, & feare not at euery rumoure that shalbe herde in the londe: for euery yeare bringeth new tydings, yee straunge wickednes and lordshi-pe. And lo, the tyme cometh that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilō, and the whole londe shalbe confounded, yee and hir slayne shal lie in the myddest of her. Heauen and earth with all that is therin, shall reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saith y LORDE.

‘Like as Babilō hath beaten downe and

slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the swearde, haist you, stōde not still, remembre the LORDE afarre of: and thinke vpon Ierusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were couered with shame, because the straunge aleauntes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherefore beholde (saith the LORDE) the tyme cometh, that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lōde they shal mourne and fall. ‘Though Babilon clymmed vp in to heauē, and kepte her power an hie: yet shal I sende her destroyers saith the LORDE.

A piteous crie shall be herde from Babilon, and a greate mysery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he dryueth out the hie stomach & proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the wawes of greate water floudes, and made greate crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shall come vpon her (euen vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to avenge him self vpon them, & sufficiently to recompence thē. Yee (saith the LORDE) I will make their prynces, their wyse men, their chefe rulers & all their worthies, dronckē: so that they shal slepe an euerlastinge slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saith the kinge, whose name is y LORDE of hoostes.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shalbe brente vp. And the thinge that the Gētiles and the people haue wrought with greate trauayle and laboure, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

This is the charge that Ieremy gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Maasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, in the fourth yeare of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable prynce. Ieremy wrote in a boke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that be written agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou comest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: O LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this

The liij. Chapter.

A SEDECHIAS was xxj. yeare olde, when he was made kynge, ^a he reigned xj. yeare in Ierusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Ieremies daughter of Lobna. He lyued wickedly before the LORDE euen as Ioachim dyd. Wherefore the LORDE was angrie at Ierusalem & Iuda, so longe till he had cast the out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kynge of Babilon. ^c But in y^e ix. yeare of his raigne, In the tēth Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon with all his hooste came before Ierusalem, & beseged it, & made them bulworkes rounde aboute it. And this beseging of the cite endured vnto the xj. yeare of kynge Sedechias.

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix daye of the Moneth, there was so greate hunger in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the people of the londe. ^a So all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thorow the waye of the porte betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now y^e Caldees had compassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye towarde the wilderness.

B And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kinge in the felde of Iericho, when his hoost was runne from him. So they caried the kynge awaye presoner to Reblatha, vnto the kinge of Babilon in the londe of Hemath, ^c where he gaue iudgment vpon him.

The kinge of Babilō also caused Sedechias sonnes be slayne before his face, yee & put all the prynces of Iuda to death at Reblatha. Morouer he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be caried vnto Babilon: & let him lie in preson, till he dyed.

Now y^e tenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xix yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chefe captayne and the kinge of Babilons seruauantes came vnto Ierusalem, & brent vp the house of the LORDE. He brent vp also the kinges palace, all the houses & all the gorgeous buyldinges in Ierusalē. And the whole hoost of the Caldees y^e were with the chefe captayne, brake downe all the walles of Ierusalem rounde aboute.

As for the poore people & soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kinge of Babilon, yee & what people as yet remayned: Nabusaradan the chefe captayne caried them awaye presoners. But y^e poore people of the cowntre, dyd Nabusaradan the chefe captayne leaue in the londe, to occupie the vynyardes & feldes. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORDE, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of y^e LORDE: & caried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouels, flesh hokes, sprinklers, spones & all the brasen vessell that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, sprinklers, pottes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and some of syluer.

The chefe captayne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij brasen bullockes y^e stode vnder y^e seate, ^a which kinge Salomon made in the house of the LORDE: & all the vessell conteyned so moch metall, that it might not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij cubites hie, & the rope that went aboute it, was xij cubites, & foure fingers thick and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, & euery knoppe was fyue cubites hie: & vpon the knoppes were whopes, & pomgranates rounde aboute of clene brasse.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundreth and xcviij, which hanged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chefe captayne also toke Sarias y^e hie prest, & Sophonias that was chefe next him, and the three keepers of the treasury. He toke out of the

These Nabusaradan the chefe captayne toke, & caried them to the kinge of Babilon vnto Reblatha: and the kinge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha in the londe of Hemath. And thus Iuda was ledde away captiue, out of his owne londe.

This is the summe of the people, whom Nabuchodonosor ledde away captiue.

The ende of the prophet Jeremy.

The Lamentacions of Jeremy.

AND it came to passe (after Israel was brought in to captiuite, and Ierusalem destroyed:) that Ieremy the prophet sat wepinge, mournynge and makinge his mone in Ierusalem: so that with an heuy herte he sighed, & sobbed, sayenge:

The first Chapter.

¶ LAS, how sitteth the cite so desolate, ȝ some tyme was full of people? how is she become like a wedowe, which was the lady of all nacions? °How is she brought vnder tribute, that ruled all londes?

° 2 Re. 1. b. 4 Re. 15. a.

She wepeth sore in the night, so that ȝ teares runne downe hir chekes: for amonge all hir louers, there is none, that geueth her eny comforte: yee hir nexte frendes abhorre her, & are become hir enemies.

Iuda is taken presoner, because she was defyled: & for seruyng so many straunge goddes, she dwelleth now amonge the Heithen. She fyndeth no rest, all they that persecuted her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man commeth more to the solempne feastes: All hir gates are desolate, hir prestes make lamentacion, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heuynesse.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, & haue put her to shame: because the LORDE hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes: "hir children are ledde awaye captiue before theiremie.

All the bewtie of the doughter of Sion is awaye, hir prynces are become like withers, that fynde no pasture. They are dryuē awaye before theiremie, so that they haue no more power.

Now doth Ierusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery & disobedience, yee the ioye & pleasure y she hath had in tymes past: seynge hir people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemy, & there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stode lokinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Ierusalem synned euer more & more, therefore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylthinesse. Yee she sigheth, and is a shamed of herselfe.

Hir skyrtes are defyled, she remēbred not what wolde folowe: therefore is hir fall so greate, and there is no mā to comforte her. O LORDE, cōsidre my trouble, for myne enemy hath the vpper honde.

The enemy hath put his honde to all the precious thinges that she had, yee euen before hir eyes came the Heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (neuertheles) hast forbydden to come within thy congregacion.

All hir people seke their bred with heuynes, & loke "what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Considre (O LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become.

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be eny sorowe like vnto myne, wher with the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre, in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and throwne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euer be mournynge.

The yocke of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strength is gone: the LORDE hath deliuered me in to those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myself.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mightie men, that were in me. He hath proclaimed a feast, to slaughter all my best mē. The LORDE hath troden downe the doughter of Iuda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therefore do I wepe, and myne eyes gusshe out of water: "for the cōforter that shulde quyen me, is farre fro me. My children are dryuen awaye, for why? the enemy hath gotten the ouer honde.

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Iacob, and Ierusalem is as it were a menstruous womā, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is rightuous, "for I haue prouoked his countenance vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and considre my heuynes: My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuite.

I called for my louers (but they begyled me:) for my prestes and councelers, but they perished: euen while they sought for meate, to saue their lyues.

Considre (O LORDE) how I am troubled, my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth aboute in me, and I am full of heuynes. The swearde hurteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt brynge forth the tyme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, euē as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorow is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The ij. Chapter.

ALAS, how hath y LORDE darkened the doughter of Sion so sore in his wrath? As for the honoure of Israel, he hath casten it downe from heauen: "How happeneth it, that he remembered not his owne fote stole, when he was angrie?

3 The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Iacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the doughter Iuda hath he broken in his wrath, & throwne them downe to the grounde: hir kyngdome & hir prynces hath he suspended.

2 In the wrath of his indignacion he hath broken all the horne of Israel: he hath with drawe his right honde from the enemye: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Iacob, & hath consumed vp all rounde aboute.

7 He hath bent his bowe like an enemye, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and euery thinge that was pleasaunt to se, he hath smytyn it downe. He hath poured out his wrath like a fyre, in to the tabernacle of the doughter Sion.

7 The LORDE is become, like as it were an enemye, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the doughter of Iuda with moch sorow and heuynesce.

3 Hir tabernacle (which was like a garden of pleasure) hath he destroyed: hir hie solēpne feastes hath he put downe. "The LORDE hath brought it so to passe, that the hie solempne feastes and Sabbathes in Sion, are clene forgottē. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kynge & prestes to be despised.

1 The LORDE hath forsaken his owne aulter, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres in to the hondes of the enemye. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solempne feast daye.

7 The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the doughter Sion, he spread out his lyne, & drewe not in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therefore mourne the turrets and the broken walles together.

2 Hir portes are casten downe to the grounde, hir barres are broken & smytyn in sonder: hir kynge & prynces are caried awaye to the Gētiles.³ They haue nether lawe ner prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

1 The Senatours of the doughter Sion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strowed aszshes vpon their heades, and gyrded them selues with sack cloth. The maydens of Ierusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

The iij. Chapter.

I AM the mā, that (thorow the rodd of his wrath) haue experiēce of misery.

He droue me forth, and led me: yee in to darcknesse, but not in to light.

Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, ⁊ layeth it euer vpon me.

My flesh ⁊ my skynne hath he made olde, and my bones hath he brussed.

He hath buylded rounde aboute me, ⁊ closed me in with gall and trauayle.

He hath set me in darcknesse, as they that be deed for euer.

He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, ⁊ hath layed heuy lynckes vpon me.

Though I crie ⁊ call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

He hath stopped vp my wayes with foure squared stones, ⁊ made my pathes croked.

He layeth waite for me like a Bere, and as a lyon in a hole.

He hath marred my wayes, and brokē me in peces, he hath layed me waist altogether.

He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a marck to shute at.

The arrowes of his quyuer hath he shot, euen in to my reynes.

I am laughed to scorne of all my people, they make songes vpon me all ⁊ daye lōge.

He hath fylled me with bytternesse, ⁊ geuen me wormwod to drynke.

He hath smytten my teth in peces, ⁊ rolled me in the dust.

He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope for me in the LORDE.

O remembre yet my misery and my trouble, the wormwod and the gall.

Yee thou shalt remēbre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

Whyle I cōsidre these thinges in my hert, I get a hope agayne.

Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, ⁊ that his louynge kyndnesse ceaseth not.

His faithfulnes is greate, and renueth itself as the mornynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saith my soule) therfore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto thē, that put their trust in him, and to the soule that seeketh after him?

O how good is it with stilnesse to wate and tarie, for the health of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still, and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (per case) there happen to be eny hope.

He offreth his cheke to the smyter, he will be content with reprobues.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for euer.

But though he do cast of, yet (acordinge to ⁊ multitude of his mercies) he receaueth to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, ⁊ cast out the children of men from his herte.

To treade all the presoners of the earth vnder his fete.

To moue the iudgment of man before the most highest.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in soch thinges.

What is he then that saith: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES cōmaundement?

Out of the mouth of the most highest goeth not euell and good.

Wherfore then murmureth the lyuinge man? let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs loke well vpon oure owne waies, ⁊ remembre oure selues, and turne agayne to ⁊ LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure hondes vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers ⁊ haue offended, wilt thou therfore not be intreated?

Thou hast couered vs in thy wrath, ⁊ persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Thou hast hyd thy self in a cloude, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despyed amonge the Heithen.

All oure enemies gape vpon vs.

Feare and snare is come vpon vs, yee despitte and destruction.

Whole ryuers of water guszhe out of myne eyes, for the greate hurte of my people.

Myne eyes runne, and can not ceasse, for there is no rest.

O LORDE, when wilt thou loke downe frō heauen, and conside?

Myne eye breaketh my herte, because of all the doughters of my cite.

Myne enemies hunted me out sharply like a byrde, yee and that with out a cause.

They haue put downe my life in to a pitte, and layed a stone vpon me.

They poured water vpon my heade, then thought I: now am I vndone.

I called vpon thy name (O LORDE) out of the depe pitte.

Thou hast herde my voyce, & hast not turned away thine eares fro my sighinge and crienge.

Thou hast enclyned thy self vnto me, whē I called vpon the, & haist sayde: feare not.

Thou (O LORDE) hast mayntened the cause of my soule, and hast redeemed my life.

OLORDE, thou hast sene my blasphemers, take thou my cause vpon the.

Thou hast well considered how they go aboute to do me harme, & that all their counsels are agaynst me.

Thou hast herde their despytefull wordes (O LORDE) yee and all their ymaginacions agaynst me.

The lippes of myne enemies, & their deuyces that they take agaynst me, all the daye longe.

Thou seist also their sittinge downe and their rysinge vp, they make their songes of nothinge but of me.

Rewarde them (O LORDE) acordinge to the workes of their hondes.

Geue them ŷ thinge, that their owne herte is afraied of: euen thy curse.

Persecute them, (O LORDE) with thy indignacion, & rote them out from vnder the heauen.

The iiii. Chapter.

O HOW is the golde become so dymme? How is the goodly colour of it so sore chaunged? and the stones of ŷ Sanctuary thus scatred in the corner of euery strete?

The children of Sion that were all waye in honoure, & clothed with ŷ most precious golde: how are they now become like the erthen vessels which be made with the potters honde?

The Lamyas geue their yonge ones suck with bare brestes: but the daughter of my people is cruel, and dwelleth in the wyldernes: like the Estriches.

The tonges of the suckinge children, cleue to ŷ rofe of their mouthes for very thurst. The yonge children axe bred, but there is noman, that geueth it them.

They that were wonte to fayre delicatly, perishe in the stretes: they that afore were brought vp in purple, make now moch of donge.

The synne of the daughter of my people is become greater, then ŷ wickednesse of Sodome, that sodely was destroyed,^a and not taken with hondes.

Hir absteyners (or Nazarees) were whyter then ŷ snowe or mylke: their coloure was fresh read as the Corall, their beutie like the Saphyre.

But now their faces are very black:^b In so moch, that thou shuldest not knowe them in the stretes. Their skynne cleueth to their bones, It is wythered, and become like a drye stock.

They that be slayne with the swearde, are happier, then soch as dye of hunger, and perishe awaye famishinge for the frutes of the felde.

The womē (which of nature are pitefull) haue sodden their owne children^c with their hondes: that they might be their meate, in ŷ miserable destruction of the daughter of my people.

The LORDE hath perfourmed his heuy wrath:^d he hath poured out the furiousnes of his displeasure. He hath kindled a fyre in Sion, which hath consumed the foundations therof.

Nether the kinges of the earth, ner all ŷ inhabitours of the worlde, wolde haue beleued, that the enemye & aduersary shulde haue come in at the gates of the cite of Ierusalē.

Which neuertheles is come to passe for ŷ synnes of hir prophetes, and for the wickednes of hir prestes, that haue shed innocentes bloude within her.

So that these blynde men wēte stomblinge in the stretes, and stayned them selues with bloude, which els wolde touche no bloudy cloth.

The 6. Chapter.

A CALL to remēbraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cōsidre and se oure cōfucion. Oure enheritaunce is turned to the straungers, & oure houses to the aleauntes.
We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are fayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye.

Oure neckes are vnder persecucion, we are weery, and haue no rest.

Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bred ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, & we must beare their wickednesse. Seruauntes haue the rule of vs, and no man delyuereth vs out of their hōdes. We must get oure lyuynge with the parell of oure lyues, because of the drouth of the wilderness.

Oure skynne is as it had bene brent in an ouen, for very sore hunger. The wyues are raushed in Sion, & the maydens in the cities of Iuda. The prynces are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lyues from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vse no more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned in to mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.

Therefore oure hert is full of heuynesse, & oure eyes dymme: because of y^e hill of Sion that is destroyed. In so moch, that the foxes runne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that remainest for euermore, and thy seate worlde with out ende: Wherefore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longe? O LORDE:
Turne thou vs vnto the, & so shal we be turned.
^c Renue oure daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and bene sore displeased at vs.

Chap. VI.

A copie of the epistole, that Ieremy sent to the Iewes, which were led away presoners vnto Babilon.

THESE are the wordes of the boke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchia, wrote at Babilon in the fifth yeaere the seueth daye of the moneth: " what tyme as the Caldees wanne Ierusalem and brent it.

The first Chapter.

AND Baruch dyd rede the wordes of this boke, that Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim kynge of Iuda might heare : and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the boke; yee and before all the noble kinges sonnes, before y^e lordes of the counsell and elders: and before the whole people, from y^e lowest vnto the hiest: before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by y^e water of Sodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

B They made a collection also of money, accordinge to euery mans power, and sent it to Ierusalem vnto Ioachim the sonne of Helchia the sonne of Salon prest, with y^e other prestes: and to all the people which were with him at Ierusalem, what tyme as they had gotten the ornaments of the temple of y^e LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might brynge them agayne in to the londe of Iuda, the x. daye of the moneth Siban :

namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had take Iechonias, with all his prynces, lordes, and all the people, and led them captiue from Ierusalem vnto Babilon.

And they sayde: ^a Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burntofferynges and incense withall: make you vneleuended bred, ^c and offere for synne vpon the aluter of the LORDE oure God. ^d And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne: y^e their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen: that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten oure eyes: that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne: that we maye longe do them seruyce, and fynde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE oure God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and vnto this daye is not his wrath turned yet awaye from vs. And se that ye rede this boke (which we haue sent vnto you to be rehearced in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hie dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

daye, vnto all Iuda, ⁊ to euery one ⁊ dwelleth at Ierusalem: to oure kinges, prynces, prestes, prophetes ⁊ to oure fathers. We haue synned before the LORDE oure God, we haue not put oure trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in the commaundementes that he gaue vs. Sens the daye that he brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egipte vnto this present daye, we haue bene euer a mysbeleuyng and an vnfaithful people vnto ⁊ LORDE oure God: destroyenge oure selues vtterly, and shrenckinge backe, that we shulde not heare his voyce.

E Wherefore there are come vpon vs greate plagēs ⁊ dyuere curses,^a like as the LORDE deuysed by Moses his seruaut: which brought oure forefathers out of the lode of Egipte, to geue vs a lode, that floweth with mylke and hony, like as it is to se this daye. The ij. Chapter.

A FOR the which cause the LORDE oure God hath perfourmed his deuycē,^a wherof he certified vs, and oure heades that ruled in Ierusalē: yee and oure kynges, oure princes, with all Israel and Iuda. And soch plagēs hath ⁊ LORDE brought vpō vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heauē: like as it is fulfilled in Hierusalem, acordinge as it is written in the lawe of Moses: 'that a man shulde eate ⁊ flesh of his owne sonne, ⁊ the flesh of his owne daughter. Morouer, he hath delyuered them in to the hondes of all the kinges, ⁊ are rounde aboute vs (to be confounded and desolate) ⁊ scatred thē abrode in all londes ⁊ naciōs. Thus are we brought beneth ⁊ not aboue, for we haue synned against the LORDE oure God, ⁊ not bene obedient vnto his voyce. ^dTherefore ⁊ LORDE oure God is righteous, ⁊ we with oure fathers (as reason is) are brought to opē shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for these plagēs ⁊ are come vpon vs allready, ⁊ LORDE had deuyced thē for vs: yet wolde we not praye vnto ⁊ LORDE oure God, ⁊ we might euery mā turne frō his vngodly wayes. So ⁊ LORDE hath caused soch plagēs to come vpon vs, for he is righteous in all his workes, which he hath cōmaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner harkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in ⁊ cōmaundemētes of ⁊ LORDE, ⁊ he had geuē vnto vs.

And now o LORDE God of Israel, thou 'that hast brought thy people out of the londe of Egipte with a mightie honde, with tokens and wōdres, with thy greate power ād outstretched arme: and hast gotten thy self a name, as it is come to passe this daye: O LORDE oure God, / we haue synned, we haue done wickedly, we haue behaued oure selues vngodly in all thy righteousnesses. Turne thy wrath frō vs (we beseke the) for we are but a few left amonge the Heithen, where thou hast scatred vs. Heare oure prayers (o LORDE) ⁊ oure peticiōs, ^e bringe vs out of captiuyte, for thine owne sake: get vs fauoure in the sight of thē, which haue led vs awaye: ⁊ all lōdes maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE oure God, and that Israel and his generacion calleth vpon thy name.

^a O LORDE, lōke downe frō thy holy house vpon vs: enclyne thine eare, ⁊ heare vs. For the deed, ⁊ be gone downe to their graues, ⁊ whose soules are out of their bodies, ^f ascribe vnto the LORDE nether prayse ner rightuousmakynge: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which goeth on heuely and weakely, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule ascribeth prayse and rightuousnesse vnto the LORDE. O LORDE, we poure out oure prayers before the, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORDE oure God: not for eny godlynesse off oure forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wrath ⁊ indignacion vpon vs: acordinge as thou dydest threaten vs, by thy seruātes the prophetes, sayenge:

^g Thus sayeth the LORDE: Bowe downe youre shulders and neckes, and serue the kynge of Babilon, so shal ye remayne still in the londe, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. Yff ye will not do this, ner heare the voyce of ⁊ LORDE oure God, to serue the kynge of Babilon: I shall destroye you in the cities of Iuda, within Ierusalem and without. I will also take from you the voyce off myrth and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the brydegrome and the voyce of the bryde, ad there shal no man dwell more in the londe. But they wolde not herken vnto thy voyce, to do the kynge of Babilon seruyce: and therefore hast thou performed the wordes, that thou spakest by thy seruantes the prophetes: namely, that the bones of oure kynges and the bones of oure fathers shulde be traslated out of their place.

J

And lo, now are they layde out in the heate of \hat{y} Sonne, τ in the colde of \hat{y} night, ad deed in greate mysery: with hunger, with swearde, with pestilence τ are clene cast forth. As for the tēple wherin thy name was called vpon thou hast layde it waist, as it is to se this daye: τ \hat{y} for the wickednes of the house of Israel τ the house of Iuda. O LORDE oure God, thou hast intreated vs after all thy goodnes τ accordinge to all \hat{y} greate louinge mercy of thyne, like as thou spakest by thy seruante Moses, in the daye when thou didest cōmaūde him, to wryte thy lawe before the children of Israel, sayenge: Yf ye will not herke vnto my voyce, τ thē shal this greate multitude be turned in to a very smal people, for I wil scatre thē abrode. Not withstōdinge I am sure, that this folke wil not heare me: for it is an hardnecked people. But in \hat{y} lōde of their captiuyte, they shall remembre them selues, τ lerne to knowe, \hat{y} I am the LORDE their God: when I geue thē an herte to vnderstōde, τ eares to heare. Then shal they prayse me in the lōde of their captiuyte, τ thynke vpon my name. Then shall they turne them frō their harde backes, τ from their vngodlynnes: Then shal they remembre the thynges, \hat{y} happened vnto their forefathers, which synned agaynst me. So will I bringe them agayne in to the londe, which I promised with an ooth vnto their fathers: Abrahā, Isaac τ Iacob: τ they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increace thē, and not minysh thē. And I wil make another couenaūt with them: \hat{y} soch one as shal endure for euer: namely, \hat{y} I will be their God, and they shalbe my people: and I wil nomore dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the londe \hat{y} I haue geue thē.

The iij. Chapter.

AND now o LORDE allmightie, thou a God of Israel: oure soule \hat{y} is in trouble, τ oure sprete \hat{y} is vexed, crieth vnto the: heare vs (o LORDE) τ haue pite vpon vs, for thou art a mercifull God: be gracious vnto vs, for we haue synned before \hat{y} . Thou endurest for euer, shulde we thē vtterly perishe? O LORDE almightie, thou God of Israel: Heare now \hat{y} prayer of \hat{y} \hat{y} deed Israelites τ of their childrē, which haue synned before \hat{y} , τ τ not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE their God, for the which cause these plaghes hange now vpō vs. O LORDE, remēbre not \hat{y} wickednes of oure forefathers, but thinke vpō thy power τ name now at this tyme: for thou art \hat{y} LORDE oure God, τ \hat{y} (o LORDE) wil we prayse. For thou hast put thy feare i oure hartes, to \hat{y} intēt \hat{y} we shulde call vpon thy name, τ prayse \hat{y} in oure captiuyte: τ and \hat{y} we might turne from the wickednesse of oure forefathers, \hat{y} synned before the.

Beholde, we are yet this daye in oure captiuyte, where as thou hast scatred vs, to be an abhominacion, curse, and synne: like as it hath happened vnto oure fathers also, τ because of all their wickednesse and departynge from the.

O Israel, heare the commaundementes of life: pondre them well with thine eares, that thou mayest lerne wysdome. But how happeneth it Israel, that thou art in thyne enemies lōde? thou art waxen olde in a straūge countre, and defyled with the deed. Why art thou become like them, that go downe to their graues? τ Euē because thou hast forsaken the well of wysdome. For yf thou haddest walked in the waye of God, truly thou shuldest haue remayned still safe i thine owne londe.

\hat{y} O lerne then where discrecion is, where vertu is, where vnderstōdinge is: that thou mayest knowe also frō whence cōmeth longe life, τ a necessary lyuynge, the light of the eyes τ quyetnes. Who euer fōude out hir place? or who came euer in to hir treasures?

Where are \hat{y} prynces of the Heithen become, and soch as ruled the beestes vpon the earth? They that had their pastyme with the foules of the ayre, they that hoorded vp syluer and golde (wherin men trust so moch) and made no ende of their gatheringe? What is worth of them, that coyned siluer, and were so carefull, and coude not bringe their workes to passe? They be rotod out, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their steade: Yonge men haue sene light, and dwelt vpon earth: but the waye of reformation haue they not knowne, ner vnderstonde the pathes therof: nether haue their children receaued it, yee right farre is it frō thē. It hath not bene herde of in the lōde of Canaan, nether hath it bene sene at Theman.

D The Agarenes sought after wisdom, but that which is earthly, like as the marchauntes of the lōde do. They of Theman are conynge also, & they laboure for wisdom & vnderstandinge: but y waye of true wisdom they knowe not, nether do they thynke vpon the pathes therof. O Israel, how greate is the house of God? and how large is the place of his possession? "Greate is he, and hath none ende: hye and vnmeasurable. What is become of those famousse giauntes, that were so greate of bodyes, and so worthy men of warre? Those had not the LORDE chosen, nether haue they founde the waye of reformation, therefore were they destroyed: and for so much as they had no wisdom, they perished because of their foolishnesse.

E Who hath gone vp in to heauen, to take wisdom there, & brought her downe frō the cloudes? Who hath gone ouer the see to fynde her, & hath chosen her aboue golde, and so brought her hither? No man knoweth the wayes of wisdom, nether is there eny y can seke out hir pathes. But he that woteth all thynges, knoweth her, & he hath founde her out with his fore knowledge. "This same is he which prepared the earth at the begynnyng, & fylled it with all maner of foules & beestes. When he sendeth out the light, it goeth: & whē he calleth it agayne, it obeyeth hī with feare. The starres kepe their watch, & geue their light, yee and y gladly. When he calleth them, they saye: here we be. And so with chearfulnes they shewe light vnto him y made thē. This is oure God, & there shall none other be cōpared vnto him: It is he, y hath founde out all wisdom, & hath geuen her vnto Iacob his seruaut, & to Israel his beloued. "Afterwarde dyd he shewe himself vpon earth, and dwelt amonge men.

The iiii. Chapter.

THIS is the boke off the commaundemētes of God, and the lawe y endureth for euer. All they y kepe it, shall come to life: but such as forsake it, shall come to death. Turne the o Iacob, and take holde of it: walke by this waye, thorow his brightnesse and shyne. Geue not thyne honour to another, and thy worshippe to a straunge people. "O Israel, how happie are we, seige that God hath shewed vs soch thynges as are pleasaut vnto him? Be of good cheare, thou people of God, o thou awnciēt Israel. Now are ye solde amonge the Heithen, howbeit not for youre vtter destruction: but because ye prouoked God the LORDE to wrath and displeasure, therefore were ye delyuered vnto youre enemies: For ye displeased the euerlastinge God that made you, offerynge vnto deuels and not God. Ye haue forgottē him that brought you vp, & ad youre nurse haue ye greued, o Ierusalem.

When she sawe that the wrath off God was commynge vpon you: she sayde: Herkē o ye that dwell aboute Sion, for God hath brought me in to greate heynesse: & why? I se the captiuyte of my people, of my sonnes and daughters, which the euerlastyng God will brynge vpon them. With ioye dyd I norish them, but now must I leaue them with wepyng and sorow.

Let no man reioyce ouer me wyddowe & ad forsaken: which for the synnes off my children, am desolate of euery man. For why, they departed from the lawe of God: they wolde not knowe his rightuousnes, ner walke in the waye off his cōmaundementes: and as for the pathes off the treuth and godlynesse, they had no lust to go in them.

C O ye dwellers aboute Sion: come, and let vs call to remembrance the captiuyte, that the euerlastinge God hath brought vpon my sonnes and my daughters. He hath brought a people vpon them from farre, an vncircumcised people, and of a straunge lāguage: which nether regarde the olde, ner pyte the yonge.

These haue caried awaye the deare beloued of my wyddowes, leauynge me alone, both desolate and childlesse. But alas, what can I helpe you? Now he y hath brought these plages vpon you, delyuer you also frō the hondes of youre enemies.

Go youre waye (O my children) go youre waye: for I am desolate and forsaken. I haue put of the clothinge of peace, and put vpon me the sackcloth off prayer, and for my tyme I will call vpon the most hyest. Be off good cheare, o my children: "crie vnto the LORDE, and he shal delyuer you from the power of the prynces, youre enemies.

For verely, I haue euer a good hope off youre prosperous health: yee a very gladnesse is come vpon me from the holy one, because of the mercy that yeshall haue offoure euerlastinge Sauoure.

With mournynge and wepinge dyd I let you go fro me, but with ioye and perpetuall gladnesse, shall the LORDE brynge you agayne vnto me. Like as the neighbours of Sion sawe youre captyuite from God, Euē so shal they also se shortly youre health in God, which shal come on you with greate honoure and euerlastinge worshipec.

O my children, suffre paciētly the wrath that shal come vpon you, For the enemy hath persecuted the, but shortly thou shalt se his destruction, and shalt treade vpon his necke. My derlinges haue gone rough harde wayes, for they are led awaye as a flocke that is scatred abrode with the enemies. But be of good cōfōrte (o my children) & crie vnto the LORDE: For he that led you awaye, hath you yet in remembraunce: and like as ye haue bene mynded to swarue from youre God, so shal ye now endeuoure youre selues x. tymes more, to ^oturne agayne, and to seke him. For he that hath brought these plagis vpō you, shal brynge you euerlastinge ioye agayne with youre health. Take a good herte vnto the, o Ierusalē: for he which gaue ^h that name, exorteth the so to do.

"The wicked doers that now put the to trouble, shall perish: and such as haue reioysed at thy fall, shalbe punyshed. The cities whom thy children serue, and that haue caried awaye thy sonnes, shal be correcte. For like as they be now glad of thy decaye, so shal they mourne in their owne destruction. The ioye off their multitude shalbe taken awaye ad their cheare shalbe turned to sorowe. For a fyre shal fall vpon them from the euerlastinge God, longe to endure: and it shalbe inhabited of deuils for a greate season.

The b. Chaptr.

O IERUSALEM, loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde the ioye, that commeth vnto the from God." For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsakē, and that were scatred abrode) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysinge in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Put of thy mournynge clothes (o Ierusalem) and thy sorrow, and decke the with the worshipec and honoure, that commeth vnto the from God, with euerlastinge glory. God shal put the cloake off rightuousnesse vpon the, and set a crowne off euerlastinge worshipec vpon thine heade: for vpon the will God declare his brightnes, that is vnder the heauen: Yee an euerlastinge name shalbe geuen the of God, with peace of rightuousnesse, & ^h honoure of Gods feare.

Arise o Ierusalem, stōde vp on hye: loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, hauynge God in remembraunce. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shal the LORDE bringe them caried with honoure, as children off ^h kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute mōitaynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fyll the valleys, & so to make them eauen with the grounde: ^h Israel maye be diligēt to lyue vnto ^h honoure of God. The woddes & all pleasaut trees shal ouersadowe Israel, at the cōmaundement of God. For hyther shal God brynge Israel with ioyfull myrth, and in the light of his magesty: with the mercy and rightuousnesse, that cōmeth of himselff.

The bi. Chaptr.

BECAUSE of the synnes that ye haue done agaynst God, ^oye shal be led awaye captyue vnto Babilon, euen off Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon. So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remaine there many yeares, and for a longe season: namely, vij. generacions: & after that wil I bringe you awaye peaceably from thēce. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddes of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens shulders, to cast out a fearfulness before the Heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afrayed, and let not the feare of them ouercome you.

B Therefore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde & before, saye ye in youre hertes: O LORDE, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped? "Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the tymbre of those goddes, ŷ carpēter hath polished them: yee gylted be they, & layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but vayne thinges, & can not speake. Like as a wench ŷ loueth peramours is trymly deckte, euen so are these made & hanged with golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddes vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, & put it to their owne vses: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, & d trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and decke their goddes therewith. Yet can not these goddes delyuer them selues from rust and mothes. ^a Whē they haue couered them with clothynge off purple, they wpe their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amōge thē. One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swerde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murtherers.

C By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: therfore se ŷ ye nether worshipec them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel ŷ a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddes. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the fete of those that come in. And like as ŷ dores are shut in rōūde aboute vpō him, ŷ hath offended the kinge: Or as it were a deed body kepte besyde the graue: Euen so the prestes kepte the dores with barres and lockes, lest their goddes be spoyled with robbers. They set vp cādels before thē (yee verely and ŷ many) wherof they can not se one, but euen as blockes, so stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, ŷ the serpentis and wormes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them & their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, thorow the smoke ŷ is in the temple. The oules, swalowes & byrdes fle vpon them, yee and the cattes runne ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beutifull: for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast in to a fourme, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne vpon mens shulders, as those that haue no fete: wherby they declare vnto men, that they be nothinge worth. Confounded be they then, that worshipec them. For yf they fall to the ground, they can not ryse vp agayne of thē selues: Yee though one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stonde alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that is offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, & abuse it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe & the mēstruous laye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore be not ye afrayde of them. From whence cometh it thē, that they be called goddes? The women syt before the goddes of syluer, golde and wodge, and the prestes syt in their temples, hauynge open clothes, whose heades and beerdies are shauen, and haue nothige vpon their heades: roaringe and cryenge vpon their goddes, as men do at the feast, when one is deed.

E The prestes also take awaye the garmentes of the ymages, and decke their wyues & children withall. Whether it be good or euell ŷ eny man do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kyng, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewarde euell. Though a man make a vowe vnto them & kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. They can not restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe eny mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to ŷ fatherles. Their goddes of wodd, stone, golde & syluer, are but euen as other stones, ŷ be hewē of ŷ mountayne. They ŷ worshipec thē, shal be cōfounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes? yee how darre men call thē goddes? And though the caldees worshiped thē not, hearinge ŷ they were but domme ⁊ coude not speake: Yet they them selues offre vnto Bel, and wolde fayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they coude fele, ŷ maye not moue. But when these mē come to vnderstōdinge, they shall forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greате sorte off women gyrded with coardes, syt in the stretes, ⁊ burne olyue beries. Now yf one off them be conveyed awaye, ⁊ lye with eny soch as come by: she casteth hir neghbouresse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coorde broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ād lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, ŷ they are goddes? Carpenters ⁊ goldsmithes make thē, nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the worke men wil make of them. Yee the goldsmithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thīges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therfore are the thinges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their posterite. For as soone as there cōmeth eny warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ymagyn, where they maye hyde thē selues with thē. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner delyuer thē fro mysfortune? For seynge they be but of wodd, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people ⁊ kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shalbe openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mēs hōdes, ⁊ that God hath nothinge to do with thē. They can set no kyng in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe frō wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that flyeth betwixte heuen and earth.

Whē there happeneth a fyre in to the house of those goddes of wodde, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape ⁊ saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the balkes therin. They can not withstōde eny kyng or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Morouer, these goddes of wodde, of stone, of golde ⁊ syluer maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee ŷ very wicked are stronger thē they. These strype them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde ⁊ syluer frō thē, and so get thē awaye: yet cā they not helpe thē selues. Therfore it is moch better for a man, to be a kinge ⁊ so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherin he ŷ oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a dore in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therin: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mone ⁊ all the starres when they geue their shyne ⁊ light, are obedient, ⁊ do men good: When the lightenyng glistreth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in euery countre, ⁊ whē God cōmaundeth the cloudes to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe frō aboue ⁊ cōmaunded, it burneth vp hilles ād woddos: But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strēghth. Wherefore mē shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they cā nether geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake euell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for ŷ Heithen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mone: yee ŷ vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rofe, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therfore feare thē not. For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothinge, euen so are their goddes of wod, of syluer ⁊ golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrde sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is cast in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodde, syluer and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, ād soone faydeth awaye, ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cōsumed at the last, which shal be a greате cōfucion of the londe. From this chapter vnto the ende, the prophet seith in a vision the buyldinge agayne of Ierusalem, ad the temple: Wherby is describde the mystery off the church off christ, and saluacion of the faithfull in him.

The first Chapter.

IT chaused, in the xxx. yeare the fifth daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the presoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, & I sawe a vision of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kyng Ioachims captiuyte. At the same tyme came f worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi prest, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpo him. a And I loked: & beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greate cloude full of fyre, which with his glistre lightened all rounde aboute.

And in f myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the licknesse of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: sayunge, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

B Their legges were straight, but their fete were like bullockes fete, and they glistred, as it had bene fayre scoured metall. Vnder their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and their wynges were towarde the foure corners: yet were the wynges so, that one euer touched another. b When they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forwarde.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But vpon the left side, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces also and their wynges were spred out aboute: so that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Euery one when it wente, it wente straight forwarde.

Where as the sprete led them, thither they C wente, c and turned not aboute in their goynge.

The fashion and countenaunce of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out a Eze. 10. c.

b Eze. 10. b.

c Eze. 10. c.

off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whē ſ̄ beestes wēte forwarde ⁊ backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whē I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpon the earth with foure faces also like the beestes.

D The fashion ⁊ worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned thē not aboute i their goinge. They were large, greate and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodies were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whē the beestes wēte, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes lift them selues vp from ſ̄ earth, the wheles were lift vp also. Whyther so euer the sprete wente, thither wente they also, ⁊ ſ̄ wheles were lift vp ⁊ folowed thē, for ſ̄ sprete of life was in the wheles. When ſ̄ beestes wēte forth, stode still, or lift them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, ⁊ were lift vp, for ſ̄ breth off life was in the wheles.

E Aboute ouer ſ̄ heades of the beestes there was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Christall, ⁊ that was spread out aboute vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abrode, one towarde another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse of greate waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greate God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode still, they let downe their wynges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboute their heades.

Aboute the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Apon the seate there sat one like a mā. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all off fyre with in from his loynes vpwarde.

And beneth when I looked vpon him vnder ſ̄ loynes, me thought he was like a shyninge fyre, that geueth light on euery syde. Yee the shyne and glistre ſ̄ lightened rounde aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye apeareth in the cloudes. Euē so was the similitude, wherin the glory off the LORDE apeared. Whē I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and herkened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The ij. Chapter.

THEN sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp ⁊ vpon thy fete (O thou sonne of mā) and I will talke with the. "And as he was commonyng with me, the sprete came in to me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I marked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off man: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those runnagates and obstinate people: for they haue takē parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, ^b and their forefathers, vnto this daye.

Yee I will sende ſ̄ vnto a people ſ̄ haue rough vysages and stiff stomackes: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himselff hath spoken, ſ̄ whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde housholde) they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

Therefore (thou sonne off man) feare thē B not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: ^c for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise ſ̄. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwerde housholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obediēt or not, for they are obstinate. Therefore (thou sonne of man) obeye thou all thinges, that I saye vnto ſ̄, and be not thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked housholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I geue the.

So as I was lokyng vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherin was a closed boke: ^d and the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off carefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

The iij. Chapter.

THEN sayde he vnto me: thou sonne of mā, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, ^e and go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he gaue me the boke for to eate, and sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, thy bely shal eate, and thy bowels shalbe fylled with f boke, that I geue the.

 "Then dyd I eate the boke, and it was in my mouth sweter then hony.

And he sayde vnto me: thou sonne of mā, get the soone vnto the house off Israel, ad shewe thē f wordes, that I cōmaunde the:
 for I sende the not to a people that hath a straunge, vnkowne or harde speache, but vnto the house off Israel: Not to many nacions, which haue diuerse speeches and harde languages, whose wordes thou vnderstōdest not: Neuertheles, f I sent the to those people, they wolde folowe the: But the house off Israel wil not folowe f , for they wil not folowe me: f Yee all the house off Israel haue stiff foreheades and harde hertes. Beholde therefore, I will make thy face preuayle agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy foreheade shall be harder then an Adamāt or flynt stone: f that thou mayest feare them f lesse, and be lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwerde housholde.

B He sayde morouer vnto me: thou sonne off man, take diligent hede with thine eares, to f wordes that I speake vnto the, fasten them in thine herte: and go to the presoners off thy people, speake vnto them, ad saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spokē:
 Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the sprete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse of a greate russhinge and remouynge off the most blissed glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that russhed one agaynst another, yee and the ratlynge off the wheles, that were by them, which russhinge f noyse was very greate.

f Now when the sprete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an heuy and a soroufull mynde, but the honde off f LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnynge off the Moneth Abib, I came to the presoners, that dwelt by the water off Cobar, f and remayned in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seuen dayes, beinge very sory.

C And when the seuen dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, f I haue made the a watch man vnto the house of Israel: therfore take good hede to the wordes, and geue them warnynge at my commaundement.

Yff I saye vnto the, concernynge the vngodly mā, that (without doute) he must dye, and thou geuest him not warnynge, ner speak-est vnto him, that he maye turne from his euell waye, and so to lyue: Then shall the same vngodly man dye in his owne vnright-uosnes: but his bloude will I requyre off thyne honde. Neuertheles, yff thou geue warnynge vnto the wicked, and he yet forsake not his vngodlynesse: then shall he dye in his owne wickednesse, but thou hast discharged thy soule.

Now yf a righteous mā go frō his righteous-nesse, and do the thinge that is euell: I will laye a stomblinge blocke before him, and he shall dye, because thou hast not geuen him warninge: Yee dye shall he in his owne synne, so that the vertue, which he did before, shall not be thought vpon: but his bloude will I requyre of thine honde.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhortest the right-uous, that he synne not, and so f righteous do not synne: Then shall he lyue, because he hath receaued thy warnynge, and thou hast discharged thy soule. And there came the hōde off the LORDE vpon me, and he sayde vnto me: Stonde vp, and go in to the felde, f I maye there talke with the.

So when I had rysen vp, and gone forth in to the felde: f Beholde, the glory off the LORDE stode there, like as I sawe it afore, by the water off Cobar.

f Then fell I downe vpon my face, and f sprete came in to me, which set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and sparre thy self in thyne house.
 Beholde (O thou sonne off man) there shall chaynes be brought for the, to bynde the withall, so that thou shalt not escape out off thē. And I will make thy tunge cleue to the rofe off thy mouth, that thou shalt be domme, and not be as a chider with them: for it is an obstinate housholde.

But when I speake vnto the, then open thy mouth, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: who so heareth, let him heare: who so will not, let him leaue: for it is a frauwarde housholde.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THOU sonne off man: take a tyle stone, and laye it before the, and describye vpon it the cite off Ierusalem: how it is beseged, how bulworkes and ströge diches are grauen on euery syde off it: describye also tentes, and an hoost off men rounde aboute it.

Morouer, take an yron panne, and set it betwixe the & y cite in steade off an yron wall, Then set thy face toward it, besege it, and laye ordinaunce agaynst it, to wynde it. This shal be a token vnto the house off Israel. But thou shalt slepe vpon thy left syde, and laye the synne of the house off Israel vpon the.

Certayne dayes apoynted, thou shalt slepe vpon that syde, and beare their synnes.^a Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their synnes) and the nombre off the daies: Three hundredth & xc. dayes must thou beare the wickednesse off the house of Israel. When thou hast fulfilled these dayes, lye downe agayne, and slepe vpon thy right syde xl. dayes, and beare the synnes off the house of Iuda.

B A daye for a yere, ^a a daye (I saye) for a yere, will I euer laye vpon the. Therefore set now thy face agaynst that beseged Ierusalem, and discouer thine arme, that thou mayest prophecie agaynst it.

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou shalt not turne the from one syde to another, till thou hast ended the dayes of thy sege.

Wherefore, take vnto the wheate, barley beanes, growell sede, milium and fitches: and put these together in a vessell, and make the loaves of bred therof, accordinge to the nombre of the dayes that thou must lye vpon y syde: that thou mayest haue bred to eate, for three hundredth and XC. dayes.

And the meate that thou eatest, shall haue a certayne waight apoynted: Namely, twentie syles euery daye. This apoynted meate shalt thou eate daylie, from the begynnyng to the ende.

C Thou shalt dryncke also a certayne measure off water: Namely, the sixte parte of an Hin shalt thou dryncke daylie from the begynnyng to the ende. Barly cakes shalt thou eate, yet shalt thou first strake thē ouer with māś donge, y they maye se it. And with that, sayde the LORDE: 'Euen thus shal the children of Israel eate their defyled bred in the myddest off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will scatere them.

Then sayde I: Oh LORDE God, Beholde, my soule was yet neuer stayned: for fro my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcase, or of that which was slayne of wilde beestes, nether came there euer eny vnclene flesh in my mouth.

Where vnto he answered me, and sayde: Well than, I will graunte the to take cowes donge, for the donge off a man, and to strake the bred ouer with all, before thē.

And he sayde vnto me: ^a Beholde thou sonne off man, I will mynishe all the prouision of bred in Ierusalem, so that they shall weye their bred, and eate it with scarcenesse. But as for water, they shall haue a very litle measure theroff, to drynke. And when they haue nomore bred ner water, one shal be destroyed with another, and famish awaye for their wickednesse.

The 6. Chapter.

TAKE the then a sharpe knyfe (O thou A sonne of man) namely, a rasoure. Take that, and shaue the hayre off thy heade and beard: Then take the scoales and the waight, and deuyde the hayre a sunder. And burne the thirde parte therof in the fyre in the myddest off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe.^c As for the thirde parte that remaineth, cast it in the wynde, and then shewe the bare knyfe.

Yet afterwarde take a litle off the same, & bynde it in thy cote lappe. Then take a curtesy of it, and cast it in the myddest of y fyre, and burne it in the fyre. Out of the same fyre shall there go a flame, vpon the whole house of Israel.

Morouer, thus sayde the LORDE God: B This same is Ierusalem. I set her in the myddest of the Heithen and nacions, that are rounde aboute her, but she hath despised my iudgmētes more then y Gentiles thē selues, and broken my cōmaundementes more then the nacions, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue cast out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as ye with youre wickednesse farre exceede the Heithē, that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue not walked in my lawes, nether haue ye kepte myne ordinaūces) Therefore thus saith ȝ LORDE God :

I will also come vpon the, for in the myddest of the will I syt in iudgmēt, in the sight of the Heithen, and will handle the of soch a fashion, as I neuer dyd before, and as I neuer wil do from that tyme forth, and that because of all thy abhominacions. ^a For in the the fathers shal be fayne to eate their owne sonnes, and the sonnes their owne fathers. Soch a courte will I kepe in the, and the whole remnaunt will I scatre in to all the wyndes.

Ț Wherefore, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) seyng thou hast defyled my Sanctuary, with all maner off abhominacions and with all thy shameful offences: For this cause will I also destroye the. Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the.

^b One thirde parte within the, shall die of the pestilence and of honger: Another thirde parte shall be slayne downe rounde aboute the, with the swearde: The other thirde parte that remaineth, will I scatre abroad towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out the swearde after them. Thus wil I perfourme my indignacion and set my wrath agaynst them, and ease my self. So that when I haue fulfilled myne anger agaynst them, they shall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which with a feruent gelousy haue spoken it.

Ȥ Morouer I will make the waist and abhorred, before all the Heithen that dwell aboute the, and in the sight off all them, that go by the: so that when I punysh the in my wrath, in myne anger, and with the plage off my whote displeasure: thou shalt be a very abhominacion, shame, a gasinge and wondringe stocke, amonge the Heithen that lye aboute the.

Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, and it shall come to passe, when I shute amonge them the perlois dartes of hōger, which shalbe but death: ^c Yee therfore shall I shute them, because I will destroye you. I will encrease hunger, and mynish all the prouysion off bred amonge you.

Plages and mysery will I sende you, yee and wilde beestes also to destroye you. Pestilence and bloudsheddinge shall come vpon you, and the swearde wil I bringe ouer you. Euen I the LORDE, haue sayde it.

The vi. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto Ȥ me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, ^a turne thy face to the mountaynes of Israel, that thou mayest prophecie vnto them, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes off Israel: Thus hath the LORDE God spoken to the mōutaynes, hilles, valleys and dales:

Beholde, I will brynge a swearde ouer you, and destroye youre hie places: I wil cast downe youre altuers, and breake downe youre temples. Your slayne men will I laye before youre goddes, and the deed carcasses off the children off Israel will I cast before their ymagens, youre bones wil I strowe rounde aboute youre altuers, and dwellinge places.

The cities shalbe desolate, ȝ hillchapels layed waist: youre altuers destroyed, ȝ broken: youre goddes cast downe, and taken awaye, youre tēpels layde eawē with the grouēde, youre owne workes clene roted out. Your slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how ȝ I am the LORDE. Those ȝ amōge you haue escaped the swearde, will I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I will scatre you amonge the nacions. ^b And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuyte.

As for that whorish and vnfaithfull herte of theirs, wherwith they runne awaye fro me, I will breake it: yee ȝ put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeased with their selues, for the wickednesses ad abhominacions, which they haue done: and shal lerne to knowe, how that it is not in vayne, that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch mysery vpon them.

The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: Ȥ Smyte thine hondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the abhominacions and wickednesses of the house of Israel, for because of the, they shal perish with the swearde, with hōger and with pestilence. Who so is farre of, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the swearde: and ȝ other that are beseged, shall dye of honger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē youre slayne men lye amōge youre goddes, and aboute youre aulters: vpon all hie hilles and toppes off mountaynes, amōge all grene trees, amonge all thicke okes: euen in the places, where they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols. I will stretch myne honde out vpon them, & will make the londe waist: So that it shall lye desolate and voyde, from the wilderness off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The vii. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: The I call, O thou sonne off man. Thus saieith the LORDE God vnto the londe off Israel: The ende commeth, yee verely the ende commeth vpon all the foure corners off the earth.

But now shall the ende come vpon the: for I will sende my wrath vpō the, and wil punysh the: acordinge to thy waies, and rewarde the after all thy abhominaciōs. ^a Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the, acordinge to thy waies, and declare thy abhominacions. Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saieith the LORDE God: Beholde, one mysery and plage shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, [†] houre is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

The tyme is at honde, the daye of sediciō is hard by, & no glad tidinges vpō the mou-taynes. Therefore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wrath vpon the. I will iudge the after thy waies, and recompence the all thy abhominacions.

^a Myne eye shal not ouersee the, nether wil I spare the: but rewarde the after thy waies, and shewe thy abhominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how [†] I am the LORDE, [†] smytheth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come, the houre is runne out, the rodde florisheth, wyfulnessse waxeth grene, malicious violence is growne vp, and the vngodly waxen to a staff. Yet shall there no complynte be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges.

The tyme cometh, the daye draweth nye:

^c Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that selleth, let him not be sory: for why, ^d Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lyue. For the vision shal come so greatly ouer all, [†] it shal not be hyndered: No mā also with his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life.

The trompettes shall ye blowe, and make you all ready, but no man shall go to the batell, for I am wroth with all the whole multitude.

The swerde shalbe without, pestilence and hunger within: so that who so is in the felde, shalbe slayne with the swerde: ^e and he that is in the cite, shall perish with hunger and pestilence.

And soch as escape and fle from amonge them, shal be vpon the hilles, like as the doudes in the felde: euery one shalbe afayed, because off his owne wickednesse.

^f All hondes shalbe letten downe, and all knees shalbe weake as the water: they shall gyrdde them selues with sack cloth, feare shal fall vpon them. Their faces shall be confounded, and their heades balde: their syluer shall lye in the stretes, and their golde shalbe despised: ^g Yee their syluer and golde maye not deliuer them, in the daye of the fearfull wrath of the LORDE.

They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, nether fyll their emptie belies therwith: For it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costly leueles for their pompe and pryde, ^h but also abhominable ymages and Idols. For this cause will I make them to be abhorred. Morouer, I will geue it in to [†] hondes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to [†] wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

My face wil I turne from thē, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the theues shall go in to it, and suspende it. I wil make clene ryd-daunse, for the londe is whole defyled with vnrightuous iudgment of innocent bloude, & the cite is full off abhominacions.

Wherefore, I will bringe the most cruell tyrauntes from amonge the Heithen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to ceasse, and they shal take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cometh, they shal seke peace, but they shal haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shal folowe another, and one rumoure shal come after another: Then shall they seke visions in vayne at their prophetes. ^a The lawe shal be gone from the prestes, and wysdome from the elders. The kynge shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heuynesse, and y^e hōdes off the people in the londe shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, & accordinge to their owne iudgements will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The viij. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the sixte yeare, the fifth daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the lordes off the councill off Iuda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpō me.

And as I loked vp, I sawe as it were a licknesse off fyre from his loynes downwarde, ^b and from his loynes vpwarde it shyned maruelous cleare.

This symilitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayrie lockes off my heade, and the sprete lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Ierusalem, in to the courte off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very wroth.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: ^c euē as I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, O lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. Then lift I vp myne eyes towarde the north, and beholde: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an aulter made vnto the ymage off prouocation in the very entrynge in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, Seist thou what these do? Seist thou the greate abhominacions that the house off Israel commytte in this place? which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the courte gate: and whē I loked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, dygge thorow the wall. And when I dygged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a dore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy waye in, & loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off wormes & beastes, all Idols and abhominacions of y^e house off Israel paynted euerychone rounde aboute the wall.

^d There stode also before the ymages lxx. lordes of the councill off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Iaasania the sonne off Saphan: And euery one off them had a censure in his honde, & out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, ^e hast thou sene what the Senatours off the house off Israel do secretly, euery one in his chambre? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the worlde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt se the greate abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, towarde the north. And beholde, there sat women mournynge for Thamus. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of mā? Turne y^e aboute, & thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde courte of the LORDES house: & beholde, at the porte of the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the aulter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backs vpon the Temple of the LORDE, & their faces towarde the easte, and these worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Thinketh the house of Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abhominacions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and vndertake to prouoke me vnto anger? Yee & purposly to cast vp their noses vpon me? Therefore wil I also do some thinge in my wrothfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether wil I spare them. ^f Yee and though they crie in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

The ix. Chapter.

A HE cried also with a loud voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, euery man with his weapened honde to the slaughter. Then came there sixe men out of the strete of the vpper porte towards the north, and euery man a weapen in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lynnyng rayment, and a wryters ynnckhorne by his syde.

These wente in, and stode beside the brasen aulter: "for the glory of the LORDE was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the thresholde of the house, & he called the mā, that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him, and the writers ynnckhorne by his syde, and the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye thorow the cite of Ierusalem, and set this marck ¶ Thau vpō the foreheades of them, that mourne, and are sory for all the abhominacions, that be done therein. And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, ouersee none, spare none: ^o Kyll, & destroye both olde men and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

But as for those, that haue this marck ¶ Thau vpō them: se that ye touch them not, and begynne at my Sanctuary. "Then they begāne at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wēte out and slewe downe thorow [¶] cite. Now when they had done [¶] slaughter, & I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, & cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the resydue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpō Ierusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house of Israel and Iuda is very greate: so that the lōde is full of bloude, and [¶] cite full of vnfaithfulnesse: "For they saye: Tush, [¶] LORDE regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therefore will I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether will I spare them, but will recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the mā that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him, and the writers ynnckhorne by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORDE, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The r. Chapter.

A ND as I looked, beholde, In the firmament that was aboute the Cherubins there appeared the similitude of a stole of Saphir vpō them: "Then sayde he that sat therein, to him that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crepte in, that I might se.

Now the Cherubins stode vpō the right syde of the house, when the man wēte in, and the cloude fylled the ynnmermer courte. "But the glory of the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the thresholde of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloudes, and the courte was full of the shyne of the LORDES glory. Yee and the sounde of the Cherubins wynges was herde in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce of the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man [¶] was clothed in lynnyng, to go and take the hote coales from the myddest of [¶] wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode besyde the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth his honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto [¶] fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him (that had on the lynnyng rayment) in his honde: which toke it, and wente out. And vnder the wynges of [¶] Cherubins, there appeared the licknes of a mā's hōde: I sawe also foure wheles besyde the Cherubins, so that by euery Cherub there stode a whele. And the wheles were (to lōke vpon) after [¶] fashion of [¶] precious stone of Tharsis: Yet (vnto the sight) were they fashioned & like, as yf one whele had bene in another.

When they wente forth, they wēte all iiii together, not turnynge aboute in their goinge: But where the first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. "Their whole bodies, their backs, their hōdes & wynges, yee & the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call ʒ wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Euery one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, ⁊ they were lifted vp aboue. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar. C Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: ⁊ when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues vpwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, ʒ wheles were lift vp also with thē, for the sprete of life was in the wheles.

“Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the thresholde of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flacked with their wynges, and lift thē selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Euery one had foure faces, ⁊ euery one foure wynges, ⁊ vnder their winges, as it were mēs hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, euen as I had sene them, by the water of Cobar, ⁊ so was the countenance of thē: Euery one in his goinge wente straight forwarde.

The xi. Chapter.

A MOROUER, the sprete of the LORDE lift me vp, ⁊ brought me vnto ʒ east porte of the LORDES house. And beholde, there were xxv men vnder the dore: amōge whom I sawe Iaasania the sonne of Asur, ⁊ Pheltias the sonne of Banias, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin myschefe, and a wicked councel take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruction at honde, let vs buylde houses: This Ierusalem is the cauldron, ⁊ we be the flesh. Therefore shalt thou prophecie vnto them, yee prophecie shalt thou vnto them, O sonne of man. And with that, fell the sprete of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me:

Speake, thus saith the LORDE: On this maner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) and I knowe the ymaginaciōs of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murthured in this cite, ⁊ filled the stretes full of the slayne.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: B
The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, ⁊ this cite is the cauldron: ^c But I wil bringe you out of it: ye haue drawē out ʒ swearde, eue so wil I also bringe a swearde ouer you, saith ʒ LORDE God. I will dryue you out of this cite and delyuer you in to youre enemies honde, ⁊ wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayne in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal not be youre cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therin: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punysh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in whose commaundementes ye haue not walked, ner kepte his lawes: but ^c haue done after the customes of the Heithen, that lie rounde aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne C of Banias dyed. Then fell I downe vpō my face, ⁊ cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then vterly destroye all the remnaunt in Israel? And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Thy brethren, thy kynsfolke, ⁊ ʒ whole house of Iuda, which dwell at Ierusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therefore tell them, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amōge the Gentiles, ⁊ scatre you amonge the nacions, ⁊ I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londes where ye shall come. Tell them also, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nacions, ⁊ bringe you from the countrees where ye be scatred, ⁊ will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: ⁊ thither shal ye come. And as for all impedimentes, ⁊ all youre abhominacions: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, ⁊ wil plante B a new sprete within youre bowels. “That stony herte wil I take out of youre body, ⁊ geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe myne ordinaunces, ⁊ do them: that ye maye be my people, and I youre God. But loke whose hertes are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked lyuynges: Those mens dedes will I bringe vpon their owne heades, saith the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their winges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. "So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of the cite, & stode vpon the mount of the cite towarde the east. But the wynde toke me vp, & in a vision (which came by the sprete of God) it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the presoners. Then the vision that I had sene, vanyshed awaye from me. So I spake vnto the presoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

The xij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of mā, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwerde housholde: which haue eyes to se, & yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate housholde. Therefore (O thou sonne of man) make thy gere redy to flit, and go forth by fayre daye light, & they maye se. Yee euē in their sight shalt thou go from thy place to another place: yf peradventure they wil conside, & they be an vnobedient housholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by fayre daye light, that they maie se: & thou thy self shalt go forth also at euē in their sight, as a mā doth whē he flitteth.

Dygge thorow the wall, that they maye se, and beare thorow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Hyde thy face that thou se not & earth, for I haue made the a shewtokē vnto the house of Israel. Now as & LORDE cōmaunded me, so I dyd: & gere that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At euen I brake downe an hole thorow the wall with my honde: & when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpō my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornyng, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, & frauwerde housholde axe the, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: This punyshment toucheth the chefe rulers at Ierusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am youre shewtoken: like as I haue done, so shal it happen vnto you: Flyt shal ye also, and go in to captiuyte. "The chefest that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie stuff there thorow: He shal couer his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

My lyne will I sprede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, & carie him to Babylon, in the lōde of the Caldees: which he shal not se, & yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hoostes that be aboute him: I will scatre them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them. "So when I haue scatred them amonge the Heithen, and strowed them in the londes: they shal knowe, that I am & LORDE. But, I will leaue a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger & pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the Heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fear full trēblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnessse & sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou in this maner: Thus saith the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Ierusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke youre water with heuynesse: Yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shalbe layde waist, for & wickednesse of them that dwell therein. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what maner of byworde is that, "which ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in commynge,¹ all the visiois are of none effecte: Tell them therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: I will make that byworde to cease, so that it shall nomore be comonly vsed in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shalbe fulfilled. There shall no vision be in wayne, nether eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For it is I the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I ^ſ LORDE speake, it shal be perfourmed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee euen in youre dayes (O ye frauwarde housholde) will I deuyse some thinge, & bringe it to passe, saieth the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe: It is farre of yet, the thinge that he prophecietieth. Therefore saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saieth the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel: & saye thou vnto them that prophecie out of their owne hertes: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saieth the LORDE God: "Wo be vnto those folish prophetes, that folowe their owne sprete, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the foxes vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, ^b that mē might abyde the parell in the daye of the LORDE. Wayne thinges they se, & tell lies, to mayntene their preachings withall. The LORDE (saye they) hath spokē it, when in very dede the LORDE hath not sent them. Wayne visiōs haue ye sene, & spokē false prophecies, when ye saye: the LORDE hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

Therefore, thus saieth the LORDE God: Because youre wordes be wayne, & ye seke out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saieth ^ſ LORDE. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out wayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the counsell of my people, ner written in the boke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the londe of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE God. And that for this cause: "they haue disceaued my people, & tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, & they dawbe it with lowse claye. "Therefore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered morter, that it shall fall. For there shal come a greate shuwer of rayne, greate stones shall fall vpon it, & a sore storme of wynde shal breake it, so shal ^ſ wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the morter, that ye dawbed it withall? Therefore thus saieth the LORDE God: I will breake out in my wrothfull displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shuwer of rayne, & hale stones in my wrath, to destroye withall.

As for ^ſ wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered morter, I wil breake it downe, & make it eauen with the ground: so that the foundation therof shal remoue, & it shal fall, yee & ye youre selues shall perish in the myddest therof: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. Thus wil I perfourme my wrath vpon this wall, & vpon them that haue dawbed it with vntempered morter, and then will I saye vnto you: The wall is gone, & the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophecie vnto the cite of Ierusalem, & loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saieth the LORDE God. Wherefore (o thou sonne of mā,) set thy face agaynst the daughters of thy people, which prophecie out of their owne hertes: & speake thou prophecie agaynst them, & saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Wo be vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder all arme holes, and bolsters vnder the heades both of yonge and olde, to catch soules withall. For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captiuyte, "ye promyse them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for an hand full of barley, & for a peece of bred: when ye kylle the soules of them that dye not, & promyse life to them, that lyue not: Thus ye dyssemble with my people, ^ſ beleueth youre lies.

Wherefore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil also vpō the pillowes, wherewith ye catch the soules in flyenge: thē will I take from youre armes, & let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Your bolsters also wil I

The xiiij. Chapter.

A THERE resorted vnto me certayne of ȳ elders of Israel, ^a & sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, these men beare their Idols in their hertes, & go purposly vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then axe counsell at me? Therefore speake vnto them, & saye: thus saith the LORDE God: Euery man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stamble in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, to enquire eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORDE myself geue answer, accordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be snared in their owne hertes, because they be clene gone fro me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saith the LORDE God: "Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youre faces from all youre abhominacions. For euery man (whether he be of the house of Israel, or a straunger, that sogeourneth in Israel) which departeth fro me, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stomblinge in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, for to axe counsell at me thorow him: vnto ȳ man wil I the LORDE geue answer, by myne owne self.

B I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comon byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how ȳ I am the LORDE. "And yf that prophet be disceaued, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORDE myself haue disceaued that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shall be punyshed for their wickednesse.

Accordinge to ȳ synne of him that axeth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that ȳ house of Israel be led nomore fro me thorow erreure, and be nomore defyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synneth agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hōde vpon it, and destroye all the prouysion of their bred, and sende derth vpon them, to destroye man & beast in the londe. "And though Noe, Daniel and Iob these thre men were amonge them, yet shal they in their rightuousnesse delyuer but their owne soules, saith the LORDE God.

Yf I bringe noysome beestes in to the londe, to waist it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therin for beestes: yf these thre men also were in the londe, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner daughters, but be only delyuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waist.

Or, yf I bringe a swearde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and beast in it, and yf these thre men were therin: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but only be saued them selues.

D Yf I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my sore indignacion vpon it in bloude, so that I rote out of it both man and beast, and yf Noe, Daniel and Iob were therin: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but saue their owne soules in their rightuousnesse.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: "Though I sende my foure trublous plagis vpon Ierusalem: the swearde, hunger, perous beestes and pestilence, to destroye man and beast out of it: yet shal there a remnaunt be saued therin, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and daughters. waye, and what they take in honde, ⁊ ye shal be cōforted, as touching all the plagis that I haue brought vpon Ierusalem.

They shall comforte you, when ye se their waye and workes: and ye shal knowe, how ⁊ it is not without a cause, that I haue done so agaynst Ierusalem, as I dyd, saith the LORDE God.

The rb. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What commeth of the vyne amonge all other trees? and of the wyne stocke, amōge all other tymbre of the grouae? Do mē take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall? Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon? Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to aszshes. Is it mete then for eny worke? No.

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wod: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Ierusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shall go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shall consume them. ^aThen shal ye knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the londe waist: because they haue so sore offended, saith the LORDE God.

The rbi. Chapter.

A GAYNE, the worde of the LORDE spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Ierusalem their abominacions, and saye: thus saith the LORDE God vnto Ierusalem: Thy progeny and kynred came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amorite, thy mother a Cethite. In ⁊ daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, ⁊ stringe of thy nauel was not cut of: thou wast not bathed in water to make the clene: Thou wast nether rubbed with salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded the so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for ⁊, or to shewe the soch fauoure, but thou wast viterly cast out vpon ⁊ felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and save the troden downe in thine owne bloude, ⁊ sayde vnto the: thou shalt be poured from thine owne bloude, frō thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clensed. ^bSo I planted the, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, ⁊ waxē greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by ⁊, ⁊ loked vpon the: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee euē the tyme to wowe the. Then spred I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: ^cYee I made an ooth vnto the, ⁊ married my self with the (saith the LORDE God) ⁊ so thou becamest myne owne. Then waszshed I the with water, ⁊ poured thy bloude from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I gaue the chaunge of raymentes, I made the shues of Taxus leather: I gyrted ⁊ aboute with white sylke, I clothed the with kerchues, I decked the with costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spāges vpō thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, ⁊ set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou deckte with syluer ⁊ golde, ⁊ thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of nedle worke ⁊ of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothinge but symnels, honny ⁊ oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou ⁊ beutifull, yee euen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the Heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpō the, saith the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, ⁊ played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, ⁊ hast fulfilled their desyres: Yee thou hast taken thy garmētēs of dyuerse colours, ⁊ deckte thine aulters therwith,^d where vpon thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shalbe. ^eThe goodly ornamētēs ⁊ Jewels which I gaue the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou takē, ⁊ made the mēs ymages therof, and committed whordome withall.

 came also to passe, saie the LORDE God:
 C Thou hast takē thine owne sonnes ⁊ daughters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me: "and these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whordome of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slayest my children, and geuest them ouer, to be brēt vnto them? And yet in all thy abhominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembred the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, ⁊ troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto the, saie the LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and brodel houses in euery place: yee at the heade of euery strete hast thou buylded the an aluter. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred: thou hast layed out thy legges to euery one that came by, and multipliēd thine whordome. ^a Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neighbours, which had moch flesh: ⁊ thus hast thou vsed thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde ouer the, and wil mynish thy stoare of fode, and delyuere the ouer in to the willes of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. ^e Thou hast played the whore also with the Assirians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, ⁊ not had ynough. Thus hast thou still comitted thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I circuncide thine herte (saie the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou precious whore:
 buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of euery strete, and thy brodel houses in all places?
 Thou hast not bene as an other whore, ^f maketh booste of hir wynnynge: but as a wife ^g breaketh wedlocke, ⁊ taketh other in steade of hir huszboēde. Giftes are geuen to all other whores, but thou geuest rewardes vnto all thy louers: ⁊ offrest them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, ⁊ to committe fornicaciō with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yee there hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, ⁊ no rewarde is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therfore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saie the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spēt thy moneye, ⁊ discouered thy shame, thorow thy whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Idols of thy abhominacions in the bloude of thy children, whom thou hast geuen them: ^h Beholde therfore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee ⁊ all them whom thou faourest, and euery one that thou hatest: ⁱ and will discouer thy shame before the, that they all maye se thy fylthines.

Morouer, I wil iudge the as a breaker of wedlocke and a murthurer, and recompence the thine owne bloude in wrath and gelousy.
 I wil geue the ouer in to their power, that shal breake downe thy stewes, and destroye thy brodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy fayre ⁊ beutifull Iewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked ⁊ bare: ^j Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, ⁊ slaye the downe with their sweardes. They shall burne vp thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to cease, so that thou shalt geue out no mo rewardes.

Shulde I make my wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and nomore to be displeased? seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges? Beholde therfore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saie the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer dyd vnto the, accordinge to thy wickednesse and all thy abhominacions. Be-holde, all they ^k vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a daughter.

Thou art euen thy mothers owne daughter, that hath cast of hir houszbonde and hir children: Yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsoke their huszboēdes and their children. ^l Youre mother is a Cethite, and youre father an Amorite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir daughters that dwel vpō

But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on thy right hōde, is Sodoma and hir daughters. Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abhominacions: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

“As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir daughters, hath not done so euell, as thou and thy daughters. Beholde, the synnes of thy sister Sodoma were these: Pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Idilnesse: these things had she and hir daughters. Besides that, they reached not their honde to the poore and nedy, but were proude, and dyd abhominable thinges before me: ^atherfore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. ^cNether hath Samaria done half of thy synnes, yee thou hast exceeded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abhominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therefore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast ouercome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abhominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therfore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.

^f As for their captiuyte, namely the captiuyte of Sodoma and hir daughters: the captiuyte of Samaria and hir daughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuyte amōge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir daughters: Samaria and hir daughters with thy self & thy daughters, shalbe brought agayne to youre olde estate. Whē thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Philistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthynes and abhominacion, saith the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despyded the ooth, and broken the couenaunte. Neuertheles, I wil remembre the couenaunt, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shall be an euerlasting couenaunt: So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of thē: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil make thy daughters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. ^e And so I wil renuew my couenaunt with the, & thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thincke vpō it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgeuen the, all that thou hast done, saith the LORDE God.

The xvij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto ^a me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a darcke speakyng and a parable, ^b vnto the house of Israel, and saye: ^c Thus saith the LORDE God: There came a greate Aegle with greate wynges, yee with mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a branch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it in to the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a branch of the londe, and planted it in a frutefull grounde, he brought it vnto greate waters, & set it as a wylle tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greate wyne stocke, but lowe by the grounde: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, & spread out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greate one, which had greate wynges and many fethers: and beholde, ^d & rotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spread out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Neuertheles it was plāted vpon a good grounde besyde greate waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. ^e Speake thou therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prospere? shal not his rotes be plucked out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythereed and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shal it prospere therfore? Shal it not be dried vp and withered, yee euen in the shuting out of his blossomes, as soone as ^f y east wynde bloweth?

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: "Speake to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the kinge of Babilon came to Ierusalem, and toke the kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the kinges sede, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an ooth of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, & sent his Embassitours in to Egipte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in y place where the kinge dwelleth, that made him kinge: whose ooth he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hath broken. Nether shall Pharao with his greate hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp diches, and set vp bulworkes to destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despised the ooth, and broken the couenaunt (where as he yet gaue his honde thervpon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne ooth that he hath despised, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade.^b I will cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I cary him, there will I punysh him, because of the greate offence that he made me. As for those y fle from him out of y hoost, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. The residue shalbe scatred towardes all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I will also take a braunch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greate Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that I haue dryed vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to florish: Euen I the LORDE y spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The xviij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes,^c and the childres teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saith y LORDE God, ye shal vse this byworde nomore in Israel.

^d Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is y sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. ^e Yf a man be godly, and do the thinge that is equall & right, (he eateth not vpon the hilles: he lifteth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he medleth with no menstruous woman: he greueth no body: he geueth his detter his pledge agayne: he taketh none other mans good by violence: he parteth his mete with the hongrie: he clotheth the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon vsury: ^f he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdraweth his honde from doinge wronge: he hadleth faithfully betwixte man & man: he walketh in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & perfourmeth the faithfully: ^g This is a righteous mā, he shal surely lyue, saith the LORDE God.

Yf he now get a sonne, that is a murthurer, a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all) ^h he eateth vpon the hilles: he defyleth his neighbours wife: he greueth the poore and nedy: he robbeth and spoyleth: he geueth not the detter his pledge agayne: he lifteth vp his eyes vnto Idols, & medleth with abhominable thinges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not lyue. Seinge he hath done all these abominacions, he shal dye: his bloude shalbe vpon him.

As for his father: because he oppressed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wyckedly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his owne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherefore thē shulde not this sonne beare his fathers synne? Therefore: because the sonne hath done equyte and right, hath kepte all my commaundementes, and done them: therefore, shall he lyue in dede.

"The same soule ŷ synneth, shall dye. The sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, nether shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf ŷ vngodly will turne awaye, from all his synnes that he hath done, and kepe all my commaundemētes, and do the thinge ŷ is equall & right: doutles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shal not be thought vpon: but in his rightuousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. D For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saith the LORDE God? but rather that he conuerte, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne awaye from his rightuousnes, and do iniquyte, accordinge to all the abhominacions, that ŷ wicked mā doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuousnes that he hath done, shall not be thought vpo: but in the fawte that he hath offended withall, and in the synne that he hath done, he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: "Tush, the waye of ŷ LORDE is not indifferēt. Heare therefore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a rightuous mā turneth awaye from his rightuousnesse, and medleth with vngodlynes: he must dye therein: Yee for the vnrightuousnes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne: E when the wicked man turneth awaye from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth the thinge which is equall and right: he shal saue his soule alyue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all the vngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shall lyue, and not dye.

And yet saith the house of Israel: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not equall. Are my wayes vnright, o ye house of Israel? Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil iudge euery man, accordinge to his wayes, O ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE God. "Wherefore, be conuerted, and turne you clene from all youre wickednesse, so shal there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye frō you all youre vngodlynesse, that ye haue done: "make you new hertes and a new sprete. Wherefore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel? seynge I haue no pleasure in ŷ death of him that dyeth, saith the LORDE God. Turne you then, and ye shal lyue.

The xix. Chapter.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope & comforth was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a lyon of him: which wente amonge the lyons, & became a fearece lyon: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folcke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waist: In so moch that the whole londe and euery thinge therein, were vtterly desolate, thorow the very voyce of his roaringe.

The xx. Chapter.

IN the xvij yeaere the x daye of the v Moneth, it happened, ^a that certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to axe counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to axe any thinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE,) I will geue you no answer. Wilt thou not reprove them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprove them? Shewe them the abhominacions of their forefathers, τ tell thē: Thus saith the LORDE God: ^b In the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde vpon the sede of the house of Iacob, τ shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: Yee when I lifte vp myne honde ouer thē, and sayde: I am the LORDE youre God, euen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had prouyded for them, which floweth with mylcke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lōde amonge all other: Then sayde I vnto them: ^c Cast awaye euery man the abhominacions that he hath before him, and defyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE youre God.

^d But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to cast awaye euery man the abhominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made me to poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the Heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them in to the wilderness: ^e I gaue them my commaundementes, τ shewed thē my lawes: which who so kepeth shal lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and therby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderness, they wolde not walke in my commaundementes, they haue cast awaye my lawes: (which who so kepeth shulde lyue in them,) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

^f Thē I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, τ to cōsume them in the wilderness. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the Heithē, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderness, that I wolde not bringe them in to the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with mylcke τ hony, τ is a pleasure of all londes: τ ^g y because they refused my lawes, τ walked not in my cōmaundemētes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Neuertheles myne eye spared thē, so ^h y I wolde not vtterly slaye thē, τ cōsume thē in the wilderness. Morouer, I sayde vnto their sonnes in ⁱ wilderness: ^j walke not in the statutes of youre forefathers, kepe not their ordinaunces, and defyle not youre selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE youre God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes τ do them, halowe my Sabbathes: ^k for they are a token betwixte me τ you, that ye maye knowe, how ^l y I am the LORDE. ^m Notwithstōdinge, their sonnes rebelled against me also: they walked not in my statutes, ⁿ they kepthe not my lawes to fulfill them (which he that doth shal lyue in them) nether halowed they my Sabbath dayes. Thē I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them in the wilderness. Neuertheles I with drewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the Heithē, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderness, that I wolde scatre them amonge the Heithen, and strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherefore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes thorow the which they shulde not lyue, & I vnhalowed them in their owne giftes: (when I appoynted for my self all their first borne) to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Therefore (O thou sonne of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saith the LORDE God: Besyde all this, youre forefathers haue yet blasphemed me more, and greatly offended agaynst me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, & I promysed to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thicke trees: they made there their offerings, and prouoked me with their oblacions, makinge swete sauoures there, & poured out their drinke offerings. Then I axed them: what haue ye to do with all, that ye go thither? And therefore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherefore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Ye are euen as vnclene as youre forefathers, & I committe whordome also with their abhominaciōs. In all youre Idols, where vnto ye bringe youre oblacions, & to whose honoure ye burne youre children: ye defyle youre selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye thē come, and axe eny question at me? O ye housholde of Israel? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) ye get no answere of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the Heithen, & do as other people in the londe, wod & stone wil we worshippe.

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) I myself, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretchedout arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherin ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie hōde, with a stretchedout arme & with indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you in to the wilderness of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished youre forefathers in the wilderness, so wil I punish you also, saith the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenaunt. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of youre habitacion: as for the londe of Israel, they shall not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Go now then (saith the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blaspheme my holy name with youre offrynges and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, eue vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worshipe me: and in the same place will I fauoure them, and there will I requyre youre heauceoffringes, and the firstlinges of youre oblacions, with all youre holy thinges.

I wil accepte youre swete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherin ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the Heithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brought you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same lōde, that I swore to geue vnto youre fore fathers. There shal ye call to remembrance youre owne wayes and all youre ymaginacions, wherin ye haue bene defyled: and ye shal be displeased with youre owne selues, for all youre wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I entreate you after my name, not after youre wicked wayes, ner accordinge to youre corrupte workes: o ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of & LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of mā, set thy face toward the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde toward the south: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil kyndle a fyre in the, & shal cōsume the

No man shal be able to quench his flame, but all that loketh from the south to the north, shal be brent therin: ⁊ all flesh shal se, that I the LORDE haue kyndled it, so that no man maye quench it. Then sayde I: O LORDE, they wil saye of me: "Tush, they are but fables, that he telleth.

The xxi. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face towarde Ierusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, ⁊ prophecie agaynst the londe of Israel, saye to the lode of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, ⁊ wil drawe my swearde out of y sheth, ⁊ rote out of y both the righteous ⁊ the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the righteous ⁊ wicked, therefore shal my swearde go out of his sheth, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue drawn my swearde out of the sheth, ⁊ it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therfore (o thou sonne of man) y thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherfore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydings that commeth, at the which all hertes shall melt, all hondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal faynte, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it commeth ⁊ shal be fulfilled, saieth the LORDE God.

Agayne, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecie, and speake: Thus saieth the LORDE God: speake, the swearde is sharpened ⁊ wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, ⁊ scoured y it maye be bright. O, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to y dighting, y good holde maye be takē of it. This swearde is sharpened ⁊ dight, y it maye be geuen in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, ⁊ all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shall be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpō thy thee, for, wherfore shulde not the plage ⁊ staff of iudgmēt come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, ⁊ smyte thine hōdes together: make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, y man-slayers swearde, that swearde of the greates slaughter, which shal smyte them, euen in their preuy chambers: to make them abaszshed ⁊ faynte at the hertes, ⁊ in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is it, how wel dight ⁊ mete for y slaughter? Get the to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the lefte, whither so euer thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my wrothfull indignacion: Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORDE came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two stretes, that the swearde of y kinge of Babilō maye come. Both these stretes shall go out of one londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the strete shal he chose him out a corner. Make y a strete, that the swearde maye come towarde Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Ierusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shall stonde in the turnyng of the waye, at the heade of the two stretes: to axe counsell at the soysayers, castinge the lottes with his arowes, to axe counsell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyuer. But the soysayenge shall poynte to the right syde vpon Ierusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greates noyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batell-rammes agaynst the gates, to graue vp dyches, ⁊ to make bulworkes.

Neuertheles, as for y soysayenge, they shall holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they them selues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be takē and wonne. Therefore saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as ye youre selues shewe youre offence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: Yee in so moch (I saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion therof, ye shalbe taken by violence.

O thou shameful wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shall haue an ende: Thus saieth the LORDE God: take awaye the mytre, and put of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them will I, and destroye them: and that shall not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the iudgment belongeth, and to whom I haue geue it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophecy, & speake: ^aThus saith the LORDE God to the children of Ammon, & to their blasphemy, speake thou: The swearde, the swearde, is drawn forth alreedy to the slaughter, & scoured that it glistreth (because thou hast loked the out vanities, & prophecied lyes) ^bit maye come vpon thy necke, like as vpo the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vp agayne in to the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe where thou wast norished & borne, and poure my indignacion vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wrath, and delyuer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and thy bloude shall be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembrance. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

The xxij. Chapter.

^a MOROUER, the worde of ^b LORDE came vnto me, & sayde: Thou sonne of man, wilt thou not reprove this bloudsturie cite? Shewe thei their abhominaciōs, & tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: O thou cite, ^cthou sheddest bloude in ^dmyddest of the, ^ethy tyme maye come also: and makest the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thy self guilty, in ^fthy bloude ^gthou hast shed: & defyled ^hthy idols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, & made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therefore will I make ⁱthy to be confounded amonge the Heithē, & to be despised in all the lōdes, whether they be nye or farre frō the: they shal laugh ^jthy to scorne, thou ^kthou hast gottē the so foule a name, & art full off myschefe. ^lBeholde, the rulers of Israel haue brought euery man his power, to shed bloude in the. In the haue they despised father & mother, in the haue they oppressed the straunger, in the haue they vexed the wyddowe & the fatherlesse. Thou hast despysed my Sāctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. ^mMurtherers are there in the, that shed bloude, & eate vpon the hilles, and in the they vse vnhappyenesse.

In ⁿthy haue they discouered their fathers shame, in the haue they vexed women in their sicknesse. ^oEuery mā hath dealete shamefully with his neighbours wife, & abhominably defyled his daughter in lawe. In the hath euery man forced his owne sister, ^peuē his fathers daughter: Yee giftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed bloude. Thou hast taken vsury & encrease, thou hast oppressed thy neighbours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saith the LORDE God. Beholde, I haue smytten my hondes vpo thy couetousnesse, that thou hast vsed, and vpon the bloude which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende them selues, in the tyme that I shall bringe vpon the? Euen I the LORDE that speake it, will bringe it also to passe.

^qI will scatere the amonge the Heithen, & strowe the aboute in the lōdes, and wil cause thy fylthynesse to cease out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the Heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse. ^rAll they that shulde be brasse, tynne, yro & leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so much as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: I will brynge you together vnto Ierusalem, like as syluer, brasse, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blowne there vnder to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wrath and indignacion. I will brynge you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therin.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therin: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue poured my wrath vpon you.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of mā, tell her: Thou art an vn clene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wrath: ^sthy prophetes that are in the, are sworne together to deuoure soules, like as a roaring Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in ꝑ. Thy prestes breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. "They put no dyfference betwene the holy and vnholy, nether discern betwene the clene and vnclene: they turne their eyes fro my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them.

"Thy rulers in the are like rauyshinge wolues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetes, they dawbe with vntempered claye, they se vanities, and prophecie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORDE God sayeth so, where as the LORDE hath not spoken. The people in the londe vseth wicked extorciō and robbery. "They vex the poore and nedy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vp the hedge, and set him self in the gappe before me in the lōdes behalfe, ꝑ I shulde not vitterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therefore wil I poure out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: their owne wayes wil I recompence vpō their heades, saith the LORDE God.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: "These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egipte. There were their brestes brusshed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest of them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and daughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Ierusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whorynge, when I had takē her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: "euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckte in costly aray: fayre yonge men, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yonge men off Assiria: Yee she was madde vpon them, and defyled herself with all their Idols. Nether ceased she frō the forniciaciō, that she vsed with the Egipcians: for in hir youth they laye with her, they brusshed the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. "Wherfore, I deliuered her in to ꝑ hōdes of hir louers, euen the Assirians, whom she so loued. "These discouered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and daughters, and slewe her with the swerde: An euell name gat she of all people, ad they punyshed her.

"Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, ad destroyed herself with inordinate loue, more then she, ꝑ exceeded hir sister in whordome: she loued ꝑ Assirians (which also laye with her) namely, the prynces ꝑ greate lordes, that were clothed with all maner of gorgious apparell, all lusty horsmen and fayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled a like. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with fayre gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, lokinge all like prynces (after ꝑ maner of the Babiloniās and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediately, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue vpon them, and sent messaūgers for them in to the londe off the Caldees.

Now when the Babiloniās came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with their whordome, and so was she poluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was discouered ꝑ sene: "then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Neuertheles she vsed hir whordome euer the longer the more, and remembered the dayes off hir youth, wherin she had played the harlot in the londe off Egipte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like ꝑ flesh of Asses,⁶ and their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast renewed the fylthynesse of thy youth, when thy louers bressed thy pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egipte.

Therefore (o Ooliba) thus saith ꝑ LORDE God. I will rayse vp thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians:

all yonge and fayre louers: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good horsmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, ⁊ a greate multitude of people: which shal be harnesssed aboute the on euery syde, with brestplates, sheldes and helmettes. I will punysh ⁊ before them, yee they thē selues shal punysh the, acordinge to their owne iudgmēt. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shal deale cruelly with the. They shal cut of thy nose and thine eares, and the remnaunt shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall cary away thy sonnes and daughters, ⁊ the resydue shalbe brent in the fyre. They shal strype the out of thy clothes, ⁊ cary thy costly Jewels away with them.

⁊ Thus will I make an ende off thy fylthy-nesse ⁊ whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egipte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, ⁊ cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egipte. For thus saieith the LORDE: Beholde, I will deliyuer ⁊ in to the hōdes of them, whom thou hatest: yee euen in to the hondes of them, with whō thou hast fulfilled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with ⁊: All thy labour shal they take with them, and leaue the naked and bare, and thus the shame of thy filthy whordome shal come to light. All these thinges shal happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled thy self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister, therefore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy honde.

Thus saieith the LORDE God: Thou shalt drynke off thy sisters cuppe, how depe ⁊ farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorn, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off dronckennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of thy sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruccion ⁊ waistinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out euē to ⁊ dregges, yee thou shalt eate vp the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: For euen I haue spoken it, saieith the LORDE God.

⁊ Therefore thus saieith ⁊ LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast forgottē me, ⁊ cast me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylthinesse ⁊ whordome. The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reproue Oola ⁊ Ooliba? Shewe thē their abhominaciōs: namely, ⁊ they haue brokē their wedlocke, ⁊ stayned their hōdes with bloude: yee euen with their Idols haue they committed aduoutry, ⁊ offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. ⁊ Yee ⁊ this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sāctuary in that same daye, ⁊ haue vnhalowed my Sab-bath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. Lo, this haue they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent thy messaungers for men out of farre cōtrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy self off the best fashion: ⁊ thou sattet vpō a goodly bed, ⁊ a table spred before the: whervpon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greate cheare with her, ⁊ ⁊ the men ⁊ were sent frō farre cōtrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue bracelettes vpon their hondes, ⁊ set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doute, these wil vse their harlotry also with yōder olde whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Oola ⁊ Ooliba, those filthy women.

“O ye all that loue vertue and rightuous-nes, iudge thē, punysh them: as aduouters and murderers ought to be iudged and punyshed. For they are breakers off wed-locke, and the bloude is in their hondes. Wherefore thus saieith the LORDE God: bringe a greate multitude off people vpon them, and make them be scatred and spoyled: these shal stone them, and gorre them with their sweardes. They shal slaye their sonnes and daughters and burne vp their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all soch fylthyneſs out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vnclēnesse. And so they shall laye youre fylthinesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shalbe punyshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: ⁊ ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

sonne off man, wryte vp the name off this daye, yee euē ſ̄ houre of this present daye : when the kynge of Babilon ſet himſelf agaynſt Ieruſalē. ^a Shewe ſ̄ obſtinate houſholde a parable, & ſpeake vnto thē : Thus ſayeth the LORDE God : Get the a pot, ſet it on, & poure water in to it : put all the peces together in it, all the good peces : the loyne and the ſhulder, & ſyll it with the beſt bones. Take one off the beſt ſhepe, & an heape off bones withall : let it boyle well, & let the bones ſeyth well therein.

With that, ſayde the LORDE God on this manner : ^b Wo be vnto the bloody cite of ſ̄ pot, wherupon the ruſtyneſſe hāgeth, and is not yet ſcoured awaye. Take out the peces that are in it, one after another : there nede no lottes be caſt therefore, for the bloude is yet in it. Vpon a playne drye ſtone hath ſhe poured it, and not vpon the grōunde, that it might be couered with duſt. And therefore haue I letten B her poure hir bloude vpon a playne drye ſtony rocke, becauſe it ſhulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wrathfull indignacion and vengeance vpon her.

Wherfore, thus ſaieth ſ̄ LORDE God : O, wo be vnto that bloudthurſtie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde : beare thou ſ̄ bones together, kyndle thou the fyre, ſeeth the fleſh, let all be well ſoddē, that the bones maye be ſuckte out. Morouer, ſet the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote : that the fylth and ruſtyneſſe maye be conſumed. But it will not go off, there is ſo moch off it : the ruſtyneſſe maye be brent out. Thy filthineſſe is abhominable, for I wolde haue clenſed the, but thou woldeſt not be clenſed. Thou canſt not be poured from thine vnclenneſſe, till I haue poured my wrathfull indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue ſo deuyſed : Yee it is come therto alledy, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not ſpare, I will not be intreated : but accordinge to thy wayes & ymaginacions, thou ſhalt be punyſhed, ſaieth the LORDE God.

C And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge : Thou ſonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleaſure off thine eyes with a plague : yet ſhalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therefore : thou mayeſt mourne by thy ſelf alone, but vſe no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy ſhues vpon thy fete, couer not thy face, and eate no mourners bred. So I ſpake vnto the people by tymes in the mornynge, and at euen my wyfe dyed : then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was cōmaunded. And ſ̄ people ſayde vnto me : wilt thou not tell vs, what that ſignifieth, which thou doeſt ? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, ſayēge : Tell the houſe of Iſrael, thus ſaieth ſ̄ LORDE God : beholde, I wil ſuſpende my Sanctuary : euē the glory of youre power, the pleaſure of youre eyes, and the thinge that ye loue : youre ſonnes and daughters whom ye haue left, ſhal fall thorow the ſwerde.

Like as I haue done, ſo ſhall ye do alſo : D Ye ſhal not hyde youre faces, ye ſhal eate no mourners bred : youre bonettes ſhal ye haue vpon youre heades, & ſhues vpon youre fete. Ye ſhal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre synnes ye ſhal be ſorowfull, and one repēte with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre ſhewtokē. For loke as he hath done, ſo (when this commeth) ye ſhall do alſo : that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am ſ̄ LORDE God. But beholde, O thou ſonne of man : In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the luſt off their eyes, the burthē of their bodies : namely, their ſonnes and daughters : Thē ſhall there one eſcape, and come vnto the, for to ſhewe the. In that daye ſhal thy mouth be opened to him, which is eſcaped, that thou mayeſt ſpeake, and be nomore domme : Yee and thou ſhalt be their ſhewtokē, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xrb. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge : Thou ſonne of man, ſet thy face agaynſt ſ̄ Ammonites, ^c prophecy vpon them, and ſaye vnto the Ammonites : Heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus ſaieth the LORDE God : For ſo moch as thou ſpeakeſt ouer my Sanctuary : A ha, I trow it be now ſuſpended : and ouer the londe of Iſrael, I trow it be now deſolate : yee & ouer the houſe of Iuda, I trow they be now led awaye preſoners : Beholde, I will deliuer ſ̄ to the people of the eaſt, ſ̄ they maye haue the in poſſeſſion : theſe ſhal ſet their caſtels and houſes in the. mylcke. As for Rabath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepefold: and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine hondes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioysed in thine herte ouer the londe of Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the also, and delyuer the, to be spoyled off the Heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the be layed waist, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith \hat{y} LORDE God: "For so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Iuda, it is but like as all other Gētiles be: Therefore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weapenlesse, and take awaye their strength: their cities and chefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the countre: As namely. Betiesimoth, Baalmeō and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto thē off the east, \hat{y} they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no more be had in remēbraunce amonge the Heithen. Euen thus will I punysh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: "Because that Edom hath avenged α eased himself vpon the house off Iuda, therefore thus saith the LORDE: I will reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and beest out off it. From Themā vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. Thorow my people of Israel, wil I avenge me agayne vpō Edō: they shal hādle him, accordinge to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shal knowe my vengeance, saith the LORDE God.

Thus saith \hat{y} LORDE God: "For so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeance with despitefull stomackes, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the see coast to perish. A greate vengeance will

I take vpon them, and punysh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue avenged me off them.

The xxii. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the xi. yeare, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Ierusalem: A ha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my bely full. Yee therefore saith \hat{y} LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I wil vpō the, I wil bringe a greate multitude off people agaynst \hat{y} , like as whē the see aryseth with his wawes: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hange vp their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Gētiles shal spoye her: hir daughters vpon the felde shal perish with the swearde, \hat{y} they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will brynge hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kyng off Babilon α a kyng of kynges) from the North, vpō Tyre, with horses, charettes, horsmen and with a greate multitude of people. Thy daughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with \hat{y} swearde: But agaynst \hat{y} , he shall make bullworkes α graue vp dyches aboute the, α lift vp his shyld agaynst \hat{y} . His slynges α batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, α with his weapēs breake downe thy towres. The dust of his horses shal couer \hat{y} , they shalbe so many: thy walles shal shake at the noyse of \hat{y} horse men, charettes α wheles: when he cometh to thy portes, as men do in to an open cite. With the hofes off his horse fete, shal he treade downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people with the swearde, α breake downe the pilers of thy strength. They shal waist awaye thy riches, α spoye thy marchaūdis. Thy walles shal they breake downe, α destroye thy houses of pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymbre α foundations, shall they cast in the water. Thus wil I brynge the melody of thy songes, α the voyce of thy

I wil make a bare stone off the, yee a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buylded agayne: For euē I ꝑ LORDE haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus hath the LORDE God spoken concernynge Tyre: The Iles shall be moued at the noyse off thy fall, & at the crie of the slayne, ꝑ shal be murthured in the. All kynges off the see shall come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their roabes, and put off their costly clothinge: Yee with trembling shal they be clothed, they shall syt vpō the grounde: they shal be afrayed at thy sodane fall, and be abashed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, ꝑ hast bene so greatly occupied off olde, "thou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see with thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: How art thou now so vtterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Iles, yee and the Iles them selues shall stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I brynge the depe vpon the, ꝑ greate waters maye couer the: Then will I cast the downe vnto them, that descende in to ꝑ pytte: vnto a people that hath bene lōge deed, and set the in a londe ꝑ is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so ꝑ no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in honoure, in the lōde of the luyng. I wil make an ende off the, ād thou shalt be gone. Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou not be founde for euermore, saieth ꝑ LORDE God.

The xxvij. Chapter.

A THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off mā, make a lamentable cōplaynte vpon Tyre, & saye vnto Tyre, which is a porte off the see, ꝑ occupieth with moch people:^a and many Iles: thus speaketh ꝑ LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest of the see, and thy buylders haue made the maruelous goodly. All thy tables haue they made of Cipre trees of the mount Senir. Frō Libanus haue they takē Cedre trees, to make the mastes: & the Okes of Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes haue they made of yuery, & of costly wūd out of the Ile of Cethim. Thy sale was of whyte small nedle worke out off the londe of Egipte, to hāge vpō thy mast: & thy hanginges of yalow sylke & purple, out of ꝑ Iles of Elisa. They of Sidō & Arnad were thy maryners, & the wysest in Tyre were thy shypmasters. The eldest and wysest at Gebal were they, that mended & stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shipmē occupied their marchaundies in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyne hoost, and helped the to fight: these hanged vp their shildes & helmettes with the, these set forth thy beuty.

They off Arnad were with thine hoost rōude aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vp their shildes rōude aboute thy walles, and made the maruelous goodly. Tharsis occupied with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yron, tynne and lead, and made thy market greate. Iauan, Tubal and Mesech were thy marchautes, which brought the men, & ornautes off metall for thy occupyenge. They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Marte, horse, horsmen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchautes: and many other Iles that occupied with the, brought the wethers, elephāt bones and Paycockes for a present. The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse workes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with nedle worke, with whyte lynninge cloth, with sylke and with Christall.

Iuda and the londe off Israel occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damascus also vsed marchaūdiēs with the, in the best wyne and whyte woll: because thy occupienge was so greate, and thy wares so many. Dan, Iauan, and Meusal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yron redy made, with Casia and Calamus, acordinge to thyne occupienge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry worke and quyszrhyns. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar haue occupied with the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchautes off Seba and Rema haue occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in all precious stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy markettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Assiria and Chelmad, were all doers with f and occupied with the: In costly rayment, off yalow sylke and nedle worke, (very precious, t therfore packte t boude together with roapes) Yee and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off thy markettes. The shippes of Tharsis were the chefe off thy occupienge.

C Thus thou art full, and in greate worships, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the out of many waters. But f easte wynde shal ouerbear the in to the myddest off the see: so f thy wares, thy marchaundies, thy rypes, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shall perish in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbs shall shake at the loude crie off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners vpō the see, shall leape out of their boates, and set them selues vpon the lode. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall cast dust vpon their heades, a d lye downe in the ashes. They shal shaue them selues, t put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with hertfull sorow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what cite hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is? When thy wares t marchaundies came frō the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Iles are abashed at the, and all their kynges are afayed, yee their faces haue chaunged colour. The marchauntes of the nacions wondre at the, In that thou art so clene brought to naught, t comest nomore vp.

The xviij. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell the pryncy of Tyre: " Thus saith the LORDE God: because thou hast a proude hert and hast sayde: " I am a God, I haue my seate in the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man t not God, t yet stondest in thine owne cōceate, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thynkest thy selfe wyser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hyd from f . " With thy wysdome t thy vnderstōdinge, thou hast gottē the greate welthynesse, and gathered treasure off syluer t golde. With thy greate wysdome and occupienge, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy greate riches thy hert is proude.

Therefore thus saith f LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast lift vp thine herte, as though thou werst God: beholde, I wil bringe enemies vpon the, euen the tyrantes of the Heithē: these shal drawe out their swerdes vpon thy beuty and wysdome, and shall defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the middest of the see, as they that be slayne. Let se, yff thou wilt saye then (before thē that slaye f) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the hondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hōdes of f enemies: for I myself haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kyng of Tyre, t tell him: Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art a seale of a licknesse, full off wysdome t excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in f pleasaūt gardē off God: thou art decete with all maner of precious stones: with Ruby, Topas, Christall, Iacyncte, Onyx, Iaspis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, t golde. Thy beuty t f holes f be in f were set forth in the daye of thy creacion. Thou art a fayre Cherub, stretched wyde out for to couer.

I haue set the vpon the holy mount off God, there hast thou bene, and walked amōge the fayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, tyll wickednesse was founde in the. " Because off thy greate marchaundise, thy hert is full of wickednesse, t thou hast offended. Therefore wil I cast the from the mount of God, (O thou coueringe Cherub) and destroye the amōge the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in thy fayre beuty, t thorow thy beuty thou hast destroyed thy wysdome. I will cast ſ downe to the grounde, ⁊ ſ in ſ sight of kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Sactuary, with the greate wickednesse off thy onrightuous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddest of the, to consume the: ⁊ wil make the to ashes, in the sight of all the ſ loke vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amonge the Heithē, shal be abashed at the: seinge thou art so clene brought to naught, and comest no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst Sidō, Prophecie vpō it, and speake. "Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpō the, ⁊ get me honoure in the: that it maye be knowne, how that I am ſ LORDE, when I punysh her, ⁊ get me honoure in her. For I will sende pestilence ⁊ bloud shedding in to hir stretes, so ſ those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest of her: ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, ⁊ an hurtinge brere vnto the house of Israel, ner vnto the that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: when I gather the housholde of Israel together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be scatred: then shal I be sanctified in the, in ſ sight of the Gētiles: ⁊ they shal dwell in the lōde, ſ I gaue to my seruauant Iacob. They shal dwell safely therin, ⁸ buylde houses, and plante vynyardes: Yee safely shal they dwell therin, when I haue punyshed all those, that despyse them rounde aboute: and then shall they knowe, ſ I am the LORDE their God.

The xxix. Chapter.

IN the x. yære, vpon the xij. daye off the x. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: "O thou sonne off mā, set now thy face agaynst Pharaō the kynge off Egipte, Prophecye agaynst him and agaynst the whole lōde of Egipte: Speake, and tell him, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharaō thou kinge of Egipte, I wil vpō the, thou greate whall fysh, ſ lyst in thy waters: Thou ſ sayest: the water is myne, I haue made it myself. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, ⁊ hāge all the fish in thy waters vpō thy skales: after ſ I wil drawe the out of thy waters, yee ⁊ all the fish of thy waters that hange vpon thy skales.

I wil cast the out vpon the dry lōde with the fish of thy waters, so that thou shalt lye vpon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beestes of the felde, ⁊ for the foules off the ayre: that all they which dwell in Egipte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of rede to the house of Israel. "When they toke holde of ſ with their hōde thou brakest and prycest them on euery syde: and yff they leaned vpō the, thou brakest, ⁊ hurtdest the reynes of their backes. Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: beholde, I will brynge a B swearde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beast. Yee the londe of Egipte shalbe desolate and waist, ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Because he sayde: the water is mine, I my self haue made it. Beholde therefore, I wil vpon the, ⁊ vpon thy waters: I will make the londe off Egipte waist and desolate, from the towre of Syenes vnto the borders of the Moriās londe: so that in xl. yeaeres there shall no fote off man walke there, nether fote of catell go there, nether shal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe of Egipte to be desolate amonge other waist countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeaeres, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil scatre the Egiptians amonge the Heithen and nacions.

Agayne, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Whē the xl. yeaeres are expyred, I wil gather the nacions together agayne, out off the nacions, amonge whō they were scatred, and wil bringe the presoners off Egipte agayne in to the londe off Pathures their owne natyue countre, that they maye be there a lowly small kyngdome: yee they shal be the smallest amonge other kyngdomes, lest they exalte them selues aboute the Heithen: for I will so mynish them, that they shall nomore rule the Heithen. They shall nomore be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouoke the enymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowe them: ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE God.

C In the xxvij. yeare, the first daye of the first Moneth, came \hat{y} worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon hath made his hoost, with greate trauaile and labour to come before Tyre: that euery heade maye be balde, and euery shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether him ner his hoost eny rewarde, for \hat{y} greate trauaile \hat{y} he hath taken there. Therefore thus saith \hat{y} LORDE God: beholde I will geue the lode of Egipte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō, \hat{y} he maye take awaye all hir substaūce, robbe hir robberies, ad spoyle hir spoyle, to paye his hoost their wagies withall. I wil geue him the londe of Egipte for his labour, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the horne off the house of Israel to growe forth, τ open thy mouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xxx. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophcy τ speake: thus saith the LORDE God: "Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of \hat{y} LORDE is come: the darcke daye of \hat{y} Heithē, the houre is at honde, the swearde commeth vpon Egipte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egipte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundaciōs are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afrayed, yee the Morians londe, Lybia τ Lydia, all their comon people, τ Chub, τ all \hat{y} be confederate vnto thē, shal fall with thē thorow \hat{y} swearde.

B Thus saith \hat{y} LORDE: The maynteyners of the lode of Egipte shal fall, the pryde of hir power shal come downe: euē vnto the tower off Syenes shall they be slayne downe with the swearde, saith \hat{y} LORDE God: amonge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, τ amōge other waist cities they shalbe waisted. And they shal knowe, \hat{y} I am \hat{y} LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egipte, τ when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaungers go forth fro me in shippes, to make \hat{y} carelesse Morians afrayed: and sorowe shal come vpon them in the daye of Egipte, for doutles it shal come. Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil make an ende of the people of Egipte thorow the honde of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrautes of the Heithen shalbe brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their swerdes vpon Egipte and fyll the londe full of slayne men. I wil drye vp their floudes of water, ad sell the lode in to the hondes of wicked people. The lode and all \hat{y} is therin, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Euē I the LORDE haue sayde it.

And thus saith the LORDE God: I wil destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. "There shal nomore be a prynce of Egypte, and a fearfulness will I sende in to the Egipcians londe. As for Patshures, I wil make it desolate, ad kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria will I punysh, τ poure my wrothfull indignaciō vpō Sin, which is the strength of Egipte. All the sustaunce of Alexandria will I destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egipte.

Sin shalbe in greate heuynesse, Alexandria shalbe roted out, and Noph shall haue daylie sorowe. The best men off Heliopolis τ Bubasto shalbe slayne with the swearde, ad caried awaye captyue. At Taphnis the daye shalbe darcke, when I breake there the scepter of the londe of Egipte, and when \hat{y} pompe of hir power shal haue an ende. A cloude shal couer her, and hir daughters shalbe led awaye in to captyuete. Thus will I punysh Egipte, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

B It happened in the xi. yeare, vpon the seuēth daye of \hat{y} first Moneth, \hat{y} the LORDES worde came vnto me, sayēge: Beholde, thou sonne of mā, I wil breake \hat{y} arme of Pharaō kynge of Egipte: and lo, it shal not be boude vp to be healed, nether shal eny playstre be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so strōge, as to holde a swearde. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I will vpon Pharaō \hat{y} kinge of Egipte, τ brusse his strōge arme (yet is it but a broken one) τ will smyte the swearde out of his honde.

As for the Egipcians, I wil scatere them amonge the Heithen, τ strowe thē in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strength \hat{y} arme of the kinge of Babilō, τ geue him my swearde in his hōde: but I wil breake Pharaos arme, so \hat{y} he shal holde it before him piteously, like a wounded man.

Yee I will stablish the kynge of Babilōs arme, & the armes of Pharaō shal fall downe: that it maye be knowne, that I am the LORDE, which geue the kynge off Babilon my swearde in his hōde, that he maye drawe it out vpon the londe of Egipte: and that when I scatre the Egipcians amonge the Gentiles, and strowe them in f lōdes aboute, they maye knowe, f I am the LORDE.

The xxxi. Chapter.

MOROUER, it happened in the xi. yeare f first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharaō the kynge of Egipte, ād to all his people: Whom art thou like in thy greatnesse? Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre vpō the mount of Libanus, with fayre braiches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His toppe reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vp an hye. Rōude aboute the rotes of him rāne there floudes of water, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therefore was he hyer thē all the trees of the felde, and thorow f multitude of waters that he sent frō him, he optayned many and longe braunches. All foules of the ayre made their nestes in his braūches, vnder his bowes gēdred all the beastes of f felde, & vnder his shadow dwelt all people. Fayre and beutifull was he in his greatnesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his rote stode besyde greate waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasaūt garden of God, there was no Fyrre tre like his braūches, the playne trees were not like f bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his beuty: so fayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so moch, f all the trees in the pleasaūt gardē of God, had enuye at hi. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, & stretched his toppe in to the cloudes, & seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil delyuer him in to f hondes of f mightiest amōge f Heithē, which shall rote him out. Acordige to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, & the mighty men of the Heithen shall so scatre him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes & in all valleys: his bowes shal be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is fallē, all f foules of f ayre shal syt vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his braūches: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shall attayne to his hyennesse, nor reach his toppe vnto the cloudes, nether shall eny tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath done. For vnto death shall they all be delyuered vnder the earth, and go downe to f graue, like other men.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: C In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I will couer the depe vpon him, I will staunch his flouides, and the greate waters shalbe restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be soroufull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shall be smyttē. I wil make the Heithen shake at the sounde of his fall,^b when I cast him downe to hell, with them f descende in to the pytte. All the trees of Eđen, with all the chosen and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitaciōs: for they shal go downe to hell with him, vnto thē that be slayne with the swearde, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amōge the Heithē. To whom shalt thou be lickened, that art so glorious & greate, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe vnder f earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne with the swearde. Euen thus is it with Pharaō & all his people, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxij. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeare, the first daye of the xij.^a Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpō Pharaō the kynge of Egipte, & saye vnto him: "Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the Heithen, & as a whalfish in the see. Thou castest thy waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters with thy fete, and stampet in their flouides. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: "I wil sprede my net ouer f , namely, a greate multitude of people: these shal dryue the in to my yarne, for I will cast the vpō the lōde, and let the lye vpō the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye syt vpō the: I wil geue all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh wil I cast vpō the hilles, and fylle the valleys with thy hyennesse. I will water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloude euen to the moūtaynes, & y valleys shal be full off the.

^B "When thou art put out, I will couer the heauen, and make his starres dymme. I will sprede a cloude ouer the Sonne, and the Moone shall not geue hir light. All the lightes off heauen wil I put out ouer the, and bringe darcknesse vpon thy londe, saith y LORDE God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bringe thy destruccion amōge the Heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so afayed thorow y, that their hayre shal stonde vp, whē I shake my swearde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, euery man in him self, at y daye of thy fall.

^C For thus saith the LORDE God: the kynge of Babylons swearde shal come vpon y, with y swerdes of the worthies wil I smyte downe thy people. All they that be mightie amōge the Gētiles, shal waist the proude pompe of Egipte, and brynge downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nomore vpō the waters: so that nether māns fote ner beastes clawe, shal stere them eny more. Then wil I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when y countre with all that is therein, shalbe layde waist: and whē I smyte all thē which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORDE. This is the mournynge, that the daughters off the Heithen shall make: Yee a sorow and lamentaciō shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saith the LORDE God.

In the xij. yeaere, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee and the mightie people of the Heithē also, ^aeuen with thē that dwell beneth: and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how fayre so euer thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amōge those that be slayne with the swearde, shal they lye. The swearde is geuen alredy, he shal be drawn forth and all his people. The mightie worthies and his helpers, y, be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with y swearde: shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, and their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne and fell all with the swearde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His comōs are buried rounde aboute his graue: altogether wounded and slayne with the swearde, which men afore tyme brought feare in to y londe off the lyuynge.

"There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beyng wounded and slayne with the swearde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles somtyme brought feare in to the londe off the lyuynge: for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to y graue.

^E Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amōge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised, and with them that be slayne thorow the swearde: for seynge that in tymes past they made the londe off the lyuynge afayed, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amōge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesech also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amōge the vncircūcised, and them that be slayne with the swearde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the lyuynge afayed.

Shulde not they then lye also amōge y worthies, and vncircūcised Giautes? which with their weapens are gone downe to hel: whose swerdes are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones: because that as worthies, they haue brought feare in to y lōde of y lyuynge? Yee amōge the vncircūcised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swearde.

^F There is the lōde off Edom with hir kynges and prynces also, "which with their strēgh are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Morouer, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidoniās, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they are come to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to y^e pytte. Now when Pharaο seyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both Pharaο & all his hoost, saith y^e LORDE God. For I haue geuē my feare in the lōde of the luyunge. But Pharaο & all his people shal lye amōge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

A GAYNE, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Speake to the childrē of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their countre, and set him to be their watchman: "y^e same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Yf a man now heare the noyse off the trompet & will not be warned, and the swearde come ād take him awaye: his bloude shall be vpō his owne heade: For he herde the sōude of the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therefore his bloude be vpon him. But yff he will receaue warnynge, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watch man se the swerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so y^e the people is not warned: yff the swearde come then, and take eny man from amōge thē: the same shall be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

And now (O thou sonne of man) I haue made the a watchman^b vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Yff I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou guesst him not warnynge, that he maye be warre off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye because off his synne, but thou hast deluyered thy soule.

Therefore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel, Ye saye thus: Oure offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked,^c but moch rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lyue. Turne you, turne you from youre vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherefore will ye dye?

Thou sonne off man, tell the children off thy people: "The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall not saue him, when so euer he turneth awaye vnfaithfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shal not hurte him, when so euer he conuerteth from his vngodlynesse:

And y^e rightuousnesse of the rightuous shal not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. Yff I saye vnto the rightuous, that he shall surely lyue, and so he trust to his owne rightuousnesse, and do synne: then shall his rightuousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yff I saye to the wicked: "thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne frō his synnes, and do the thinge that is lafull and right: In so moch that the same wicked mā geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the cōmaundementes off life, and doth no wrōge:

Then shall he surely lyue, and not dye. Yee the synnes that he had done, shal neuer be thought vpon: For in so moch as he doth now the thyng that is lafull and right, he shall lyue. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnright.

When the rightuous turneth from his rightuousnesse, and doeth the thyng that is wicked, he shall dye therefore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is lafull and right, he shall lyue therefore. Yet ye saye: the waye of y^e

LORDE is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yeaere, the v. daye of the x. Moneth of oure captyuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Ierusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: ŷ cite is destroyed. Now the honde of the LORDE had bene vpon me the euenynge, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntyll the mornynge that he came to me: Yee he opened my mouth, so ŷ I was nomore domme. Then came the worde of ŷ LORDE vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, ād he had the londe in possessiō: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saith the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, your eyes haue ye lift vp to Idols, and haue shed bloude: shal ye then haue the londe in possession?

Ye leane vpon youre swearde, ye worke abhominacions, euery one defyleth his neighbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto thē: Thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, all ye that dwell in this wilderness, shall be slayne with the swarde: what so is vpon the felde, will I geue vnto the beestes to be deuoured: those that be in stronge holdes and dennes, shall dye off the pestilēce. For I wil make the londe desolate and waiste, and ŷ pōpe off hir strength shall come to an ende. The mountaynes in Israel shal be so waiste that no man shall trauallye therby.

ŷ Then shall they lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē I make the lōde waiste and desolate, because off all their abhominacions, that they haue wrought. And thou sonne off man, the children off thy people ŷ talke of the, by the walles ād in the dores of their houses, sayenge one to another: come, let vs heare, what worde is gone forth from the LORDE: These come vnto the, after ŷ maner of a greate people: yee my people syt downe before the, and heare thy wordes, but they do not thereafter: ŷ For in their mouthes they shewe them selues, as though they were feruent, but their herte goeth after their owne couetous lucre. And as a balet ŷ hath a swete tune, ād is pleasaūt to synge, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do thereafter. Whē this commeth to passe (for lo, it cometh in dede) then shal they knowe, that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

AND the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off mā, prophecy agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophecy, and speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto the shepherdes off Israel, that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede ŷ flockes?

Ye haue eaten vp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fedde haue ye slayne, but ŷ flocke haue ye not norished: The weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne: ŷ lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled thē. Thus are they scatred here and there without a shepherde: yee all the beastes off the felde deuoure them, and they go astraye.

My shepe go wandringe vpon all moūtaynes and vpon euery hye hill, yee they be scatred abrode in all felde, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seketh after them.

Therefore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE, Thus sayeth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, for so moch as my shepe are robbed, and deuoured off all the wyld beestes off the felde, hauynge no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therefore heare ŷ worde off the LORDE, o ye shepherdes: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Beholde, I my self will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their honde, and make thē cease from fedyng of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nomore: For I will delyuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will lōke to my shepe my self, and seke them. Like as a shepherde amōge the flocke seketh after the shepe that are scatred abrode, euen so will I seke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scatred in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will bringe them out from all people, and gather them together out of all londes. I will bringe the in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the cowntre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall their foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, and in a fat pasture shall they fede: euen vpon the mountaynes of Israel.

I will fede my shepe myself, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seke: ^asoch as go astraye, wil I brynge agayne: soch as be wouled, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykinge, those will I preserue, and fede them with [†]thinge that is lauffull. And as for you (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, ^bamonge the wethers and the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture with youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus my shepe must be fayne to eate [†]thinge, that ye haue troden downe with youre fete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will seuer the fat shepe from the leane: for so moch as ye haue shot the weake shepe ap^o [†]sydes and shulders, and runne vpon them with youre hornes, so longe till ye haue vtterly scatred them abroad. I will helpe my shepe, so [†]they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne one shepe from another. I wil rayse vp vnto them one only shepherde: ^ceuen my seruau^t Dauid, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherde. I the LORDE wil be their God, and my seruau^t Dauid shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Morouer, I wil make a couenaunt of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out of the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderness, and slepe in the woddess.

Good fortune and prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. ^dA prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wodde maye bringe forth their frutes, and [†]grounde hir increase. They shalbe safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brokē their yocke, and deluyered them out of the hondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

They shal nomore bespoyled of the Heithen, ner deuoured of the beastes of the lode: but safely shal they dwell, and no man shal fraye them. I wil set vp an excellēt plāte for them, so [†]they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reprove of [†]Heithen eny more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am with them, and [†]they (euen the house of Israel) are my people, saith the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: ^eand I am youre God, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxv. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE ²came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face toward the mount Seir, prophecy vpon it, and saye vnto it: ^fThus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hōde ouer the, yee waist and desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, and thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. ^gFor so moch as thou bearest an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, and with a cruel honde hast made them afrayed, what tyme as they were troubled and punyshed for their synne: Therefore, as truly as I lyue (saith [†]the LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: ^hseinge thou layest waite for bloude, therefore shall bloude persecute the. Thus wil I make the mount Seir desolate and waist, and bringe to passe, that there shall no man go thither, ner come from thence. His mountaynes wil I fyll with his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleys shal lye full of them, that are slayne with [†]swearde. I wil make the a perpetuall wilderness, so that noman shal dwell in thy cities: ⁱye maye knowe, how [†]I am the LORDE.

B And because thou hast sayde: what, both these nacions and both these londes must be myne, & I wil haue them in possession,^a where as the LORDE was there. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will hãde the acordinge to thy wrath and gelousy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amõge them, how I haue punyshed the. Yee and that thou also mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despytful wordes, which thou hast spokẽ agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waist, and geuen vs to deuoure.

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee & multiplied youre proude wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. Where vnto, thus saith ȳ LORDE God: when the whole worlde is in wealth, then wil I make the waist. ^a And like as thou (o mount Seir) wast glad, because the heretage of the house of Israel was destroyed: euen so wil I do vnto the also, that thou and whole Edom shall be destroyed, & knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

A THOU sonne of man, prophecie vpon the mountaynes of Israel,^c & speake: Heare the worde of the LORDE, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Because youre enemy hath sayde vpon you: A ha, ȳ hie euerlastyng places are now become ours: prophecy therefore, & speake: thus saith ȳ LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted & trodẽ downe on euery syde, & become a possession vnto ȳ resydue of ȳ Gẽtiles, which haue brought you in to mēs mouthes & vnto an euell name amonge ȳ people: Therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys & dales, to the voyde wildernesses & desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the resydue of the Heithẽ: Yee eũ thus saith the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelousy haue I taken a deuyce, agaynst the resydue of the Gẽtiles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue take in my lode vnto the selues for a possession: which also reioysed frõ their whole herte with a despitful stomacke, to waist it, and to spoyle it.

Prophecy therfore vpon the londe of Israel, B speake vnto ȳ mountaynes and hilles, to valleys and dales, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my gelousy and terrible wrath: For so much as ye haue suffred reprove of the Heithen, therefore thus saith the LORDE God: I haue sworne, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you will I turne me, that ye maye be tyllend and sowed. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and ȳ decayed places shalbe repayed againe. I wil prouyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase & bringe frute. I wil restore you also to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes thẽ euer ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe, ȳ I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE God: For so much as they saye vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no mo men, nether destroye thy people eny more, saith the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from hensforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprove of the nacions, ner cast out thine owne people enymore, saith the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of mā, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne grounde, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes & ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vnclennesse of a menstruous woman. Wherefor I poured my wrothfull displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe, & because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. I scatred them also amonge the Heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lodes. Acordinge to their wayes & after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punysh them.

E "Now when they were gone vnto the Heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, & must go out of their owne londe? Then spared I my holy name, which f house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therefore tell f house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: I do not this for youre sakes (O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amōge the Heithen, when ye came to them. Therefore, I wil halowe my greate name agayne, which amonge the Gētiles is euel spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amōge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saith f LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the Heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bringe you agayne in to youre owne londe. b Then will I poure cleare water vpon you, & ye shalbe clene: Yee from all youre vnclennesse and from all youre Idols shal I cleanse you. A new herte also wil I geue you, c and a new sprete wil I put in to you: As for that stony hert, I will take it out of youre body, and d geue you a fleszshy herte. I wil geue you my sprete amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commaundemētes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to youre forefathers, & ye shal be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre vnclēnesse, I wil call for the corne, and wil increase it, and wil let you haue no honger. I will multiplie the frutes of the trees and f increase of the felde for you, so that ye shal beare no more reprove of honger amōge the Heithē. Then shal ye remēbre youre owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginaciōs, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominaciōs.

F But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saith the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therefore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal clēse you from all youre offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repayre the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waist, in the sight of all them, that wēte by. Then shal it be sayde: This waist lōde is become like a garden of pleasure, and the voyde, desolate and brokē downe cities, are now stronge, and fensed agayne. Then the residue of the Heithen that lye rounde aboute you, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repayre that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waist. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, & wil do it in dede.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of f house of Israel, & do this for them: c I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Like as the holy flocke and the flocke of Ierusalem are in the hie solempne feastes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be fylled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THE honde of the LORDE came vpon A me, & caried me out in the sprete of the LORDE, & let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, & he led me rounde aboute by them: & beholde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, & maruelous drye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these bones maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me: Prophecy thou vpon these bones, & speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put breth in to you, that ye maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, & make flesh growe vpon you, & couer you ouer with skynne: & so geue you breth, that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

c So I prophecied, as he had cōmaunded me. And as I was prophecienge, there came a noyse and a greate mocion, so that the bones ranne euery one to another. Now whē I had lokēd, beholde, they had synowes, and flesh grewe vpon them: and aboute they were couered with skynne, but there was no breth in them. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man, prophecie thou towarde the B wynde: prophecy, and speake to the wynde: Thus saith the LORDE God: Come (o thou ayre) from the foure wyndes, & blowe vpon these slayne, that they maye be restored to life. So I prophesied, as he had commaunded me: Then came the breth in to them, and they receaued life, and stode vp vpon their fete, a maruelous greate sorte.

Morouer, he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saye: "oure bones are dried vp, oure hope is gone, we are clene cut of. Therefore prophesie thou, & speake vnto them. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) & take you out of youre sepulchres, & bringe you in to the londe of Israel agayne. So shall ye knowe y I am the LORDE, when I open youre graues, & bringe you out of them. My sprete also wil I put in you, & ye shal lyue: I wil set you agayne in youre owne londe, and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue sayde it, and fulfilled it in dede.

C The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take a sticke and wryte vpon it: Vnto Iuda & to the children of Israel his companjons. Then take another sticke, and wryte vpon it: Vnto Ioseph the stocke of Ephraim, and to all the housholde of Israel his companjons. And than take both these together in thine honde, so shal there be one stycke therof. Now yf the childrē of thy people saye vnto the: wilt thou not shewe vs, what thou meanest by these? Then geue them this answer: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, ^aI wil take the stocke of Ioseph, which is in the honde of Ephraim and of the trybes of Israel his felowes, and wil put them to the stocke of Iuda, & make them one stocke, and they shal be one in my honde. And the two stickes where vpon thou wrytest, shalt thou haue in thine honde, that they maye se, and shalt saye vnto them:

D Thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil take awaye the childrē of Israel from amonge the Heithen, vnto whom they be gone, and wil gather them together on euery syde, and bringe them agayne in to their owne londe: yee I wil make one people of thē in y^e londe, vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and they all shal haue but one kinge. They shall nomore be two peoples from hensforth, nether be deuyded in to two kingdomes: they shal also defyle thē selues nomore with their abhominacions, Idols and all their wicked-doinges. I wil helpe thē out of all their dwellinge places, wherin they haue synned: & will so clense them, that they shalbe my people, and I their God.

^eDauid my seruaut shalbe their kinge, & they all shal haue one shepherde only. They shal walke in my lawes, and my commaundementes shal they both kepe & fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Iacob my seruaut, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee euē in the same londe shal they, their children, & their childers children dwell for euermore: and my seruaut Dauid shal be their euerlastynge prynce. Morouer, I wil make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an euerlastinge couenaunt. I wil sattle thē also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge thē for euermore.

My dwellinge shalbe with them, yee I wil be their God, & they shalbe my people. Thus the Heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y^e holy maker of Israel: whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them for euer more.

The xxxviiiij. Chapter.

AND the worde of the LORDE came ^avnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towarde Gog in the londe of Magog, which is the chefe prynce at Mesech and Tubal: prophecy agaynst him, and saye: ^dThus saith the LORDE God: ^eO Gog thou chefe prynce of Mesech and Tubal: beholde, I wil vpon the, and wil turne the aboute, and put a bytt in thy chawes: I wil bringe the forth and all thine hoost, both horse & horsmen, which be all weapened of the best fashion: a greate people, that handle altogether speares, shyldes, and swerdes: the Pereses, Moryans and with them the Lybians, which all beare shyldes and helmettes: Gomer, and all his hoostes: the house of Thogorma out of the north quarters, and all his hoostes, yee and moch people with the.

Therefore prepare the, set thy self in aray with all thy people, that are come vnto the by heapes, and be thou their defence. After many dayes thou shalt be visited, and in the latter yeares thou shalt come in to the lōde, that hath bene destroyed with the swearde, & now is replenished agayne with dyuerse people vpon the mountaynes of Israel, which haue lōge lyen waist. Yee they be brought out of the nacions, & dwell all safe. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the lōde, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

B Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: At the same tyme shal many thynges come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt ymagyn myschefe, and saye: I wil vp to yonder playne londe, seinge they syt at ease, and dwell so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they haue nether barres nor dores) to spoyle them, to robbe thē, to laye honde vpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, \hat{y} is gathered together from amonge the Heithē, which haue gotten catell and good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchauntes of Tharsis with all their Worthies, saye vnto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle? to take syluer and golde: to cary awaye catell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

Therefore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophecie, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saith the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwelleth safe: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people with the, which ryde vpon horses, wherof there is a greate multitude and an innumerable sorte. Yee thou shalt come vpon my people of Israel, as a cloude to couer the lōde. This shal come to passe in the latter dayes: I wil bringe the vp in to my londe, that the Heithen maye knowe me, when I get me honour vpon the (o Gog) before their eyes.

C Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art he, of whom I haue spoken afore tyme, by iny seruauentes \hat{y} prophetes of Israel, which prophecied in those dayes & yeaes, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the same tyme, when Gog commeth vp in to the londe of Israel (saith the LORDE God) shal my indignaciō go forth in my wrath. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure ^a I haue deuysed, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fyszshes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the beestes of the felde, and all the men \hat{y} are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned vp side downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grounde. I wil call for a swearde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saith the LORDE God: so that euery mans swearde shal be vpon another. With pestilēce and bloude wil I punysh him: stormy rayne and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the Heithen: that they maye be sure, how \hat{y} I am \hat{y} LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THEREFORE o thou sonne of man, ^a prophecie agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, o Gog: ^bthou chefe prynce at Mesech and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the aboute, & carie the forth, & lede \hat{y} from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine heape, and all the people that is with the, must fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Then wil I geue the vnto \hat{y} foules and wilde beastes of the felde, to be deuoured: there must thou lye vpon the felde: for euē I the LORDE haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

In to Magog, and amonge those that sit so ^B carelesse in the Iles: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, \hat{y} I am the LORDE. I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I will not let my holy name be euel spoken of enymore: but the very Heithen also shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it commeth, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saith the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I haue spoken: They that dwell in \hat{y} cities of Israel, shal go forth and set fyre vpon the weapons, and burne them: shyldes and speres, bowes and arowes, bylles and clubbes: seuen yeaes shall they be burnynge therof, so that they shal els bringe no stickes from \hat{y} felde, nether haue nede to hew downe eny out of the wodde: For they shall haue weapens ynew to burne. They shal robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saith \S LORDE God.

C At the same tyme will I geue vnto Gog, a place to be buried in, in Israel: euē the valley, where thorow men go from the east to the see warde. Those that trauaile therby, shal abhorre it. There shal Gog and all his people be buried: and it shalbe called the valley of the people of Gog. Seuen monethes longe shall the house of Israel be burienge of them, that they maye cense the lōde: Yee all the people of the londe shal burie them. O it shal be a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saith the LORDE God. They shal ordene men also to be deedburiers, euer goinge thorow the lōde, and appoynte them certayne places to bury those in, which remaine vpon the felde, that the londe maye be censed. From ende to ende shal they seke, and that vij monethes lōge. Now those that go thorow the londe, where they se a mans bone, they shall set vp a token by it, till the deedburiers haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shalbe called Hamona: Thus shall they make the londe cense.

D And thou sonne of man: thus saith the LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and euery byrde, yee and to all the wilde beastes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather you rōude aboute vpō my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euen a greate slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: eate flesh, and drynke bloude. "Ye shal eate \S flesh of the worthies, and drynke the bloude of the prynces of the londe: of the wethers, of the lambes, of the goates, and of the oxen that be all slayne at Basan. Eate \S fat youre bely full, and drynke bloude, till ye be droncken of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Fyl you at my table, with horses & stronge horsmen: with captaynes and all mē of warre, saith the LORDE God.

I will bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the Heithen maye se my iudgment, that I haue kepte, and my honde which I haue layed vpon them: that \S house of Israel maye knowe, how that I am \S LORDE their God, from that daye forth. E And the Heithen shal knowe, that where as the house of Israel were led in to captiuyte:

it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and deluyered them in to the hondes of their epemies, that they might all be slayne with the swearde. Accordinge to their vnclennesse and vnfaithfull dealinges, so haue I entreated them, and hyd my face from them. Therefore thus saith \S LORDE God: Now will I bringe agayne the captuytes of Iacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confucion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye: and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them afraied. And when I haue brought thē agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am praysed in them before many Heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captiuyte amonge the Heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, will I hyde my face nomore from them, but will poure out my sprete vpon the house of Israel,^b saith the LORDE God.

The xl. Chapter.

IN the xxv yeare of oure captiuyte, in the Q begynnynge of the yeare, the x daye of the moneth: that is the xiiij yeare, after that \S cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euen in to the londe of Israel brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe vpō a maruelous hie mountayne, whervpon there was a buyldinge (as it had bene of a cite) towarde the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brasse, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, & sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therefore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde

rounde aboute the house : the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe & a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vp the staires, & measured the postes of the dore : wherof euery one was a meterodde thicke. Euery chambre was a meterodde longe and brode : betwene the chambers were fyue cubites. The poste of the dore within the porche, was one meterodde. He measured also the porche of the ynnmer dore, which conteyned a meterodde. The measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eght cubites, and his pilers two cubites : and this entrie stode inward.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were thre on euery syde : alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore : which was x cubites, & the heyth of the dore xij cubites. The edge before the chābres was one cubite brode vpon both the sydes, & the chābres six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured the dore from the rygge of one chābre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, & one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, rounde aboute the courte dore. Before the inward parte vnto the fore entre of the ynnmer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, rounde aboute vnto the dore, had syde wyndowes : So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chābres & paued workes, made in the fore courte rounde aboute : xxx chābres vpon one paued worcke. Now the paued worcke was a lōge besyde the dores, and that was the lower paued worcke. After this, he measured the bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnmer courte of the out syde, which had an hundreth cubites vpon the east & the north parte. And the dore in the vttemost courte towarde the north, measured he after the lēgh and bredth : his thre chābres also on either syde, with his pilers & fore entries : which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxv cubites : his wyndowes & porches with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore towarde the east : there were vij steppes to go vp vpon, & their porche before them. Now the dore of the ynnmer courte stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was towarde the north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore towarde the south : whose pilers and porches he measured, these had the fyrst measure, & with their porches they had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, the bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon : his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnmer courte stode towarde the south, & he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to the ynnmer courte, thorow the dore of the south syde : which he measured, & it had the measure a fore sayde. In like maner, his chābres, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hie, & xxv cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode : and his porch reached vnto the vttemost courte : vpon his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnmost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, accordinge to the measure afore sayde. His chābres, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had : & with his porches he had wyndowes rounde aboute. The heith was l cubites, the bredth xxv cubites : His porches reached vnto the vttemost courte : his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the foresayde measure. His chābres, pilers and porches had wyndowes rounde aboute : whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode towarde the vttemost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chābre also, whose intraūce was at the dore pilers, and there the burntofferings were waszshed.

In the dore porche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtinge : to slaye the brentofferings, synneofferings and trespassofferings therupon. And on the out syde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Foure tables stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, wherupon they slaughtered. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burntofferings, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: wherupon were layed \hat{y} vessels and ornamente, which were vsed to, the burnt α slayne offeringes, when they were slaughtered. And within there were hokes foure fingers brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hange flesh vpon, α vpon the tables was layed the offringe flesh. On the outsyde of the ynnermer dore were the syngers chambers in the inwarde courte besyde \hat{y} north dore ouer agaynst the south. There stode one also, besyde the east dore north warde.

F And he sayde vnto me: " This chambre on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, that kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the altar: which be the sonnes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Leui. So he measured the fore courte, which had in length an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the altar stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thicknesse also of the dore on ether syde, was thre cubites. The lēgh of the porche was xx cubites, the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The xli. Chapter.

AFTER this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, accordinge to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of \hat{y} dore was x. cubites, α the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. Thē wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore it self was sixe cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the lēgh and bredth therof, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holiest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambres \hat{y} stode rounde aboute \hat{y} house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpō another, wherof there were xxxij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare thē vp: but in \hat{y} wall of \hat{y} house they were not fastened: The syde chambres were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them rounde aboute \hat{y} house. Thus was it wyder aboue, that from the lowest men might go to the hiest α mydde chābers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundation of the syde chambres was a meterodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thicknesse of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites, α so dyd \hat{y} outwall of the chābers in \hat{y} house.

Betwene the chambers, was the wydenes xx. cubites rounde aboute \hat{y} house. The chambre dores stode ouer agaynst the out wall, the one dore was towarde the north, \hat{y} other towarde the south: and the thicknesse of the outwall was v cubites rounde aboute. Now the buyldinge that was separated towarde the west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was v cubites thicke rōunde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites lōge also. The wydensse before the house and of it \hat{y} was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chābers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnermer temple, the porch of the fore courte, \hat{y} syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes them selues were syled ouer with bordes: α thus was it aboute the dore, vnto the ynmost house, and without also: Yee the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer with greate bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euer betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, \hat{y} face of a man lokinge asyde towarde the date tre, and a lyons face on the other syde. Thus was it made rōunde aboute in all the house: Yee the Cherubins and date trees were made from the grounde vp aboue the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypostes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me afore in v vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and euery dore had two litle wickettes which were folden in one vpon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greate thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpō both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

The xliij. Chapter.

THEN caried he me out in to the fore courte towarde the north, & brought me in to the chambre that stode ouer agaynst the backebuyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an C. cubites, whose dore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnmer courte, & agaynst the pauerd worke that was in the fore courte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer against another: And before this chābre there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towarde the north. Thus the hyst chambres were allwaye narrower then the lowest and myddelmost of v buildinge: for they bare chambre vpon chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courte: therfore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vpwarde.

The wall without that stode by v chambres towarde the vttemost courte vpon the fore syde of the chambres, was L. cubites lōge: for the lēgh of v vttemost chambers in the fore courte was L. cubites also: but the length thereof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambres had vnder them an inтраunce of the east syde, wherby a man might go in to them out of the fore courte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpō this syde there were chābers also, which had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their inтраunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee euen like as the other chamber dores were, so were those also of the south syde. And before the waye towarde the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north & the south, which stōde before the backe buyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherin the prestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offrings: and there must they laye the most holy offrings: meat offrings, synneoffrings & trespassoffrings, for it is an holy place. When the prestes come therin, they shal not go out in to the fore courte: but (seyng they be holy) they shal leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue eny thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnmer house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with v meterodde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meteroddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so moch. The other two sydes also towarde the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meteroddes. So he measured all v foure sydes where there wente a walle rounde aboute v. C. meteroddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the vnholý.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO he brought me to v dore, that turneth towarde the east. Beholde, thē came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight to loke vpon was like the first, "that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar." Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wynde toke me vp, and brought me in to y ynnermer court: a beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

B I herde one speaking vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: b O thou sonne of man, this rowme is my seate, and the place of my fote-steppes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: nether thei, ner their kinges, thorow their whordome, thorow their hie places, a thorow the deed bodies of their kinges: which haue buylded their thresholds in maner harde vpon my thresholdes, and their postes almost at my postes: so that there is but a bare wall betwixte me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abominacions, that they haue comitted. Wherefore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put away their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amonge them for euermore. c Therefore (o thou sonne of man) shewe thou the housholde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure them selues an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their workes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the comynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and descripcion therof, yee all the vses and ordinaunces of it, d they maye kepe e fulfill all the fashions and customes therof.

C This is the descripcion of the house: Aboue vpō the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it shalbe f holiest of all. Beholde, that is the descripcion and fashion of the house. This is the measure of the alter (after the true cubite: which is a spanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddest was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a spanne brode. This is the heyth of the alter: From the grounde to the lower steppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite: and from the lower steppes to the higher are foure cubites, g the bredth but one cubite.

h The alter was foure cubites hie, i from the alter vpwarde stode foure hornes, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brode, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the alter was xiiij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome therof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towarde the east. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus saith the LORDE God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the alter, in the daye whē it is made, to offre burntofferings, and to sprenkle bloude ther vpon. j To the prestes, to k Leuites that be of the sede of Sadoch, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saith the LORDE God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: l take the bloude of him m sprenkle his foure hornes withal, n the foure corners of the alter coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: herewith shalt thou cense it, and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullock also of the synoffringe, o burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

E The nexte daye, take a gootbuck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the alter withall: like as it was reconciled with p bullocke. Now when thou hast made it clene, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: q Offre them before the LORDE, and let the prest cast salt ther vpon, r and geue them so vnto the LORDE for a burntoffringe. Seuen dayes shalt thou bringe, euery daye a gootbucke. A yonge bullocke s a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shal they offre. Seuen dayes shal they reconcile and cense the alter, t offre vpon it. When these dayes are expired, then vpon the viij daye and so forth, the prestes shal offre their burntofferings and healthofferings vpō u alter: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saith the LORDE God.

The xliiiij. Chapter.

AFTER this, he brought me agayne to v outwarde dore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: This dore shal be stil shut, and not opened for eny mā to go thorow it, but only for the LORDE God of Israel: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The prynce himself shal come thorow it, that he maye eate bred before the LORDE. At the porche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. "Then brought he me to the dore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I loked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORDE fylled the house: and I fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diligēt hede to all that I wil saye vnto the, concernynge all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: pōdre well with thine herte the comynge in of the house and the goinge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate housholde of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: O house of Israel, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abhominaciōs, seynge that ye haue brought in to my Sanctuary straungers, hauynge vncircumcised hertes & flesh, where thorow my Sāctuary is defiled, whē ye offre my bred, fat, & bloude.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenaunt, and not kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary: but set keepers of my Sanctuary, euen after youre owne mynde. Therefore thus saith ꝑ LORDE God: Of all the straungers that dwell amōge the childrē of Israel, no straunger (whose herte & flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: No ner the Leuites that be gone backe fro me, and haue disceaue the people of Israel with erroures, goinge after their Idols: therefore shal thei beare their owne wickednes. Shulde they be set and ordened to minstre, vnder the dores of the house of my Sanctuary? and to do seruyce in the house: to slaye burntofferings and sacrifices for ꝑ people: to stōde before them, and to serue them: seynge the seruyce that they do them, is before their Idols, and cause the house of Israel to stōmble thorow wickednesse?

¶ For the which cause I haue pluckte out myne honde ouer them (saith the LORDE) so that now they must beare their owne iniquyte, and not to come nye me, to serue me with their preasheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holiest of all: that they maye beare their owne shame and abhominacions, which they haue done. Shulde I vse them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce ꝑ is done therein? ¶ But the prestes ꝑ Leuites the sonnes of Sadoch, that kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stōnde before me, and to offre me the fat and the bloude, saith the LORDE God.

They shall go in to my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me seruyce, and to waite vpō myne ordinaunces. Now whē they go in at the dores of the ynnermer courte, they shal put on lynnynge clothes, so that no wollyne come vpon them: whyle they do seruyce vnder the dores of ꝑ ynnermer courte, and within. They shal haue fayre lynnynge bonettes vpon their heades, and lynnynge breches vpon their loynes, which in their labour they shal not put aboute them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde courte, they shal put of the clothes, wherein they haue ministred, and laye them in the habitacion of the Sanctuary, & put on other apparell, lest they onhalowe ꝑ people with their clothes.

¶ They shal not shawe their heades, ner norish the bushe of their hayre, but rōude their heades only. ¶ All the prestes that go in to the ynnmost courte, shall drynke no wyne. They shall mary no wydowe, nether one that is put from hir huszbonde: but a mayde of the sede of the house of Israel, or a wydowe, that hath had a prest before.

¶ They shal shewe my people the difference betwene the holy and vnholly, betwixte the clene and vnclene. Yf eny discorde aryse, they shal discerne it, and geue sentence after my iudgments. My solempne feastes, my lawes and ordinaunces shal they kepe, and halowe my Sabbathes. ¶ They shal come at no deed persone, to defyle them selues: (excepte it be father or mother, sonne or daughter, brother or sister that hath had yet no husbonde) in soch they maye be defyled.

And when he is clensted, there shal be rekened vnto him vij dayes: and yf he go in to the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bringe a synoffringe saith the LORDE God. ¶ They shall haue an heretage, yee I my self wilbe their heretage: els shall ye geue thē no possession in Israel, for I am their possession. The meatoffringe, synoffringe & trespass offeringe shal they eate, and euery dedicate thinge in Israel, shalbe theirs. The firstlinges of all the first frutes, and all fre wil offringes shal be the prestes.

Ye shall geue vnto the prest also the firstlinges of youre dowe, that God maye prospere the resydue. "But no deed carion shall the prest eate, ner soch as is deuoured of wilde beestes, foules or catell.

The xlv. Chapter.

WHEN ye deuyde the lōde by the lott, ye shal put asyde one parte for the LORDE, "to be holy from other londes: namely, xxv M meteroddes longe, and x M brode. This shalbe holy, as wyde as it is rounde aboute. Of this parte there shal be longe vnto the Sanctuary v C meteroddes in all the foure corners, and l cubites wyde rounde aboute to the suburbs. And from this measure, namely of xxv M metteroddes longe, and x M brode, thou shalt measure, wherin the Sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy grounde shall be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORDE, and go in before the LORDE to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for itself: and to the Leuites that serue in the house, there shalbe geuen xx habitacions, of the xxv M lēgth & x M bredth: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessiō of v M meteroddes brode, & xxv M longe, besyde the parte of ¶ Sanctuary: that shal be for the whole house of Israel. "Vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuaries parte, & by the cite, there shalbe geuen vnto the prynce, what so euer lyeth ouer agaynst the cite, as farre as reacheth westwarde and eastwarde: which shalbe as longe as one parte, frō ¶ west vnto ¶ east.

This shalbe his owne lōde in Israel, that my princes be nomore chargeable vnto my people. And soch as remayneth yet ouer in the londe, shalbe geuen to the house of Israel acordinge to their trybes. Thus saith the LORDE God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leaue of, handle now acordinge to the thinge, that is equall and lafull: and thrust out my people nomore, sayeth ¶ LORDE God. Ye shal haue a true weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

"The Epha & the Bat shalbe a like. One Bat shal cōteyne ¶ tēth parte of an Homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after ¶ Homer. One Sytle maketh xx. Geras. "So xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xv. Sycles make a pounce. This is the Heaue offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaued: namely, the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of wheat: and the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of barlie. The oyle shal be measured with the Bat: euen the x. parte of one Bat out of a Cor.

Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one lābe from two hundreth shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burntoffrynge and healthoffrynge, to recōile them, sayeth the LORDE God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heaue offrynge with a fre wil. Agayne, it shal be the prynces parte to offre burntoffrynges, meatoffrynges and drynk-offrynges vnto the LORDE, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatoffrynge, brentoffrynge & healthoffrynge shal he geue, to recōile the house of Israel. Thus sayeth ¶ LORDE God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemysh, and clense the Sanctuary.

So the prest shal take of the bloude of ¶ synoffrynge, and sprenkle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure corners of the aluter, with the dorepostes of the ynnermer courte. And thus shalt thou do also the seuenth daye of ¶ moneth (for soch as haue synned of ignorance, or beyng diseauied) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon ¶ xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. "Seuē dayes shal the feast contynue, wherin there shal no sower ner leuēd bred be eatē.

Vpon the same daye shal ¶ prynce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffrynge. And in the feast of the seuen dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are with out blemysh, for a burntoffrynge vnto the LORDE: & an he goate daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shall geue euer an Epha to a bullocke, an Epha to a ram, & an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Vpon \hat{y} xv. daye of the seuenth moneth, he shal kepe the seuen dayes holy one after another, euē as the other vij. dayes: with the synoffrynge, burntoffrynge, meatoffrynge, and with the oyle.

The xlvi. Chapter.

THUS sayeth the LORDE God: \hat{y} dore of the ynnmer courte towarde the east, shall be shut the vj. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shalbe opened. Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, & stonde still without by the dore cheke. So \hat{y} prestes shall offre vp his burnt & healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipe at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but \hat{y} dore shal nomore be shut till the euenynge.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipe before the LORDE, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burntoffrynge, that the prynce shall bringe vnto the LORDE vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemish, & a ram without blemish, and an Epha for a meatoffrynge, with \hat{y} ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, & an Hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shalbe a yonge bullocke with out blemish, sixe lambes & a ram also without blemish. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatoffrynge: but to \hat{y} lambes, what he maye come by: And euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. When the prynce cometh, he shall go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORDE in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipe, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at \hat{y} north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shall go in and outamonge them.

Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shalbe the meatoffrynge: An Epha to a bullock, and an Epha to a ram: and to the lambes, as many as he wil, but euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Now when the prynce bryngeth a burntoffrynge or an healthoffrynge with a fre wil vnto the LORDE, the east dore shalbe opened vnto him, \hat{y} he maye do with his burnt & healthoffrynges, as he doth vpo the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the dore shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie brynge vnto the LORDE a lambe of a yere olde without blemish for a burntoffrynge: this shall he do euery mornynge. And for a meatoffrynge he shal geue the sixte parte of an Epha, & the thirde parte of an Hin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) euery mornynge. Yee this shalbe a daylie meatoffrynge vnto the LORDE, for an euerlasting ordinance: & thus shal the lambe, the meatoffrynge and oyle be geuen euery mornynge, for a dailie burntoffrynge.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Yf the prynce geue a gifte vnto eny of his sonnes, then shall it be his sonnes heretage perpetuall, \hat{y} he maye possesse it. But yf he wil geue one of his seruantes some of his heretage, "it shall be his to the fre yere, and thē to returne agayne vnto \hat{y} prynce: "for his heretage shalbe his sonnes only. The prynce also shal take none of the peoples enheritaunce, ner put thē from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he geue his possession, that my people be not scatred abrode, but that euery man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the intraunce at the syde of the dore to \hat{y} habitacion of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to \hat{y} prestes and stode towarde the north, & beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shall dight the trespace and synoffrynges, & bake \hat{y} meatoffrynges: that they nede not beare thē in to the outward courte, and so to vnhalowe the people. So he brought me in to the vtmost courte, rounde aboute all the foure corners. Beholde, in euery corner of \hat{y} fore courte, there was yet a litle courte. Yee in all the foure corners of the courte, there was made a litle courte of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, & there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were harthes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the kechin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the slayne offrynges of the people.

The xlvij. Chapter.

AFTER this he brought me agayne before the dore of the house: & beholde, there guszshed out waters from vnder \hat{y} postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode toward the east) that ranne downe vpon the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the aulter south warde. Thē caried he me out to the north dore, and brought me forth there rounde aboute by the vttemost dore, \hat{y} turneth eastwarde. Beholde, "there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now whan the man \hat{y} had the meterodde in his honde wente out vnto the east dore, he measured a M. cubites, & thē he brought me thorow \hat{y} water, euē to the ancles: so he measured yet a thousande, & brought me thorow \hat{y} water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it soch a ryuer, \hat{y} I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, o thou sonne of man? and with that, he brought me to the ryuer banck agayne.

Now whan I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer bācke. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out toward the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, commeth in to the see: and from the see it runneth out, & maketh the waters whole. Yee all that liue and moue, where vnto this ryuer commeth, shal recouer. And where this water cōmeth, there shalbe many fysh. For all that commeth to this water, shall be lusty and whole. By this ryuer shal the fyszshers stonde from Engaddi vnto En Eglaim, & there sprede out their nettes: for there shalbe greäte heapes of fysh, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupest for salt.

By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of frutefull trees, whose leaues shall not fall of, nether shal their frute perish:^a but euer be ryte at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. His frute is good to eate, and his leaf profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Let this be the border, wherin ye shall deuyde the londe vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: of the which lōde I swore vnto youre fathers, that it shulde fall to youre enheritaunce.

This is the border of the londe vpon the north syde, from the mayne see, as men go to Zadada: namely, Hemath, Berotha, Sabarim: from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazar Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauērā. Thus the borders frō the see forth, shalbe Hazar Euan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of Hemath: that is the north parte.

The east syde shal ye measure from Haueran and Damascus, from Galead and the londe of Israel by Iordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde: and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Thamar forth to the waters of strife vnto Cades, "the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greäte see from the borders therof, till a man come vnto Hemath: this is the west parte.

This londe shal ye parte amonge you, acordinge to the trybes of Israel, and deuyde it to be an heretage for you, and for the straügers that dwel amōge you, and begette children.

For ye shal take them amonge the childrē of Israel, like as though they were of youre owne housholde and countre, and they shal haue heretage with you amonge the childrē of Israel.

Loke in what trybe the straunger dwelleth, in the same trybe shal ye geue him his heretage, saieth the LORDE God.

The xlvij. Chapter.

THESE are \hat{y} names of the trybes that lye vpon the northsyde, by the waye of Hetlon, tyll thou commest vnto Hemath and Hazar Enam, the borders of Damascus toward the north besyde Hemath: Dan shal haue his porciō from the east quarter vnto the west. Vpon the borders of Dan from the east syde vnto the west, shal Asser haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Asser frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Nephtali haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Nephtali from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Manasses haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Manasses from the east syde vnto the west, shal Ephraim haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ephraim from the east parte vnto the west, shal Ruben haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Ruben from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Iuda haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Iuda from the east parte vnto the west, ye shal set a syde one porciō of xxv. M. meteroddes longe and brode (like as another porcion from the east syde vnto the west,) wherin the Sanctuary shal stōde.

As for the porcion, that ye shal separate out for the LORDE, it shalbe xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Which separated holy porcion shal belonge vnto these: namely to the prestes, towarde the north xxv. M. and towarde the west x. M. brode, towarde the east x. M. brode also, and towarde the south xxv. M. longe, wherin the Sanctuary of the LORDE shal stonde. Yee this same place shal be the prestes, who are of the childrē of Sadoch, and haue kepte my holy ordinaunce: which wente not astraye in the erreure of the children of Israel, like as the Leuites are gone astraye: and this separated pece that they haue of the londe, shalbe the most holy, harde vpon the borders of the Leuites. And nexte vnto the prestes, shal the Leuites haue xxv. M. lōge and x. M. brode. This shalbe on euery syde xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Of this porciō they shal sell nothings, ner make eny permutacion therof, lest the chefe of the londe fall vnto other, for it is halowed vnto the LORDE.

The other v. M. after the bredth, who lyeth by the xxv. M. shalbe comon: it shal belonge to the cite and to the suburbs for habitacions, and who cite shal stonde in the myddest therof. Let this be the measure: towarde who north parte, v. C. and iiij. M: towarde the south parte, v. C. and iiij. M: towarde the east parte, v. C. and iiij. M: towarde who west parte, v. C. and iiij. M.

The suburbs harde vpon the cite, shall haue towarde the north, L. and ij. C: towarde the south, L. and two C: towarde the east, L. and two C: towarde the west also, L. and two C. As for the residue of the length, that lyeth hard vpon the separated holy ground: namely, x. M. towarde the east and x. M. towarde the west, next vnto the holy porciō: it and the increase therof shal serue for their meate, that laboure in the cite. They that laboure for the welth of the cite, shall manteine this also, out of what tribe so euer they be in Israel.

All that is separated of the xxv. M. longe and xxv. M. brode on the foure partes, who shall ye put a syde for the separated porcion of the Sanctuary, and for the possession of who cite. The resydue vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuary and possession of the cite, shall belonge to the prynces, before the place of who xxv. M. vnto the east ende, and before the place of who xxv. M. westwarde, vnto the borders of who cite: this shalbe who prynces porciō. This shalbe the holy place, and the house of the Sanctuary shal stonde in the myddest. Morouer, from the Leuites and the cities possession, who lye in the myddest of the prynces parte: loke what remaineth betwixte the border of Iuda and the border of Ben Iamin, it shal be the prynces.

Now of the other trybes.

Frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Ben Iamin haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ben Iamin frō the east syde vnto who west, shal Symeon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Symeō from the east parte vnto the west, shal Isachar haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Isachar from the east syde vnto the west, shal Sabulon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Sabulon from the east parte vnto the west, shal Gad haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Gad southwarde, the coastes shal reach frō Thamar forth vnto the waters of strife to Cades, and to the floude, euen vnto the mayne see.

This is who lōde with his porciōs, which ye shal distribute vnto the trybes of Israel, saith who LORDE God. Thus wyde shal the cite reach: vpon the north parte v C and iiij M measures. The portes of the cite, shal haue the names of the trybes of Israel. Thre portes of who northsyde: One Ruben, another Iuda, the thirde Lewi.

Vpō who east syde, v C and iiij M measures, with who thre portes: The one Ioseph, another Bē Iamin, the thirde Dan. Vpon the south syde v C and iiij M measures, with the thre portes: the one Symeon, another Isachar, the thirde Sabulon. And vpon the west syde v C and iiij M measures, with thre portes also: the one Gad, another Asser, the thirde Nephtali. Thus shal it haue xvij M measures rōude aboute. And from that tyme forth, who name of the cite shal be: the LORDE is there.

Certaine reuelacions of thinges for to come : some, of the delyueraunce frō the captiuyte of Babilon : some, of the destruccion of Ierusalem : some, concernynge the latter dayes.

The first Chapter.

IN ȳ thirde yere of ȳ raigne of Ioachim kyng of Iuda, ^acame Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon vnto Ierusalem, & beseged it: and the LORDE delyuered Ioachim the kyng of Iuda in to his honde, with certayne ornamentes of the house of God, which he caried awaye vnto the londe of Sennar, to the house of his god, and there brought them in to his gods treasury. And the kyng spake vnto Asphenes ȳ chefe chamberlayne, that he shulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynges sede and of prynces, yōge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but fayre ād welfauored, instructe in all wisdom, connyng and vnderstōdinge: which were able to stonde in the kynges palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kinge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wine, which he drancke himselff, so to norish thē thre yere: that afterwarde they might stonde before the kyng. Amonge these now were certayne of the children of Iuda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chefe chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misac: and Asarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt with himself, that he wolde not be defyled thorow the kynges meate, ^bner ȳ wyne which he dröke. And this he desyred off the chefe chäberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himself. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before f chefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age, a d so ye shal make me loose my heade vnto f kynge.

C Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Asarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruantes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynges meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruantes. So he consented to them in this matter, a d proued thē x. dayes. And after f ten dayes, their faces were better lykynge t fatter, then all the yonge spryngaldes, which ate of the kynges meate.

Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes connyng and lernynge in all scripture and wisdom: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstandinge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to brynge in these yonge springaldes vnto him: the chefe chamberlayne brought them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge communed with them. But amonge them all were founde none soch as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Asarias. Therfore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdom and matters off vnderstōdinge, that he enquired off them, founde them ten tymes better, thē all the soythsayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yeaere of kynge Cyrus.

The ij. Chapter.

A IN the secōde yeaere off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, w here thorow his sprete was vexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge cōmaunded to call together all f soythsayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, t my sprete was so troubled therwith, f I haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer. Shewe thy seruantes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answere, a d sayde: It is gone fro me: Yf ye wil not make me vnderstonde the dreame with the interpretacon theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be prysed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meanynge therof, ye shall haue off me giftes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the significacion of it. They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruantes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answerde, sayenge: I perceaue off a treuth, that ye do but prolōge f tyme: for so moch as ye se, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therfore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgment. But ye fayne and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to put off the tyme. Therfore tell me the dreame, a d so shall I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it meaneth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answere before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which f kynge speaketh of: Yee there is nether kynge pryncer ner lorde, that euer axed soch thinges at a soythsayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyareth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

For f which cause the kynge was wroth C with greate indignaciō, and cōmaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and f proclamacion wēte forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his cōpanyons. Then Daniel enquired Arioch the kynges stewarde, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth alredy to kyll soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kynges debyte: Why hath the kynge proclaimed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kinge, f he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretacion: and then came he home agayne & shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael & Asarias his companiōs: & they shulde beseke the God of heauen for grace in this secreete, that Daniel and his felowes with other such as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. And Daniel prayd & God of heauē, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be praised for euer and euer, for wysdome and strength are his owne: ^a he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wysdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde: he openeth the depe secretes: he knoweth & thyng that lyeth in darknesse, for the light dwelleth with him.^b I thanke the, and prayse the (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wysdome and strength, & hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynges matter vnto me.

Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kinge had ordened to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not such as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kyng, and I shal shewe the kyng the interpretacion. Then Arioch brought Daniel in to the kyng in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue founde a man amonge the presoners off Iuda, & shal shewe the kinge the interpretacion. Thē answered the kyng, and sayde vnto Daniel, whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, & cast shewe me & dreame, which I haue sene, & the interpretacion therof? Daniel answered the kyng to his face, and sayde: As for this secreete, for the which the kinge maketh inquisicion: it is nether the wyse, the sorcerer, the charmer ner the deuell coniuier, that can certifie the kyng off it: Only God in heauē cā open secretes, and he it is, that sheweth the kyng Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kyng, thou didest cast in thy mynde, what shulde come hereafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this secreete is not shewed me, for eny wysdome that I haue, more then eny other luyng: but only that I might shewe the kyng the interpretacion, & that he might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kyng sawest, and beholde: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose fygure was maruelous greate, and his vysage grymme. The ymage heade was of fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body ad loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte of earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that (without eny hondes) there was hewen off a stone^d which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake thē to poulder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from & somer floores, that they cā nomore be fōude. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfilleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kyng, what it meaneth.

O kyng, thou art a kyng off kynges: For the God off heauē hath geuē the a kyngdome, ryches, strength and maiesty: & hath delyuered the all thinges, that are amōge & children off men: the beastes off the felde, ad the foules vnder the heauē, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Thou art that golde heade. After & there shal aryse another kyngdome, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrd kyngdome shal be lyke copper, and haue dominacion in all lōdes. The fourth kyngdome shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron brusseth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beateth euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so much as thou hast sene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes of the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifith: that it shalbe a kyngdome partely stronge and partely weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxte with claye: they shall myngle them selues with & sede off symple people, & yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wil not be souldered with a potsherde.

¶ In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an euerlastinge kyngdome which shall not perish, and his kyngdome shall not be geuen ouer to another people: Yee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny hondes there was cut out of the mount a stone,^a which brake the yron, the copper, y^e earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath y^e greate God shewed the kyngde, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kyng Nabuchodonosor fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meat-offrynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kyngde answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretes: seynge thou canst discover this mysterie. So the kyngde made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate gifts.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lord of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kyngde for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remainyd still in the court by the kyngde.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ NABUCHODONOSOR the kyngde caused a goldē ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hye, and sixe cubites thicke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon & sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes & nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites and shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: y^e they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kyngde had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them to gether, and came vnto the dedicatyng of y^e ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kinge had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out with all his might: O ye people, kynreddes and tungen, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shalbe blowne, with y^e harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipe the golden ymage, y^e Nabuchodonosor the kyngde hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therefore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: thē all the people, kynreddes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kyngde had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused y^e Iewes, and sayde vnto kyngde Nabuchodonosor: O kyngde, God saue thy lyfe for euer. Thou beyng kyngde hast geuen a commaudemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues toward the golden ymage: who so thē fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Now are there certayne Iewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offyces of the londe off Babilon: namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kyngde) regarde not thy cōmaudemēt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, y^e Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kyngde. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what? o Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddes? nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp? wel, be redy hereafter, when ye heare the noyse of the trōpettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all y^e other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshipe the ymage which I haue made. But yff ye worshipe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hote burnynge ouen. Let se, what god is there, [†] maye delyuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kynge, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cōsente vnto [†] in this matter, for why: [¶]oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hote burnynge ouen (O kynge) and can right wel delyuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (o kynge) that we will not serue thy goddes, ner do reuerēce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that [†] countenance of his face chaunged vpō Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago. Therefore he charched and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hotter, then it was wōte to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooste, for to bynde Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hote burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, ād cast in to the hote burnynge ouen: for the kinges commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was exceedynge hote. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in [†] hote burnynge ouen,^a beinge fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his counceyl and sayde: dyd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kynge: Yee o kynge. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goinge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothing corrupte: [¶]and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wēte Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hote burnynge ouen: he speake also, & sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruantes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges counceyl came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in their bodies:^d In so moch that the very hayre of their heade was not burnt, and their clothes vnchaunged: Yee there was no smell of fyre felt vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: [¶]Blessed be the God of Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, ād defended his seruātes, that put their trust in him: [†] haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies therypon: rather then they wolde serue or worshipe any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therefore I wil and commaūde, that all people, kynreddes & tungen, which speake eny blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shalbe prysed: Because, there is no God [†] maye saue, as this.^f So the kynge promoted Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the londe of Babylon.

[¶]Nabuchodonosor kynge, vnto all people, kynreddes and tungen that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amōge you. I thought it good to shewe the tokēs & maruelous workes, [†] [†] hye God hath wrought vpon me. [¶]O how greate are his tokēs, & how mightie are his wonders? His kyngdome is an euerlastinge kyngdome, and his power lasteth for euer and euer.

The iij. Chapter.

INABUCHODONOSOR beyng at rest in myne house, ād florishing in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me afraied: ād the thoughtes that I had vpō my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. [¶]Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wisdome at Babilō shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretation of the dreame. So there came the soysayers, charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwyse called Balthasar, accordinge to the name of my God) which hath the sprete of the holy goddes in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou prynce of saythsayers: For so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, and no secrete is hyd from the: tel me therfore, what [†] visio of my dreame ([†] I haue sene) maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, there stode a tre vpon the grounde,

With the dew of heauen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parte in the herbes of the grounde with other wylde beastes.

That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a beastes herte shall be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This erande of the watcher, is a cōmaundemēt grounded and sought out in the council off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderstonde, that the hiest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ⁊ geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, ⁊ I kyng Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therefore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for ⁊ sprete of the holy Goddes is in the.

Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ⁊ his thoughtes troubled him. So the kyng spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretacion theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my lorde, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretacion to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate ⁊ mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth in to all the worlde: whose leaues were fayre, ⁊ the frute moch: vnder the which the beastes of the felde had their habitacion, and vpon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

Euen thou (o kyng) art the tre, greate ⁊ strōge. Thy greatnesse increaseth, ⁊ reacheth vnto the heauen, so doth thy power to the endes of the earth. But where as the kyng sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the grounde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: He shall be wet with the dew off heaurn, and his parte shalbe with the beestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (o kyng) is ⁊ interpretaciō, yee it is the very deuyce of him, ⁊ is hiest of all, ⁊ it toucheth my lorde the kyng.

Thou shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an ox. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hiest hath power vpon the kyngdomes of men, ⁊ geueth them, to whom he lyst. Morouer, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be left still in the grounde: it betokeneth, ⁊ thy kyngdome shall remayne whole vnto ⁊, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power commeth from heauen. Wherefore (o kinge) be contēt with my council, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with rightuousnesse, ⁊ thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for soch thinges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kyng Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kyng walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greате cite off Babilō, which I myself (with my power ⁊ strength) haue made a kynges courte, for the honoure off my magesty. Whyle these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fell a voyce from heauē, sayenge: O kinge Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shall departe from the, thou shalt be cast out of mens company: thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an ox, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer the: euen vntill thou knowest, that the hiest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfilled vpō Nabuchodonosor: so that he was cast out off mēs cōpany, ⁊ ate grasse like an oxe. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayres were as greate as Aegles fethers, and his nailes like byrdes clawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabuchodonosor lift vp myne eyes vnto heauen, and myne vnderstondinge was restored vnto me agayne. Then gaue I thanks vnto the hiest. I magnified and praysed him that lyueth for euermore, whose power endureth allwaye, and his kyngdome from one generacion to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell vpon the earth, ^aare to be reputed as nothinge.

He handleth acordinge to his will, amōge ⁊ powers of heauen ^b⁊ amonge the inhabitours of the earth: and there is none that maye resiste his honde, or saye: ^cwhat doest thou? At the same tyme was myne vnderstondynge geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honoure of my kingdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My great estates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshipec.

Thē dyd I Nabuchodonosor, loaue, magnifie and prayse the kyng of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bringe them downe.

The b. Chapter.

BALTHASAR the kyng made a greate bancket to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greate cheare, and when he was dronken with wyne, he commaunded to brynge him ^fgolden and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Ierusalem: ^dthat the kyng and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drike therout.

So they brought the golden vessel, that was takē out of the temple of the LORDES house at Ierusalem. Then the kyng and his lordes with his quene and concubines dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and praysed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared fyngers, as it had bene of a mans honde wrytynge, right ouer agaynst the candelsticke vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kyng sawe the palme of ^fhonde ^f wrote. ^eThen chaunged the kyng his countenance, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherefore the kyng cryed mightely, ^fthat they shulde brynge him the charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels. The kyng spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the playne meanyng theroff: shall be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men: but they coude nether rede the wrytyng, ner shewe the kyng what it signified. Thē was the kyng sore afraied, in so moch, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sore vexed. So by reason off this matter, ^fhe had happened to the kyng ^g⁊ his lordes, the quene went vp herself in to the bancket house, and spake vnto the kyng, sayenge: O kyng, God saue thy life for euer: Let not thy thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenance be chaunged. For why: there is a man in thy kyngdome, that hath the sprete off the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath vnderstondinge ^{ad}wysdome like the goddes. Yee the kyng Nabuchodonosor thy father made this man chefe of the soythsayers, charmers, Caldees and deucl coniurers: because that soch an abundaunt sprete, knowlege [⁊] wisdome (to expoūde dreames, to open secretes, and to declare harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee euen in Daniel, whom the kyng named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kinge. So the kyng spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the presoners of Iuda, whom my father the kyng brought out of Iewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, experience and vnderstōdinge, and that there hath bene greate wisdome founde in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wise and conynge charmers, to rede this wrytyng, and to shewe me the meanyng theroff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, ^fthou canst expounde dареke thynges, and declare harde doutes.

^a Dan. 3. f.^b Psal. 134. a.^c Iob 42. b.^d 2 Par. 36. c.^e Iere. 50. a.^f Dan. 2. a.

Well than, yf thou canst rede this writinge, and shewe me the meaninge therof: thou shalt be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne of golde aboute thy necke, & rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

Daniel answered, and sayde before ſ kyng: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue thy rych giftes to another: "yet not thelesse, I wil rede the wrytynge vnto ſ kinge, and shewe him the interpretacion therof. O kinge, God the hyst gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, ſ dignite of a kyng, with worshipec & honour: so ſ all people, kynredde & tungen stode in awe & feare of him, by reason off the hye estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. Agayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. "But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vnto wylfulness: he was deposed from his kyngly trone, and his magesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a beestes herte, and his dwellynge was with the wyld Asses: he was fayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyst had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

E And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thou knewest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy self aboute the LORDE off heauen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, might drynke wyne therout: And hast prayed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God, "in whose honde consisteth thy breth ad all thy wayes: thou hast not loaued him.

Therefore is the palme off this honde sent hither from him, to token vp this wrytynge. And this is the scripture, that is written vp: Mane, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretacon off the thyng is this: Mane, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weyed in the balaunce, and art founde to light: Phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to cloth

Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacion concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome. "The very same night was Balthasar the kyng off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beyng lxij. yere off age.

The vi. Chapter.

IT pleased Darius to set ouer his kīgdome A an C. and xx. lordes, which shulde be in all his kingdome aboute. Aboute these he set thre prynces (off whom Daniel was one) that the lordes might geue accomptes vnto them, and the kyng to be vndiseased.

But Daniel exceeded all these princes ad lordes, for the sprete off God was plenteous in him: so that the kyng was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherefore the prynces and lordes sought, to pyke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fawte vpon him. For why: he was so faythful, ſ there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no quarell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the princes and lordes together vnto the kyng, and sayde thus vnto him: kyng Darius, God saue thy life for euer.

All the great estates off the realme: as ſ B prynces, dukes, senatours and iudges, are determed to put out a commaundement off ſ kyng, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyareth eny peticion, ether off eny god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) excepte it be only off the, O kyng: the same person maye be cast in to the Lyons denne. Wherefore, o kyng, confirme thou this statute, and make a wrytynge: that the thyng which the Medes and Perses haue ordered be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the wrytynge, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the wrytynge was made, he wente in to his house: and the wyndowes of his hall toward Jerusalem stode open. There kneeled he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his peticion, and prayed his God, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his petition, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kynge, and spake before him concernynge his commaundement, sayenge: O kynge, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyren his petition off eny god or man, but only of thyself, o kynge: he shalbe cast in to the denne of the Lyons? The kynge answered, ad sayde: yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of ʒ Medes and Perses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kynge: Daniel one of the presoners of Iuda (O kynge) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his petition thre tymes a daye. When the kynge herde these wordes, he was sore greued, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to deluyuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Sonne wete downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

These men perceauynge the kynges mynde, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kynge) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kynge maketh, maye not be altered. "Then the kynge bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him in to the Lyons denne.

The kynge also spake vnto Daniel, ad sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kynge sealed with his owne rynge, and with ʒ signet of his prynces: that the kynges commaundement concernynge Daniel, shulde not be broken.

So the kynge wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take eny slepe. But be tymes in the mornynge at the breake off the daye, the kynge arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto ʒ dene, he cried with a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Yee ʒ kige spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruauit off the luyynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to deluyuer the from the Lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kynge: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer:

^a My God hath sent his angel, which hath shut the Lyons mouthes, so that they might not hurte me. For why: myne vngiltynesse is founde out before him. And as for the (o kynge) I neuer offended the.

Then was the kynge excedinge glad, ad commaunded to take Daniel out off the denne. So Daniel was brought out of the dene, and no maner of hurte was founde vpō him. For he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the kige commaunded to bringe them, and to cast them in the Lyons denne: "them, their children and their wyues. So the Lyons had the mastyry of them, and brake all their bones a sonder, or euer they came at the grounde.

"After this, wrote kynge Darius vnto all people, kynreddes and tungen, that dwelt in all londes: peace be multiplied with you: My commaundement is, in all my dominio and kyngdome, that men feare and stonde in awe off Daniels God:

"For he is the luyinge God, which abydeh euer: his kyngdome shall not fayle, and his power is euerlastynge. It is he that deluyuereth, and saueth: "he doth wonders and maruelous workes, in heauen and in earth: he hath preserued Daniel from the power of the Lyons. "This Daniel prospered in the raigne off Darius and Cirus of Persia.

The vij. Chapter.

IN the first yeaere off Balthasar kynge off Babilon, sawe Daniel a dreame, and a vision was in his heade vpon his bedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe of the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision by nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of ʒ heauen stroue vpon the see, and foure greate beestes came vp from the see, one vnlike another.

The first was as a lyon, and yet had he Aegles wynges. "I sawe, that his wynges were plucte from him, and he taken awaye from the earth: that he stode vpon his fete as a man, "and that there was geuen him a mans herte.

Beholde, the seconde beest was like a Beer, and stode vpon the one syde. "Amonge his teth in his mouth he had iij. greate lōge teth and it was sayde vnto him: Arise, eate vp moch flesh.

Then I loked, ʒ beholde, there was another like vnto a Leopard: this had wynges as a foule, euen foure vpon the backe. This beest had foure heades, ad there was power geuen him. ^a After this I sawe in a vision by night, ^b beholde: the fourth beest was grymme and horrible, and maruelous stronge. It had greate yron teth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder fete. It was farre vnlike the other beestes that were before it: ^c for it had ten hornes, wheroff I toke good hede.

And beholde, there came vp amonge the, another like horne, before whom there were thre of the first hornes pluckte awaye. Beholde, this horne had eyes like a mā, ^d a mouth speakynge presumptuous thinges. ^e I loked till the seates were prepared, ad till the olde aged sat him downe. His clothinge was as white as snowe, and the hayres of his heade like the pure woll.

His trone was like the fire flame, and his wheles as the burnynge fyre. There drew forth a fire streame, ^f and wente out from him. ^g A thousand tymes a thousande serued him, ^h x. M. tymes ten thousande stode before him. The iudgmēt was set, and the bokes opened. Then toke I hede there vnto, because of the voyce of the proude wordes, which that horne spake.

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, ⁱ ^j ^k geuen ouer to be brent in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken awaye, but their lyues were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by night, and beholde: ^l there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power ad dignite regall, ^m that all people, trybes and tungen shulde serue him. His power is an euerlastinge power, which shal neuer be put downe: ⁿ his kyngdome endureth vncorrupte. ^o My herte was vexed, ^p I Daniel had a troubled sprete within me, ad the visions off my heade made me afayed: ^q till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all these thinges. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstode the interpretaciō of these thinges.

These foure greate beastes, are foure kynges which shal aryse out of the earth. These shal take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more ^r more for a longe season. After this I requyred diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnlike the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teth were of yron, and his nales off brasse: which deuoured and destroyed, and stamped the resydue vnder his fete. ^s I desyred also to knowe the treuth, as touchinge the ten hornes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face there fell downe thre: which horne had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous thinges, and loked with a grimmer visage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same horne made battail agaynst the sayntes, yee ad gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geuē to the chefast sayntes: and till the tyme, that ^t sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answer: That fourth beest shalbe the fourth kyngdome vpon earth: it shalbe more then all other kyngdomes, it shal deuoure, treade downe ad destroye all other londes.

^u The ten hornes, are ten kynges that shal aryse out of that kyngdome, after whō there shal stonde vp another, which shall be greater then the first.

He shall subdue thre kynges, and shall speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shall destroye the sayntes of the most hyest, and thynke, that he maye chaunge tymes and lawes. ^v They shall be geuen vnder his power, vntill a tyme, two tymes, and half a tyme.

But the iudgment shalbe kepte, so that his power shalbe taken from him, for he shal be destroyed, and perish at the last. As for the kyngdome, power and all might that is vnder the heauen: it shal be geuen to the holy people off the most hyest, ^w whose kyngdome is euerlastinge, yee all powers shal serue and obeye him. Thus farre extēde ^x wordes.

Neuerthelesse, I Daniel was so vexed in my thoughtes, that my countenance chaunged, ^y but the wordes I kepte still in my herte.

The viii. Chapter.

A IN the thirdre yeare off the raigne of kinge Balthasar, there appeared a visiō vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. "I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chefe cite, which lyeth in the londe off Elam) and in $\frac{v}{y}$ vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Vlai.

Then I helde vp, and sawe: and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hiest came vp last. I sawe that this ramme pusshed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the grounde.

This goate had a maruelous goodly horne betwixte his eyes, and came vnto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcely vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beyng very feerce vpon him: yee he gaue him such a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Nether had the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vnder his fete: and no man was able to delyuer the ramme out of his power.

B The goate waxed exceedinge greate, and when he was at the strongest, his greate horne was broken also. Then grewe there other foure soch like in the steade, towarde the foure wyndes off the heauen. ^bYee out of one of the leest off these hornes, there came vp yet another horne, which waxed maruelous greate: towarde the south, towarde the east, and towarde the fayre pleasaunt londe. It grewe vp to the hoost off heauen, wherof it dyd cast some downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fete.

Yee it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might cast downe the verite to the grounde, and so to prospere in all thinges, that it went aboute. Vpon this I herde one off the sayntes speakyng, which saynte sayde vnto one that axed this question:

How longe shall this vision off the daylie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhominacion endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vnder fote? And he answered him: Vnto the euenynge & the morninge, euen two thousande and three hundred dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be clesed agayne.

Now when I Daniel had sene this vision, C and sought for the vnderstandinge of it: beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Vlai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstonde the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his cōminge, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marcke well, for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfilled. Now as he was speakyng vnto me, I waxed faynte, so that I suncke downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sayenge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last wrath: for in the tyme appoynted it shal be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kynge off the Medes & Perses: but the goate is the kynge of Greke londe: the greate horne that stode betwixte his eyes, that is the pryncipall kynge. But where as it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifieth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodlynnesse D is a growinge) there shall aryse a kynge off an vnshamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakinges.

He shalbe mightie and stronge, but not in his owne strength. He shall destroye aboue measure, and all that he goeth aboute, shall prospere: he shall slaye the stronge and holy people. And thorow his craftynes, falsede shall prospere in his honde, his herte shall be proude, and many one shall he put to death in his welthynesse. He shal stonde vp agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shalbe destroyed without honde. ^aAnd this vision that is shewed vnto the, is as sure as the evenynge and the mornynge. Therefore wryte thou vp this sight, ^bfor it wylbe longe or it come to passe.

Vpon this was I Daniel very faynte, so that I laye sicke certayne dayes: but whan I rose vp, I wente aboute the kynges busynesse, and marueled at the vision, neuerthelesse no man knewe of it.

The ix. Chapter.

IN the first yere off Darius the sonne off Ahasuerus, ^cwhich was of the sede off the Medes, ^dwas made kynge ouer the realme of the Caldees: Yee euen in the first yere off his raigne, I Daniel desyred to knowe the yearly nombre out of the bokes, ^ewherof the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet: that Ierusalem shulde lie waist lxx. yeres: ^fad I turned me vnto God the LORDE, ^gfor to praye and make myne intercessiō, with fastinge, sack cloth ^had ashes I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowledg, sayenge:

O LORDE, thou greates ⁱfearfull God, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commaundementes: ^jWe haue synned, we haue offended, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe: yee we haue departed from all thy preceptes and iudgmentes.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruantes the prophetes, that spake in thy name to oure kynges and prynces to oure fore fathers, and to all the people off the londe. ^kO LORDE, rightuousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertayneth nothyng but open shame: as it is come to passe this daye vnto euery man of Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem:

Yee vnto all Israel, whether they be farre or nye: thorow out all londes, wherin thou hast strowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

I Yee o LORDE, vnto vs, to oure kinges ^land prynces, to oure fore fathers: euen to vs all, that haue offended the, ^mbelongeth open shame. But vnto the o LORDE oure God, pertayneth mercy and forgeuenesse. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruantes the prophetes: ⁿyee all Israel haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not herkened vnto thy voyce.

^oWherfore the curse and ooth, that is written in the law of Moses the seruaut of God (against whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath perfourmed his wordes, ^pwhich he spake agaynst vs, ^qand agaynst oure iudges that iudged vs: to bringe vpon vs soch a greates plage, as neuer was vnder heauen, like as it is now come to passe in Ierusalem. Yee all this plage, as it is written in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORDE oure God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite. Therefore hath ^rthe LORDE made haist, to bringe this plage vpon vs: for the LORDE oure God is rightuous, in all his workes which he doth: for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, o LORDE oure God, thou that ^swith a mightie honde hast brought thy people out of Egipte, to get thy self a name, which remayneth this daye: we haue synned (o LORDE) ^tand done wickedly agaynst all thy rightuousnes: yet let thy wrothfull displeasure be turned awaye (I beseeke the) from thy cite Ierusalem thy holy hill. And why? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse of oure forefathers: is Ierusalem and thy people abhorred, of all them that are aboute vs. Now therfore (O oure God) heare the prayer of thy seruaut, and his intercession: ^uO let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waist.

O my God, encline thine eare, and herken (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes: beholde how we be desolated, yee and the cite also, which is called after thy name: For we do not cast oure prayers before the in oure owne rightuousnesse, no: but only in thy greates mercies. O LORDE, heare: O forgeue LORDE: O LORDE conside, tary not ouer longe: but for thine owne sake do it, O my God: for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

As I was yet speakinge at my prayers, ^vI knowleginge myne owne synnes and ^wsynnes of my people, makeinge so myne intercession before the LORDE my God, for the holy 3E Gabriel ("whom I had sene afore in the vision) came flyenge to me, and touched me aboute ¶ offeringe tyme in the euenynge. He in-fourmed me, and spake vnto me: O Daniel (sayde he) I am now come, to make the vnderstonde it: For as soone as thou begannest to make thy prayer, it was so diuysed, and therefore am I come to shewe the. ¶ And why? for thou art a man greatly beloued.

Wherefore, pondre the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstonde the vision. Lxx. wekes are determed ouer thy people, ¶ ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse maye be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bringe in euerlastinge rightuousnesse, to fulfill ¶ visions and the prophetes, and to anynte the most holy one. Vnderstode this then, and marcke it well: "that from the tyme it shalbe concluded, to go and repayre Ierusalem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anynted) prynce: there shalbe seuen wekes. Then shall the stretes ¶ walles be buylded agayne lxij. wekes, but with harde troublous tyme. After these lxij. wekes, shal Christ be slayne, ¶ they shal haue no pleasure in him. Then shal there come a people with the prynce, and destroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his ende shal come as the water floude. But the desolacion shall continue till the ende of the batell.

He shall make a stronge bonde with many, for the space of a weke: and when the weke is half gone, he shal put downe the slayne and meatoffringe. ¶ And in the temple there shalbe an abhominable desolaciō, till it haue destroyed all. And it is concluded, ¶ this waistinge shal continue vnto the ende.

The r. Chapter.

3A I N the third yeare of kinge Cirus of Persia, there was shewed vnto Daniel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee a true matter, but it is yet a longe tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and perceaued what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space of three wekes, so that I had no lust to eate bred: as for flesh and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I dyd not ones anynte my self, till the whole thre wekes were out.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greate floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and loked: and beholde, a man clothed in lynnynge, "whose loynes were gyrded vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Chrysolite stone, his face (to loke vpon) was like lightenyng, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and fete were like fayre glisteringe metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like ¶ voyce of a multitude.

¶ I Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greate fearfulnessse fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greate vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Yee I lost my coloure clene, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Yet herde I the voyce of his wordes: ¶ as soone as I herde it, fayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hande touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees ¶ vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: "O Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto ¶, ¶ stode right vp, for vnto ¶ am I now sent.

And when he had sayde these wordes, I stode vp tremblinge. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the first daye that thou set thine herte to vnderstonde, and didest chasten thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou begannest to speake, had not the prynce ouer the kingdome of the Perses with stonde me xxj. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chefe prynces, ¶ came to helpe me, him haue I left by the kinge of Persia, ¶ am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to ¶ grounde, and helde my tunge. Beholde, there touched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lorde, my ioyntes are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strēgth within me: How maye my lordes seruaunt then talke with my lorde? seinge there is no strength in me, so that I can not take my breth? Vpon this there touched me agayne, one moch like a man, & comforted me, sayenge: "O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recouered, & sayde: Speake on my lorde, for thou hast refresshed me. Thē sayde he: knowest thou wherfore I am come vnto ſ? now wil I go agayne to fight with the prynce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the prynce of Grekelonde shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the thinge, ſ is fast noted in the scripture of treuth. And as for all yonder matters, there is none that helpeth me in them, but Michael youre prynce.

The xi. Chapter.

AND in the first yere of Darius of Media, I stode by him, to comforte him, & to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the treuth. Beholde, there shal stonde vp yet three kynges in Persia, but ſ fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chefest power of his riches, he shal prouoke euery man agaynst the realme of Grekelonde. Then shal there arise yet a mightie kinge, that shal rule with greate dominion, and do what him list. And as soone as his kingdome commeth vp, it shalbe destroyed, & deuyded towarde ſ foure wyndes of the heauen. They ſ come after him, shall not haue soch power & dominion as he: but his kingdome shalbe scatred, yee euen amonge other thē those. And the kyng of ſ south shalbe mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself strōge, & shal rule his dominiō with greate power.

But after certayne yeaes they shalbe ioyned together, & the kynges daughter of the south shal come to the kyng of the north, for to make frēdshipec, but she shal not optayne the power of that arme, nether shall she be able to endure thorow his might: but she, & soch as brought her (yee & he ſ begat her, & comforted her for his tyme) shalbe deliuered vp. Out of ſ braunches of hir rote, there shal one stonde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kynges londe of the north, & handle him accordinge to his strength. As for their Idols & prynces, with their costly

Jewels of golde & syluer, he shal cary them awaye captyues in to Egipte, and he shal preuayle agaynst the kyng of the north certayne yeaes. And when he is come in to ſ kynges realme of ſ south, he shal be fayne to turne agayne in to his owne londe. Wherfore his sonnes shalbe displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greate hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterflood: then shal he returne, and go forth with defyenge and boostinge vnto his owne londe.

Thē the kinge of ſ south shalbe angrie, and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kinge of the north: Yee he shal bringe a greate multitude of people together, and a greate heape shalbe geuē in to his honde: these shal he cary awaye with greate pryde, for so moch as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shall not preuayle. For ſ kinge of ſ north shal gather (of the new) a greater heape of people then afore, & come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeaes) with a mightie hoost & excedinge greate good.

At the same tyme there shall many stonde vp agaynst the kinge of the south, so that ſ wicked children of thy people also shal exalte them selues (to fulfill the vision) and then fall. So the kinge of the north shall come to laye sege, and to take the strōge fensed cities: And the power of thē of ſ south shal not be able to abyde him, & the best men of the people shall not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he commeth, he shall handle him as he list, & no man shalbe so hardy as to stonde agaynst him. He shal stōde in the pleasaunt cowntre, which thorow him shalbe destroyed. He shal set his face with all his power to optayne his kingdome, & to be like it. Yee that shal he do, & geue him vnto the daughters amōge women, to destroye him. But he shal fayle, nether shal he optayne his purpose. After this, shall he set his face vnto the lles, & take many of thē. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confucion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne londe, stomble, & fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him & dyd him violence, shal stonde in his place, & haue a pleasaunt kingdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, & that nether in wrath ner

Din batell. In his steade there shal aryse a vyle person not holdē worthy of a kinges dignite: this shall come in craftely, & optayne the kingdom with fayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mightie (& destroye them,) yee & agaynst the prynce of the couenaunt.

So after y^e he hath taken truce with him, he shal hadle disceatfully: that he maye get vp, & ouer come him with a small flocke: & so with craftynesse to get him to y^e fattest place of the londe, and to deale otherwise, then ether his fathers or graūdfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge, y^e they had robbed & spoyled, yee & all their substaunce: ymagenyng thoughtes agaynst the strōge holdes, & that for a tyme. His power and herte shalbe sterred vp with a greate armye agaynst the kinge of the south: where thorow the kinge of the south shalbe moued then vnto batell, with a greate & mightie hoost also. Neuerthelesse, he shal not be able to stonde, for they shall conspyre agaynst him. Yee they y^e eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, & many be slayne downe.

These two kinges shalbe mynded to do myschefe, & talke of disceat at one table: but they shal not prospere: "for why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme apoynted. Thē shall he go home agayne in to his owne londe with greate good, & set his herte agaynst the holy couenaunt, he shalbe busy agaynst it, & then returne home. At the tyme apoynted he shal come agayne, & go towarde the south: So shall it happen otherwise then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cythim shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten & turne agayne: "y^e he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenaunt of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Yee he shal turne him, & drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenaunt.

E He shal set mightie men to vnhalowe the sanctuary of strēth, to put downe the daylie offeringe, & to set vp the abhominable desolacion. And soch as breake the couenaunt, shal he flate with fayre wordes. But y^e people that wil knowe their God, shal haue the ouerhāde and prospere. Those also that haue vnderstandinge amonge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: & for a longe season, they shalbe persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captyuyte & with the takynge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shalbe set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them faynedly.

Yee some of those which haue vnderstondynge shal be persecuted also: y^e they maye be tryed, purified & clēsed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme apoynted. The kinge shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God: Yee he shal speake maruelous thinges agaynst the God of all goddes, wherin he shal prospere, so "longe till the wrath be fulfilled, for the conclusion is deuyssed alreedy. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shall be vpon womē: Yee he shal not care for eny God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshipe the mightie Idols: & the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honour with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasaunt Iewels.

This shal he do, sekinge helpe and succoure at the mightie Idols and straunge goddes. Soch as wil receaue him, and take him for God, he shal geue them greate worshipe and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shall come agaynst him with charettes, horsmen & with a greate nauy of shippes. He shal come in to the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entre also in to the fayre pleasaunt londe. "Many cities & countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab & the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shall stretch forth his hōdes vpon the countrees, & the londe of Egipte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer & golde, & ouer all the precious Iewels of Egipte, Lybia and Ethiopia. "Neuerthelesse the tydings out of the east and the north shall trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye & curse a greate multitude. The tentes of his palace shal he pytch betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary, "for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

A THE tyme wil come also, that the greate prynce Michael,^a which stondeth on thy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble,^b such as neuer was, sens there begāne to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal thy people be deluyered, yee all those that be foude written in the boke. ^c Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to euerlastinge life, some to perpetuall shame & reprofte. ^d The wyse (such as haue taught other) shal glister, as the shyninge of heauen: and those that haue instructe the multitude vnto godlynnesse, shalbe as the starres, worlde without ende.

B And thou o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, & seale the boke, till the last tyme. Many shal go aboute here and there, and thē shal knowlege increase. So I Daniel loked, and beholde, there stode other two: one vpon this shore of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. The first Chapter.

FIRST, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: Go thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childrē by her: ^bfor the lōde hath cōmitted greate whordome agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer ſ daughter of Deblaim: which conceaued, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: 'call his name Iesrael, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Iesrael vpon the house of Iehu, and will bringe the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Iesrael.

B She conceaued yet agayne, and bare a daughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Loruhamā (that is, not opteyninge mercy)^a for I wil haue no pyte vpon the house of Israel, but forget them, and put them clene out of remembrance. ^b Neuerthelesse I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Iuda, & wil saue them, euen thorow the LORDE their God. But I wil not delyuer them thorow eny bow, swerde, batel, horses or horsmen.

Now when she had weened Loruhamā, she conceaued agayne, & bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Amī (that is to saye, not my people.) For why? ye are not my people, therefore wil not I be yours. ^c And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place where it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be ^d y childrē of the Iuyngē God. ^e Then shal the children of Iuda and the childrē of Israel be gathered together agayne, & chose them selues one heade, and then departe out of the londe: for greete shalbe the daye of Iesrael.

The ij. Chapter.

A TELL youre brethren, that they are my people: and youre sisteren, that they haue optayned mercy. As for youre mother, ye shal chide with her, and reprove her: for she is not my wife,^f nether am I hir huszbōde: vnlesse she put away hir whordome out of my sight, and hir adoutry from hir brestes. Yf no, I shal strype her naked, & set her, euen as she came in to ^g y worlde: Yee I shal laye hir waist, and make her like a wilderness, and slaye her for thyrste. I shal haue no pite also vpon hir children, ^h for they be the children of fornicacion.

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to cōfucion.

ⁱ For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bred, my woll & my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shal not fynde hir fotestoppes: and though she runne after hir louers, yet shall she not get them: ^j she shal seke them, but not fynde them. Then shal she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first huszbōde, for at ^k y tyme was I better at ease, then now. B But this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet gaue her corne, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal.

^l Wherefore now will I go take my corne & wyne agayne in their season, and fet agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. ^m And now will I dyscouer hir foolishnesse, euen in the sight of hir louers, and no man shal delyuer her out of my hondes. Morouer, I wil take awaye all hir myrth,ⁿ hir holy dayes, hir new moones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feastes: I will destroye hir vynyardes and fyge trees, though she saieth: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a wodde, and the wyld beestes shall eate it vp: I will punysh her also for the dayes of Baal,^o wherein she censured him, deckyngē him with hir earynges and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saieth the LORDE.

Wherefore beholde, I wil call her againe, bringe her in to a wildernes, and speake frendly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyardes agayne,^p yee and the valley of Achor also, to shewe hir hope & comforte. Then shal she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, & like as in the daye ^q when she came out of the londe of Egipte. Then (saieth the LORDE) C she shal saye vnto me: O my houszbande, & shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, yee she shal neuer remembre their names eny more. ^r Then wil I make a couenaunt with them, with the wyld beastes, with the foules of the ayre, & with euery thinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

^s As for bowe, swerde and batel, I wil destroye soch out of the londe, & wil make them to slepe safely. ^t Thus wil I mary the vnto myne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I mary the, in rightuousnesse, in equitye, in lounge kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also will I mary the vnto my self, & thou shalt knowe the LORDE. At the same tyme wil I shewe my self frendly and gracious vnto ¶ heauens, saith the LORDE: ¶ the heauens shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe the corne, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Iesrael. I wil sowe them vpō earth, for a sede to myne owne self, ¶ wil haue mercy vpon her, ¶ was without mercy. And to thē which were not my people,^a I wil saye: thou art my people. And he shal saye: thou art my God.

The iij. Chapter

A THEN sayde ¶ LORDE to me: ^bGo yet thy waye ¶ woue an aduouterous womā, whō thy neighboure loueth, as ¶ LORDE doth the childrē of Israel: how be it they haue respecte to straunge goddes,^c and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for xv. syluerlinges, and for an Homer and an half of bariye, ¶ sayde vnto her: Thou shalt byde with me a longe season, but se that thou playest not the harlot, and loke thou medle with none other man, ¶ then wil I kepe my self for the.

B Thus the childrē of Israel shal syt a greate whyle without kinge and pryncē,^d without offerynge and aluter, without prest and reuelacion. But after warde shal the children of Iesrael conuerte, and seke the LORDE their God, and ^eDauid their kinge: and in ¶ latter dayes they shal worshipe the LORDE, and his louynge kyndnesse.

The iiij. Chapter.

A HEARE ¶ worde of the LORDE, o ye children of Israel: For the LORDE must punysh thē, ¶ dwel in the londe. And why? There is no faithfulnessse, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lōde: but swearinge, lyēge, māslaughter, theft and aduouty haue gotten the ouerhande, ¶ one bloudgiltynesse foloweth another. Therefore shal the londe be in a miserable case, and all they that dwell therein, shal mourne. The beastes in the felde, the foules in ¶ ayre, and the fishes in the see shall dye. Yet is there none, that wil chastē nor reproue another.
 The prestes which shulde reforme other mē, are become like the people.

B Therefore stomblest thou in ¶ daye tyme, ¶ the prophet with the in the night. I wil bringe thy mother to sylence, ¶ why? ^fmy people perish, because they haue no knowlege. Seinge then that thou hast refused vnderstandinge, therefore wil I refuse ¶ also: so that thou shalt nomore be my prest. And for so moch as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy childrē. The more they increased in multitude, the more they synned agaynst me, therefore wil I chaunge their honoure in to shame. ^gThey eate vp the synnes of my people, ¶ corage them in their wickednesse. ^hThus the prest is become like the people. ⁱWherfore I will punysh them for their wicked wayes, ¶ rewarde them accordinge to their owne ymaginacions. They shal eate, ¶ not haue ynough: They haue vsed whordome, therefore shall they not prospere: ¶ why? they haue forsaken the LORDE, ¶ not regarded him.

Whordome, wyne and dronckennesse take the herte awaye. ^kMy people axe counel at their stockes, their staffe must tell them. For an whorish mynde hath disceaueed them, so ¶ they cōmitte fornicacion agaynst their God.
^lThey make sacrifice vpon the hie moun-taynes, ¶ burne their incense vpon the hilles, yee amonge the okes, groues ¶ buszshes, for there are good shadowes. Therefore youre daughters are become harlottes, and youre spouses haue brokē their wedlocke I wil not punish youre daughters for beinge defyled, ¶ youre brydes that became whores: ^mseinge the fathers them selues haue medled with har-lottes, and offered with vnthriftes: but the people that wil not vnderstonde, must be punyshed.

Though thou Israel art disposed to playe ¶ harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Iuda: ⁿthou shuldest not haue runne to Galgala, ner haue gone vp to Bethaūē, ner haue sworne: the LORDE lyueth. For Israel is gone backe, like a wāton cowe. The LORDE therefore shal make hir fede, as ¶ lābe ¶ goeth astraye. And where as Ephraim is become partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. Their dronckēnesse hath put thē backe, ¶ brought them to whordome. Their rulers loue rewardes, brynge (saye they,) to their owne shame. A wynde shall take holde of their fethers, ¶ they shal be cōfounded in their offeringes.

The v. Chapter.

HEARE this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Israel: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punysshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spred net vnto the mount of Thabor: They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therwith: ^atherefore wil I punyssh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Israel is not hyd fro me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Israel is defyled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so ^y they can not knowe the LORDE.

^b But the pryde of Israel wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Israel and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Iuda with them also. ^c They shall come with their shepe & bullockes to seke ^y LORDE, ^d but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastard children: a moneth therfore shall deuoure them with their porcions.

^e Blowe with the shawmes at Gabea, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethauen vpon the yonside of Ben Iamin. In the tyme of ^y plague shal Ephraim be layed waiste, therfore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Israel. ^f Yet are the prynces of Iuda become like them, that remoue the londemarckes, therfore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Ephraim is oppressed, and can haue no right of the lawe: for why? they folowe ^y doctrynes of men. Therfore wil I be vnto Ephraim as a moth, & to the house of Iuda as a caterpillar.

^g When Ephraim sawe his sicknesse, and Iuda his disease: Ephraim wente vnto Assur, and sent vnto kinge Iareb: yet coude not he helpe you, ner ease you of youre payne. I am vnto Ephraim as a lyon, and as a lyons whelp to the house of Iuda. Euen I, I wil spoyle them, & go my waye. I wil take them with me, and no man shal rescue them. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they waxe faynt, and seke me.

The vi. Chapter

IN their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: ^h for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: He hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vp agayne: after two dayes shal he quyen vs, in the thirde daye he shal rase vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, & endeuoure oure selues to knowe the LORDE. He shal go forth as the sprynge of the daye, ⁱ and come vnto vs as the euenynge and mornynge rayne vpon the earth.

O Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? O Iuda, how shal I intreate the? seynge youre loue is like a mornynge cloude, & like a dew ^j goeth early awaye. Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, & letten them be slayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punysshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in louynge kyndnesse, and not in offerynge: ^k Yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. ^l But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of theues, murderers & bloudthurstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. ^m Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Israel, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Israel is defyled: but Iuda shall haue an haruest for himself, when I returne the captiuyte of my people.

The vij. Chapter.

WHEN I vndertake to make Israel ⁿ whole, then the vngraciousnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robberyng. They cōsidre not in their hertes, that I remēbre all their wickednes. They go aboute with their owne ynuenciōs, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the princes, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduouty, as it were an ouen ^y the baker heateth, whē he hath lefte kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode droncken thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with such as disceauē thē. They with the ymaginacion of their herte are like an ouē, their slepe is all ^y night like the slepe of a baker, in the mornynge is he as hote as the flame of fyre: they are altogether as hote as an ouen.

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are fallē: yet is there none of thē y^e calleth vpon me. Therfore must Ephraim be mixte amonge y^e Heithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, y^e no man turneth: straungers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he waxeth ful of gray haire, yet wil he not knowe it: ⁊ y^e pride of Israel is cast downe before their face, yet wil they not turne to the LORDE their God, ner seke him, for all this.

Ⓒ Ephraim is like a doue, that is begyled, and hath no herte. ^a Now call they vpon the Egipcians, now go they to the Assirians: but whyle they be goinge here and there, I shal sprede my net ouer them, ⁊ drawe them downe as y^e foules of the ayre: and accordinge as they haue bene warned, so will I punysh them. ^c Wo be vnto them, for they haue forsakē me. They must be destroyed, for they haue set me at naught. ^d I am he that haue redeemed them, and yet they dyssemble with me. They call not vpon me with their hartes, but lye youlinge vpon their beddes. Where as they come together, it is but for meate ⁊ drincke, and me will they not obeye. I haue taught them, and defended their arme, yet do they ymagin myschefe agaynst me. They turne them selues, but not a right, ⁊ are become as a broken bowe. Their prynces shalbe slayne with the swearde, for the malice of their tungen, soch blasphemies haue they lerned in the londe of Egipte

The viij. Chapter.

Ⓒ SET the horne to thy mouth, and blowe: ^a get the swiftly (as an Aegle) vnto the house of the LORDE: for they haue broken my couenant, and transgressed my lawe. Israel can saye vnto me: thou art my God, we knowe the: but he hath refused the thinge that is good, therefore shall the enemye folowe vpon him. ^b They haue ordered kinges, but not thorow me: they haue made prynces, and I must not knowe of it. ^c Of their syluer and golde haue they made them ymages, to bringe them selues to destruction.

^a Thy calfe (O Samaria) shalbe taken awaye, for my wrothfull indignacion is gone forth agaynst the. How longe wil it be, or they can be clensed? For the calfe came from Israel, the worke man made it, therfore can it be no God, but euen to a spyders webbe shal y^e calfe of Samaria be turned. They haue sowne wynde, therfore shal they reepe a storme.

Their sede shal beare no corne, there shal no meel be made of their increase: though y^ere be, yet shall straungers deuoure it vp. Israel shall perish, the Gentiles shall entreate him as a foule vessel. Sens they went vp to the Assirians, they are become like a wylde asse in the deserte.

^a Ephraim geueth rewardes to get louers, therfore are they scatred amōge the Heithē, there wil I gather them vp. They shal soone be weery of the burthen of kinges ⁊ prynces. Ephraim hath made many altuers to do wickednes, therfore shal the altuers turne to his synne. Though I shewe thē my lawe neuer so moch, they counte it but straunge doctrine. Whereas they do sacrifice, offeringe the flesh and eatinge it: the LORDE will haue no pleasure therein: but wil remembre their wickednes, and punysh their synnes. ^b Israel turneth agayne in to Egipte, they haue forgotten him that made them, they buylde churches, and Iuda maketh many stronge cities: therfore wil I sende a fyre in to their cities, and it shal consume their places.

The ix. Chapter.

DO not thou triumphe (O Israel) make ^a no boostinge more then the Heithen, for thou hast cōmitted aduoutry agaynst thy God: straunge rewardes hast thou loued, more thē all corne floores. ^b Therfore shall they nomore enioye the cornefloores and wynepresses, and their swete wyne shal fayle thē. haue soch lust vnto, shal not come in the house of the LORDE. What wil ye do then in the solempne dayes, and in the feast of the LORDE? lo, they shall get them awaye for the destruccion, Egypte shal receaue them, & Noph shal bury them.

The nettles shall ouergrowe their pleasaunt goodes, and burres shalbe in their tabernacles. B Be ye sure (O Israel) the tyme of visitacion is come, the dayes of recompencing are at honde. As for the prophet, ye holde him for a foole: and him that is rich in the sprete, for a mad man: so greates is youre wickednes and malice. Ephraim hath made himself a watchman of my God, a prophet y^e is become a snare to do hurte in euery strete, and abhominacion in the house of his God. They be gone to farre, & haue destroyed the selues, like as they dyd afore tyme at Gabaa. Therefore their wickednes shal be remebred, and their synnes punyshed.

I fande Israel like grapes in the wildernes, & sawe their fathers as the first fyges in y^e toppe of y^e fyge tre. But they are gone to Baal Peor, & runne awaie fro me to y^e shamefull Idoll, & are become as abhominable as their louers Ephraim flieth like a byrde, so shal their glory also: In so moch, y^e they shal nether begette, cōceauē ner beare children.

C And though they bringe vp eny, yet will I make them childlesse amonge men. Yee wo shall come to them, when I departe from them. Ephraim (as me thinke) is planted in welthynesse, like as Tyrus, but now must she bringe hir owne children forth to the manslayer.

O LORDE thou shalt geue them: what shalt thou geue them? geue them an vnfrutefull wombe and drye brestes. All their wickednesse is done at Galgal, there do I abhorre them. For the vngraciousnes of their owne inuencions, I wil dryue them out of my house. I will loue them nomore, for all their prynces are vnfaithfull. Ephraim is hewen downe, their rote is dried vp, so y^e they shal bringe nomore frute: yee and though they bringe forth eny, yet wil I slaye euen the best beloued frute of their body. My God shall cast them awaye, for they haue not bene obediēt vnto him, therefore shal they go astraye amonge the Heithen.

The r. Chapter.

ISRRAEL was a goodly vyne, but he hath A brought forth vnprofitable frute: yee the more frute he had, the mo altuers he made: y^e more good I dyd to their londe, the more friendship shewed they to their ymages. Their herte is deuyded, therefore wil they be destroyed. The LORDE shall breake downe their ymages, he shal destroye their altuers. Then shal they saye: we haue no kinge, for why? we haue not feared the LORDE. And what shal then the kinge do to vs? They comon together, and sweare vayne oothes: they be cōfederate together, therefore groweth their punyishment, as the wedes in the forowes of the londe.

They that dwell in Samaria haue worshipped the calfe of Bethauē: therefore shall the people mourne ouer them, yee and the prestes also, that in their welthynesse reioysed with them: and why? it shal passe awaye from them. It shalbe brought to the Assirian, for a present vnto kinge Iareb. Ephraim shal receaue full punishment: Israel shal be confounded for his owne ymaginacions, Samaria with his kinge shall vanish awaye, as the scomme vpon the water. The hye places of Auen where Israel do synne, shal be cast downe: thistles and thornes shal growe vpon their altuers. Then shal they saye to y^e mountaynes: couer vs, and to the hilles: fall vpon vs.

O Israel, thou hast synned as Gabaa dyd afore tyme, where they remayned: shulde not the batel then come vpon the wicked children, as wel as vpon the Gabaonites? I wil chasten them, euen after myne owne desyre, the people shal be gathered together ouer them, whē I punysh them for their greates wickednesse. Ephraim was vnto me, as a cow that is vsed to go to plowe, therefore I loued him, and fell vpon his fayre neck. C I droue Ephraim, I Iuda plowed, & Iacob played the huszbođe man: that they might sowe vnto rightuousnes, and reape the frutes of weldoyngē: y^e they might plowe vp their fresh londe, and seke the LORDE, till he came, and lerned them rightuousnes.

But now they haue plowed them wickednesse, therefore shal they reepe synne, and eate the frute of lyes. Seinge thou puttest thy

The xi. Chapter.

WHEN Israel was yōge, I loued him:
^a and called my sonne out of the londe of Egipte. But † more they were called, the more they wente backe: offerynge vnto Idols, and censynge ymages. ^c I lerned Ephraim to go, and bare them in myne armes, but they regarded not me, that wolde haue helped them. I led them with coardes of frendshipe, ⁊ with bondes of loue. I was euen he, that layed the yocke vpon their neckes. ^d I gaue them their fodder my self, † they shulde not go agayne in to Egipte: And now is Assur their kinge: For they wolde not turne vnto me. Therefore shal † swearde begynne in their cities, the stoare that they haue lickened vnto, shall be destroyed and eaten vp: and that because of their owne ymaginacions. My people hath no lust to turne vnto me, ^e their prophetes laye the yocke vpon thē, but they ease them not of their burthen.

What greate things haue I geuen the, o Ephraim? how faithfully haue I defended the, o Israel? haue I dealt with the as with Adama? ^f or haue I intreated the like Se-boim? No, my hert is otherwise mynded.
 Yee my mercy is to feruent: therefore haue I not turned me to destroye Ephraim in my wrothful displeasure. For I am God and no man, I am euen that holy one in the myddest of the, though I came not within the cite.

The LORDE roareth like a lyon, that they maye folowe him: ^g Yee as a lyon roareth he,
 that they maye be afrayed, like the children of the see: that they maye be scarred awaye from Egipte, as men scarre byrdes: ⁊ frayed awaye (as doutes vse to be) from the Assirias londe: and that because I wolde haue them tary at home, saith the LORDE. But Ephraim goeth aboute me with lies, and the house of Israel dyssembleth. Only Iuda holdeth him with God, and with the true holy thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

EPHRAIM kepeth the ayre, and foloweth after the east wynde: he is euer increasinge lyes ⁊ destruction. They be confederate with the Assirians, thei oyle is caried in to Egipte. ^a The LORDE hath a courte to holde with Iuda, and wil punysh Iacob: After their owne waies and acordinge to their owne inuencions, shal he recompence them. He toke his brother by the hele, ^b when he was yet in his mothers wombe: and in his strength he wrestled with God. He stroue with the Angel, and gat the victory: so that he prayde and desyred him. He fande him at Bethel, ⁊ there he talked with vs.

Yee the LORDE God of hoostes, euen † LORDE him self remembred him: Then turne to thy God, kepe mercy and equitye, and hope still in thy God. But the mar-chaunt hath a false weight in his honde, he hath a pleasure to occupie extortion. ^c Ephraim thinketh thus: Tush, I am rich, I haue good ynough: In all my workes shal not one fawte be founde, that I haue offended. Yet am I the LORDE thy God, euē as when I brought the out of the londe of Egipte, and set the in thy tentes, and as in the hye feast dayes.

I haue spokē thorow the prophetes, and shewed dyuerse visions, and declared my self by the ministracion of † prophetes. But at Galaad is the abhominacion, they are fallen to vanyte. At Galgal they haue slayne oxen: ^d and as many heapes of stones as they had in their lōde forowes, so many altuers haue they made. Iacob fled in to the londe of Siria, ^e and Israel serued for a wife, and for a wife he kepte shepe.

By a prophet the LORDE brought them out of Egipte, and by a prophet he preserued thē. But Ephraim hath prouoked him to displeasure thorow his abhominacions: therfore shal his bloude be poured vpon him self, and the LORDE his God shal rewarde him his blasphemies.

A THE abomination of Ephraim is come also in to Israel. He is gone backe to Baal, therefore must he dye. ^a And now they synne more and more: of their syluer, they make them molten ymages, like the Idols of the Heithen, and yet all is nothinge but the worke of the craftesman. Notwithstōdinge they preach of the same: who so wil kysse the calues, offreth to men. Therefore they shalbe as the mornyng cloude, and as the dew that early passeth awaye: and like as dust that y wynde taketh awaye from the floore, and as smoke that goeth out of y chymney.

^a I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the londe of Egipte: that thou shuldest knowe no God but me only, & that thou shuldest haue no Sauoure but only me. ^b I toke diligent hede of the in the wilderness that drye londe. But when they were wel fedde and had ynough, they waxed proude, and forgot me. ^c Therefore will I be vnto them as a lyon, and as a leoparde in y waye to the Assirians. I wil come vpon them as a she beer, that is robbed of hir welpes, and I wil breake that stubborne herte of theirs. There wil I deuoure them as a lyon: yee the wylde beastes shal teare them.

^d O Israel, thou doest but destroye thy self, In me only is thy helpe. Where are thy kinges now, that shulde helpe the in all thy cities? Yee and thy iudges, of whom thou saydest: geue me a kinge and prynces? ^e Well, I gaue the a kinge in my wrath, and in my displeasure wil I take him from the agayne. The wickednesse of Ephraim is bounde together, & his synne lieth hyd. Therefore shall sorowes come vpon him, as vpon a woman that traualeth. An vndiscrete sonne is he: for he considreth not, that he shulde not haue bene able to haue endured in the tyme of his byrth, had not I defended him from the graue, and deluyered him from death.

^f O death, I wil be thy death: o hell, I wil be thy styng. Yet can I se no comforth, for when he is now the goodliest amonge the brethren, the east wynde (euen the wynde of the LORDE) shal come downe from the wilderness, and drye vp his condytes, and drynke vp his welles: he shal spoyle the treasure of all pleasaunt vessels.

^g As for Samaria, they shalbe made waist, & why? they are disobedient vnto their God. They shal perish with the swearde, their children shalbe slayne, and their women bygg with childe shalbe rypte vp.

The xiiij. Chapter.

TURNE the now (o Israel) vnto y LORDE ^a thy God, 'for thou hast taken a greate fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, & saye vnto him: O forgeue vs all oure synnes, receaue vs graciously, & then wil we offre y bullockes of oure lyppes vnto the. ^b Assur shalbe no more oure helper, nether wil we ryde vpon horses eny more. As for the workes of oure hondes, we wil nomore call vpon them: For it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

O (yf they wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I loue them: so y my wrath shulde clene be turned awaye from them. Yee I wolde be vnto Israel as the dewe, and he shulde growe as y lylie, & his rote shulde breake out as Libanus. His braunches shulde sprede out ^c abroad, & be as fayre as the olyue tre, & smel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, & growe vp as the corne, & florish as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with Idols eny more? I wil graciously heare him, & lede him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene Fyrre tre, vpon me shalt thou fynde thy frute. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstonde this: & he y is right enstructe, wil regarde it. For y wayes of the LORDE are righteous, such as be godly wil walke in them: As for the wicked, they wil stumble therin.

How the people are brought agayne, and their enemies punished

The first Chapter.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Ioel the sonne of Phatuel: Heare o ye elders: pōdre this wel, all ye that dwell in the lōde: yf euer there happened such a thinge in youre dayes, or in ſ̄ dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifie their posterite therof. ^aLoke what the caterpillar hath lefte, ſ̄ hath the greshopper eaten vp: what the greshopper lefte, that hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath lefte, that hath the blasinge consumed. Wake vp ye dronckardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. Yee a mightie & an innumerable people shall come vp in to my londe: these haue teth like the teth of lyons, ^b& chafthones like the lyonesses. They shal make my vinyarde waist, they shal pyll of the barckes of my fygetrees, strype them bare, cast them awaye, and make the braunches whyte.

Make thy mone as a virgin doth, ſ̄ gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde grome. For the meate & drynkofferynge shalbe taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes ſ̄ LORDES ministers shal mourne. The felde shalbe waisted, the londe shalbe in a miserable case: for the corne shalbe destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confucion, & the oyle vtterly desolate. The huszbōde men & the wyne gardeners shal loke piteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate wyne & barley, & because the haruest vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grapegatherers shal make greате mone, when the vynyarde & fygetrees be so vtterly waisted. Yee all the pomgranettes, palmtrees, apletrees & the other trees of the felde shall wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men, shal come to confucion.

Gyrde you, & make youre mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the aulter: go youre waye in, & slepe in sackcloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meat & drynkofferynge shal be taken awaye from the house of youre God. Proclame a fastyngc, call the cōgregacion, gather the elders & all the inhabitants of the londe together in to the house of the LORDE youre God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why? the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from the Allmightie. Shal not ſ̄ meates be taken awaye before oure eyes, the myrth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perish in the grounde, the garners shall lye waist, the floores shalbe broken downe, for the corne shalbe destroyed. ^cO what a sighinge make the catell? the bullockes are very euel likyngc, because they haue no pasture: and the shepe are fameszhed awaye.

O LORDE, to the will I crie : for the fyre hath consumed the goodly pastures of the wyldernesse, and the flame hath brent vp all the trees of the felde. Yee the wyld beestes crie also vnto the: for the water ryuers are dryed vp, and the fyre hath consumed the pastures of the wyldernesse.

The ij. Chapter.

BLOWE out f trompet in Sion, t crie vpō my holy hill, y all such as dwel in the londe, maye trēble at it: for y daie of the LORDE commeth, t is harde at honde : a darcke daye, a gloomyng daye, a cloudy daye, yee t a stormy daye, like as the mornynge spredeth out vpō the hilles : Namely, a great t mightie people : such as haue not bene sens y begynnynge, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consumynge fyre, t behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behinde him shal it be a very waist wilderness, t there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to lōke vpon lyke bayrded horses, t runne like horse men. They skyppe vp vpon y hilles, as it were the sounde of charrettes : as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

B The folke shalbe afraied of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. These shal rūne like giauntes, t leape ouer the walles like men of warre. Euery mā in his goinge shal kepe his arae, t not go out of his Path. There shal not one dryue another, but ech shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes, t not be hurte : They shal come in to the cite, t runne vpon the walles : They shal clymme vp vpon the houses, t slyppe in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shalbe moued : b the Sonne t Moone shal be darkened, and the starres shal withdrawe their shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hoost, for his hoost is greate, stronge t mightie to fulfill his commaundement. This is y greate and maruelous fearful daye of the LORDE : And who is able to abyde it ?

C Now therefore saieth the LORDE : t Turne you vnto me with all your hertes, with fasting, wepyng and mournynge : rente youre hertes, t not youre clothes. Turne you vnto the LORDE youre God, t for he is gracious t mercifull, longe sufferynge t of greate compassion : t redy to pardone wickednes. Then (no doute) he also shal turne, t forgeue : t after his chastenyng, he shal let youre increase remayne, for meat t drynck offerynges vnto the LORDE youre God ? t Blowe out with the trōpet in Sion, proclame a fastynge, call the congregacion, t gather the people together : warne the congregacion, gather the elders, bringe the children t suclynges together. Let y brydegrome go forth of his chābre, t the bryde out of her closet. Let the prestes serue the LORDE betwixte the porch t y aluter, wepinge t sayenge : be fauourable (o LORDE) be fauourable vnto thy people : let not thine heretage be brought to soch confucion, lest the Heithen be lordes therof. Wherefore shulde they saye amonge the Heithen : f where is now their God ?

Then shal the LORDE be gelous ouer his londe, t spare his people : yee y LORDE shal answere, t saye vnto his people : Beholde, I wil sende you corne, wyne t oyle, so that ye shal haue plenty of them : t I wil nomore geue you ouer to be a reprove amonge the Heithen. Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal dryue him farre from you : t shute him out in to a drye and waist londe, his face towarde the east see, and his hynder partes towarde the vtmost see. The stynte of him shal go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vpon himself, because he hath dealete so proudly. Feare not (o londe) but be glad and reioyse, for the LORDE wil do greate thinges. Be not ye afraied nether (o ye beastes of the felde) for the pastures shal be grene, and the trees shal beare their frute : the fygetrees t vinyardes shal geue their increase.

E Be glad then (o ye children of Sion) and reioyse in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of rightuousnes : t he it is y shal sende you downe shuwers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth : so that y garners shal be full of corne, and the presses plenteous in wyne and oyle. And as for the yeares that y greszshopper, locuste, blasstinge t caterpillar (my greate hoost, which I sent amonge you) haue eaten vp, I shal restore them to you agayne : so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and be satisfied : and

J After this, will I poure out my sprete vpon all flesh: ^a your sonnes ^a your daughters shal prophecy: your olde mē shal dreame dreames ^a your yonge men shal se visions: ^b Yee in those dayes I will poure out my sprete vpon seruantes and maydens. The Sonne shalbe turned in to darcknesse, ^a ^γ Moone in to bloude: before ^γ greate ^a notable daye off the LORDE come. FOR take hede: In those dayes ^a at ^γ same tyme, when I turne agayne the captiuite of Iuda ^a Ierusalē: I shal gather all people together, ^a brynge thē in to the valley of Iosaphat: and there will I reason with thē, because of my people ^a heretage of Israel: whō they haue scatred aboute in the nacions, ^a parted my lōde: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge mē haue they set in the brodel house, ^a solde the Damsels for wyne, ^γ they might haue to drinke. ^a Thou Tirus and Sidō and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye defye me? well: yf ye will nedes defye me, I shall recōpence you, euen vpon your heade, ^a ^γ right shortly: for ye haue takē away my syluer ^a golde, my fayre ^a goodly Iewels, ^a brought them in to your gods houses. Your sonnes ^a your daughters will I sell thorow the hondes of the childrē of Iuda, ^a so they shal geue them forth to sell, vnto thē of Saba, a people of a farre cōtre: for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. Crie out these thinges amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vp the giauntes, let them drawe nye, let thē come vp all the lusty warryours of thē. Make you sweardes of your plowshares, and speares of your syckles ^a sythes. ^f Let ^γ weake man saye: I am stronge. ^g Laye to your sythes, for the haruest is ripe: come, get you downe: the wynepresse is full, yee the wynepresses runne ouer, for their wickednesse is waxen greate. THESE are the sermons, that were shewed vnto Amos (which was one of the shepherdes at Thecua) vpon Israel, in the tyme of Osias kynge of Iuda, ^a in the tyme of Ieroboā [̄] sonne of Ioas kynge of Israel, two yere before [̄] earthquake. And he sayde: ^b The LORDE shal roare out off Sion, ^c ^d shewe his voyce frō Ierusalē: so that [̄] pastures of the shepherdes shal be in a miserable case, ^e ^f [̄] toppe of Charmel dried vp.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: ^g for thre ^h ⁱ foure wickednesses of Damascus, I will not spare her: because they haue throszhd Galaad with yrō flaes: But I wil sende a fyre in to [̄] house of Hazael, the same shal consume the palaces of Benadab. Thus wil I breake the barres off Damascus, ^j rote out the inhabiter frō the felde of Auen, and him ^k holdeth the scepter, out of [̄] pleasunt house: so [̄] the people shalbe dryuen out of fayre Siria, sayeth the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE: For thre ^l ^m foure wickednesses of Gaza, I wil not spare her: ⁿ because they make the pre-soners yet more captyue, ^o haue dryuen the in to the lode of Edom. Therfore wil I sende a fyre in to [̄] walles of Gaza, which shal deuoure hir houses. I wil rote out the [̄] dwell at Asdod ^p ^q him [̄] holdeth the scepter of Ascalon, and stretch out myne honde ouer Accaron, that the remnaunt of the Philistines shal perish, saith the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off the cite off Tyre, I wil not spare her: ^r because they haue increased [̄] captiuyte of the Edomites, and haue not remembered the brotherly couenaunt. ^c Therefore will I sende a fyre in to the walles off Tyre, that shal consume hir pallaces. Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses of Edom I wil not spare him,^d because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion allwaye by him. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Themā, which shal deuoure the pallaces of Bosra.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: ^c For thre ād foure wickednesses of the children off Ammon, I will not spare them: because they rpyte vp the womē greate with childe in Galaad, to make the borders of their londes the wyder. Therefore I wil kynde a fyre in the walles of Rabbath, that shal consume hir palaces: with a greate crie, in the daye of batel, in tempest and in the daye off storme: so that their kyng shal go in to captiuyte, he and his prices together, sayeth the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

^a THUS sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off Moab, ^c I will not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kyng of Edom to ashes. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shal cōsume ^f pallaces of Carioth: so ^f Moab shal perish with a noyse, and the sounde of a shawme. I will rote out the iudge from amōge them, and slaye all his prynces with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: ^c for thre ād foure wickednesses of Iuda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kepte his commandementes: for why, they wolde nedes be diseaued with the lyes, that their forefathers folowed. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Iuda, which shal consume the palaces of Ierusalem.

^b Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre ^c foure wickednesses of Israel, I wil not spare him: because he hath solde the righteous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon poore mens heades in the dust of the earth, ^c & croke the wayes off the meke. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my holy name: they lye besyde euery altuer vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke the wyue of the oppressed. ^c Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, that was as hie as the Cedre trees, and as stronge as the okes: notwithstanding I destroyed his frute frō aboue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egypte,^c and led you xl. yeares thorow the wyldernes, that ye might haue the Amoriters londe in possession. I raysed vp prophetes amonge youre children, and absteyners amonge youre yōge men. Is it not so, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE? But ye gaue the absteyners wyne to drynke,^c yee ye cōmaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Beholde, I wil crassehe you in sonder, like as a wayne crassheth, ^f y is full of sheaues: so that ^f swifte shall not escape, nether the stronge be able to do eny thyng: no, the giaunte shal not saue his owne life. The archer shall not abyde, and the swifte off fote shall not escape. The horsmā shal not saue his life, ^c he that is as māly of stomack as a giaunte, shall in that daye be fayne to runne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

The iij. Chapter.

^a HEARE, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you (o ye children of Israel) namely, vnto all ^f trybes, whō I brought out of Egypte, and sayde: You only haue I accepted from all the generacions off the earth: therefore will I vyset you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twaine walke together excepte they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelp out of his denne, ^c excepte he haue gotten somthinge? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpō ^f earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vp from the grounde, afore he catche somewhat? Crie they out Alarum with the trompet in the cite, and the people not afrayed? Commeth there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDES doinge? Now doth the LORDE God no maner of thinge, but he telleth his secrete before vnto his seruantes ^f prophetes. LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophecy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egipte, and saye: gather you together vpon the mountaynes off Samaria, so shall ye se greate murthur and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regarde not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vp robbery in their houses.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: This londe shalbe troubled and beseged rounde aboute, thy strength shalbe plucte from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saith the LORDE: like as an hyrdeman taketh two legges or a pece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children of Israel (that dwell in Samaria, hauynge their couches in the corner, and their beddes at Damascus) shalbe plucte awaye. Heare, and beare recorde in the house of Iacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes) that when I begynne to vyset the wickednesse of Israel, I will vyset & aulters at Bethel also: so that the hornes of the altar shalbe broken of, & fall to the grounde.

As for the wynter house and sommer house, I will smyte them downe: and the houses of yuery, yee and many other houses shal perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The iiii. Chapter.

HEARE this worde, o ye fat kyne, that be vpon the hill of Samaria: ye that do poore me wronge, and oppresse the nedy: ye that saye to youre lordes: brynge hyther, let vs drynke. Therefore the LORDE hath sworne by his holynesse: The dayes shall come vpon you, that ye shalbe lift vp vpō speares, and youre posterite caried awaye in fyssher pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gappes one after another, and in Armon shal ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngraciousnes, and haue increased youre synnes at Galgal. Ye brought youre sacrifices in the mornynge, and youre tythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a thākofferinge off leuen, ye promised frewillofferings, and proclaimed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therefore haue I geuen you ydle teth in all youre cities, & scarcenesse off bred in all youre places: yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Whē there were but thre monethes vnto & haruest, I withelde the rayne from you: yee I rayned vpō one cite, and not vpō another one pece off grounde was moystured with rayne, and the grounde that I rayned not vpon, was drye. Wherefore two (yee thre) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth & LORDE.

I haue smyten you with drouth and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyue trees ye had: & catirpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent amōge you, as I dyd in Egipte: youre yonge men haue I slayen with & swerde, and caused youre horses be taken captiue: I made the stynckinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp in to youre nostrels: Yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Some off you haue I ouerthrowen: as I ouerthrewe Sodome & Gomorre: so that ye were as a brande plucte out of the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Therefore, thus will I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus will I handle the. Make the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mornynge and the darcknesse, he treadeth vpō the hye places off the earth: & LORDE God of hoostes is his name.

The 6. Chapter.

HEARE this worde (o ye house of Israel) and why? I must make this mone for you: The vyrgin Israel shall fall, & neuer ryse vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon hir owne grounde, and no man shal helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth & LORDE God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shalbe left scarce an C. therein: and where &re dwelt an C. there shal scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sayeth the LORDE vnto & house of Israel: Seke after me, ad ye shal lyue, but seke not after Bethel. Come not at Galgal, and go not to Bersaba: for Galgal shall be caried awaye

Ye turne the lawe to wormwod, and cast downe rightousnes vnto the grounde. The LORDE maketh the vij. starres and the Oryons,^a he turneth the night in to daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth [†] waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: [†] the LORDE is his name. He rayseth destruction vpon the mightie people, [†] bryngeth downe the stronge holde: but they owe him euel will, [†] reproueth them openly: and who so telleth thē the playne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch thē as ye oppresse [†] poore,^a and robbe him of his best sustenance: therfore, where as ye haue buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Maruelōs pleasaunt vynyardes shall ye plante, but the wyne of thē shal ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickednesses and youre stoute synnes, I knowe them right well. ^a Enemies are ye off the righteous, ye take rewardes, ye oppresse the poore in iudgment. Therfore the wyse must now be fayne to holde his tūge, so wicked a tyme is it.

Seke after the thinge that is good, [†] not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORDE God off hoostes shal be with you, acordinge to youre owne desyre. ^a Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: [†] (no doute) the LORDE God of hoostes shall be mercifull vnto the remnaunt of Ioseph. Yff no (sayeth the LORDE God, the God of hoostes) there shal be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shal saye i euery strete: alas, alas. They shall call the housbonde man to lamentaciō, and soch as can mourne, to mournynge. In all vynyardes there shal be heynesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORDE. Wo be vnto them that desyre the daye off [†] LORDE: Wherefore wolde ye haue it? As for that daye of the LORDE, it shalbe darcke ād not cleare: Yee like as when a mā rūneth frō a lyon, and a Beer meteth with him: or, whē he commeth in to the house, and leeneth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. [†] Shall not the daye of the LORDE be darcke, and not cleare? shal it not be cloudy, and no shyne in it?

^a I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, ād where as ye cense me when ye come together I will not accepte it. And though ye offre me brentofferings and meatofferings, yet haue I no pleasure therin: As for youre fat thankofferynges, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I wil not heare thy playes of musick: but se that equyte flowe as the water, and rightousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, ^a gaue ye me offeringes and sacrifices those xl. yeaeres longe in the wyldernes? Yet haue ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymages of youre Idols, ^a Yee ād the starre of youre god Rempha, figures which ye made to worshipec them. Therfore wil I cause you be caried awaye beyonde Damascus, sayeth the LORDE, whose name is the God off hoostes.

The vi. Chapter.

WO be to the proude welthy in Siō, ^a to soch as thinke thē so sure vpon [†] mount of Samaria? which holde them selues for the best of the worlde, and rule the house of Israel, euē as they list. Go vnto Calne, and se: and from thence get you to Hemath the greate cite, and so go downe to Gath of the Philistines: be they better at ease then these kyngdomes, or the border of their londe wyder then yours? Ye are taken out for the euel daye, euen ye that syt in the stole of wylfulness: Ye that lye vpon beddes off yuery, and vse youre wantonnesse vpon youre couches: ye that eate the best lambes of [†] flocke, and the fattest calves off the droaue: ^a ye that synge to the lute, and in playenge off instrumentes compare youre selues vnto Dauid: ye that drynke wyne out of goblettes, [†] anyoante youre selues with the best oyle, but no man is sory for Ioseps hurte. Therfore now shall ye be the first of them, that shal be led awaye captiue, and the lusty chere of the wylfull shal come to an ende.

The viij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me such a vision: beholde, there stode one that made greszhoppers, euen when the corne was shutyng forth, after the kyng had clipte his shepe. Now when they vndertoke to eate vp all the grene thinges in ſ lode, I sayde: O LORDE God, be mercifull, I beseke the: who shulde els helpe vp Iacob, that is brought so lowe? Amos answered, and sayde to Amasias: As for me, e I am nether prophet, ner prophetes sonne: but a keper of catell. Now as I was breakynge downe molberies, and goynge after the catell, the LORDE toke me, ¶ sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and prophecy vnto my people of Israel. And therfore, heare thou now the worde off the LORDE: Thou saiest: prophecy not agaynst Israel, and speake nothinge agaynst the house off Isaac. Wherefore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thy wife shalbe defyled in ſ cite, thy sonnes and daughters shalbe slayne with the swerde, and thy londe shalbe measured out with the lyne: Thou thy self shalt dye in an vnclene londe, and Israel shalbe dryuen out off his owne cowntre.

The viij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me this vision: and beholde, there was a maūde with sommer frute. And he sayde: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a maūde with sommer frute. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: the ende commeth vpon my people of Israel, I wil nomore ouersee them. In that daye shall the songes off the temple be turned in to sorow, sayeth the LORDE God. Many deed bodyes shal lye in euery place, ¶ be cast forth secretly. The first Chapter.

THIS is the vision that was shewed vnto Abdy: Thus hath y LORDE God spokē vpō Edō: "We haue herde of the LORDE y there is an embassage sent amonge the Heithen: Vp, let vs aryse, and fight agaynst them. Beholde, I will make y small amōge the Heithen, so that thou shalt be vtterly despised. ^a The pryde of thine herte hath lift the vp, thou that dwellest in y strōge holdes off stone, and hast made the an hye seate: Thou sayest in thyne herte: who shal cast me downe to the ground? But ^c though thou wentest vp as hye as the Aegle, and maydest thy nest aboue amonge the starres: yet wolde I plucke the downe from thēce. Chap. I.

God sendeth Ionas vnto Ninieue, he fleyth, and is cast in to the see.

Chap. II.

A fysh swalloweth vp Ionas, which crieth vnto God, and prayseth hym, and the fysh casteth him out agayne vpon the londe.

Chap. III.

God sendeth him agayne to Ninieue, to shewe them the punyshment for to come, yf they wil not repent: they amende, and God is mercifull to them.

Chap. IIII.

Ionas is angrie, and complayneth of God, which refourmeth him.

The first Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto ^aIonas the sonne of Amithai, sayenge: Aryse, and get the to Ninieue that greate cite: and preach vnto them, ^bhow ^ytheir wickednesse is come vp before me. And Ionas made him ready to fle vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE, and gat him downe to Ioppa: where he founde a shippe ready for to go vnto Tharsis. So he payde his fare, and wente aborde, that he might go with them vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE.

^a 4 Re. 14. c. Ione 3. a. Gen. 10. b.

But the LORDE hurled a greate wynde in to the see, and there was a mightie tempest in the see: so that the shippe was in ioperdy of goinge in peces. Then the maryners were afraide, and cried euery man vnto his god: and the goodes that were in the shippe, they cast in to the see, to lighten it off them. But Ionas gat him vnder ^yhatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

So the master of the shippe came to him ³³and sayde vnto him: why slomberest thou? Vp, call vpon thy God: yf God (happly) wil thynke vpon vs, that we peryshe not. And they sayde one to another: come, let vs cast lottes: that we maye knowe, for whose cause we are thus troubled.^a And so they cast lottes, and the lot fell vpon Ionas.

Then sayde they vnto him: tell vs, for whose cause are we thus troubled? what is thine occupacion? whence comest thou? what countre man art thou, and of what nacion? He answered them: I am an Ebrue, and I feare the LORDE God of heauen, which made both the see and drie londe. Then were f men exceedingly afrayed, and sayde vnto him: why didest thou so? (for they knewe, that he was fled from the presence of the LORDE, because he had tolde them) and sayde morouer vnto him: What shall we do vnto the, that the see maye cease from troubling vs? (for the see wrought and was troublous) he answered them: Take me, and cast me in to the see, so shal it let you be in rest: for I wote, it is for my sake, that this greate tempest is come vpon you.

Neuerthelesse, the men assayed with rowinge, to brynge the shippe to lode: but it wolde not be, because the see wrought so, and was so troublous agaynst them. Wherefore they cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: ^bO LORDE, let vs not perish for this mans death, nether laye thou innocent bloude vnto ouer charge: for thou (O LORDE) hast done, euen as thy pleasure was.

So they toke Ionas, and cast him in to the see, and the see lefte ragynge. And the men feared the LORDE exceedingly, doyng sacrifices and makynge vowes vnto the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

BUT the LORDE prepared a greate fyshe, to swallow vp Ionas. ^cSo was Ionas in the bely of the fysh, thre dayes and thre nights. And Ionas prayed vnto the LORDE his God, out of the fysshes bely, and sayed: ^dIn my trouble I called vnto f LORDE, and he herde me: out off the bely off hell I cried, and thou herdest my voyce. Thou haddest cast me downe depe in f midst off the see, and the floude compased me aboute: ^eyee all thy wawes and rowles of water went ouer me, I thought that I had bene cast awaye out of thy sight: but I wil yet agayne loke towarde thy holy temple.

The waters compased me, euen to the very soule: the depe laye aboute me, and the wedes were wrapte aboute myne heade. I wente downe to the botome of the hilles, and was barred in with earth for euer. But thou (O LORDE my God) hast brought vp my lyfe agayne out of corrupcion. When my soule faynted within me, I thought vnto the LORDE: and my prayer came in vnto the, euen in to thy holy temple. They that holde of vayne vanyties, wil forsake his mercy. But I wil do the sacrifice with the voyce of thankesgeuyng, and wil paye that I haue vowed: for why? saluacion cometh of the LORDE. And f LORDE spake vnto f fysh, and it cast out Ionas agayne vpon the drye londe.

The iij. Chapter.

THEN came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ionas agayne, sayenge: vp, and get the to Ninieue that greate cite, and preach vnto them the preaching, which I bade the. So Ionas arose, and wente to Ninieue at the LORDES commaundement. Ninieue was a greate cite vnto God, namely, off thre dayes iourney.

And Ionas wente to, and entred in to f cite: euen a dayes iourney, and cried, sayenge: There are yet xl. dayes, and then shal Ninieue be ouerthrowen. ^eAnd the people of Ninieue beleued God, and proclaimed fastinge, and arayed them selues in sack cloth, as well the greate as the small of them. And the tydings came vnto f kinge of Ninieue, which arose out off his seate, and dyd his apparell off, and put on sack cloth, and sate him downe in asshes.

And it was cried and commaunded in Ninieue, by the auctorite of the kige and his lordes, sayenge: ^ase that nether man or beest, ox or shepe taist ought at all: and that they nether fede nor drinke water: but put on sack cloth both man and beest, and crye mightely vnto God: yee se that euery man turne fro his euell waye, ^band from the wickednesse, f he hath in honde.

Who can tell? God maye turne, and repete, and cease from his fearece wrath, that we perish not. And when God sawe their workes, how they turned from their wicked wayes: ^che repented on the euell, which he sayde he wolde do vnto them, and dyd it not.

The iiii. Chapter.

WHERFORE Ionas was sore discontent, and angrie. And he prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, was not this my sayenge (I praye the) when I was yet in my countre? therefore I haisted rather to fle vnto Tharsis, for I knowe well ynough that thou art a mercifull God, full of compassion, lōge sufferinge, and of greate kyndnesse, and repentest when thou shuldest take punyshment. And now o LORDE, take my life fro me (I beseke the) for I had rather dye then lyue. Then sayde the LORDE: art thou so angrie? and Ionas gat him out of the cite, and sat downe on y east syde therof: and there made him a bothe, and sat vnder it in the shadow, till he might se, what shulde chaunce vnto the cite.

And the LORDE God prepared a wylde vyne, which sprange vp ouer Ionas, that he might haue shadowe aboue his heade, to de-lyuer him out of his payne. And Ionas was exceadinge glad of the wylde vyne. But vpō the nexte morow agaynst the springe of the daye, the LORDE ordened a worme, which smote the wylde vyne, so that it withered awaye. And when the Sōne was vp God prepared a feruent east wynde: and the Sonne bete ouer the heade of Ionas, that he faynted agayne, and wyszshed vnto his soule, that he might dye, and sayde: It is better for me to dye, thē to lyue. And God sayd vnto Ionas: Art thou so angrie for the wylde vyne? And he sayde: yee very angrie am I euen vnto the deeth. And the LORDE sayde: thou hast compassion vpon a wylde vyne, wherō thou bestowdest no laboure, ner maydest it growe: which sprange vp in one night and perished in another: And shulde not I then haue compassion vpon Niniue that greate cite, wherin there are aboue an C. and xx. thousande personnes, y knowe not their right hōde frō the lefte, besydes moch catell?

The summe off the thinges before sayde. The litle flocke of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

A THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Micheas ^athe Morastite, in the dayes of Ioathan, Ahas and Ezechias kiges of Iuda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Ierusalem.

^bHeare all ye people, marcke this well o earth, and all that therein is: Yee the LORDE God himself be witness amonge you, euen ^cthe LORDE from his holy temple. For why? beholde, the LORDE shal go out of his place, ^dand come downe, and treade vpon the hie thinges of the earth. The mountaynes shall consume vnder him, ^eand the valleys shal cleue asunder: like as wax cōsumeth at the fyre, ^fand as ^gthe waters runne downward. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Iacob, and the synnes of the house of Israel

B But what is the wickednesse of Iacob? Is not Samaria? ^aWhich are the hie places of Iuda? Is not Ierusalē? Therefore I shall make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vynyarde: hir stones shal I cast in to the valley, ^band discouer hir foudaciōs. All hir ymages shalbe brokē downe ^cand all hir wynnynghes shal be brent in the fyre: yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an whore, ^dand in to an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherefore I wil mourne ^eand make lamentacion, bare ^fand naked will I go: I must mourne like ^gthe dragons, ^hand take sorow as ⁱthe Estriches: for their wounde is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Iuda, ^kand hath touchēd ^lthe porte of my people at Ierusalē allredy. Wepe not, ^mlest they at Geth perceaue it.

C Thou at Betaphra, welter thy self in the dust and ashes. Thou that dwellest at Sephir, get the hence with shame. The proude shall boast nomore for very sorowe: ^aand why? hir neyghboure shall take from her what she hath. The rebellious cite hopeth, that it shal not be so euell: but for all that, the plage shal come from the LORDE, euen in to the porte of Ierusalem. ^bThe greates noyse off the charettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of ^cthe synne of ^dthe daughter of Sion, for in the came vp the wickednesses of Israel. Yee she sent hir coursers in to the londe of Geth.

The houses of lies will disceau the kynges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Morassa) I shal brynge a possessorer vpon the, ^aand the plage of Israel shal reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and shaue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aegle, for they shalbe caried awaye captiue from the.

The ij. Chapter.

WO vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, ^aand deuyse vngaciousnesse vpon their beddes, to perfourme it in ^bthe cleare daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue londe, they take it by violence, ^cthey robbe men off their houses.

Thus they oppresse a mā for his house, ^aand euery man for his heretage. Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: ^b'Beholde, agaynst this housholde haue I deuyed a plage, wherout ye shal not plucke youre neckes: Ye shal nomore go so proudly, for it will be a perulous tyme. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mournyng shal be made ouer you on this maner: We be vtterly desolate, the porcion off my people is translated. Whan wil he parte vnto vs the londe, that he hath taken from vs?

B Neuerthelesse there shalbe no man to deuyde the thy porcion, in the congregacion off the LORDE. ^aTush, holde youre tunge (saye they) It shall not fall vpon this people, we shall not come so to confucion, sayeth the house off Iacob. Is the sprete off the LORDE so clen awaye? or is he so mynded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people doth the contrary, therefore must I take parte agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the symple.

Ye haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot out frō their good houses, and taken awaye my excellent giftes from their children. Vp, get you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are corrupte, and shall miserably perish. Yf I were a fleshy felowe, and a preacher of lyes and tolde them that they might syt bebbinge and bollynge, and be droncken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I will gather the in dede (o Iacob) and dryue the remnaunt off Israel all together. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the cattell in their stalles, that they maye be disquieted of other men.

Who so breaketh the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go before them, and the LORDE shalbe vpon the heade of them.

The iij. Chapter.

A HEARE, o ye heades of the house of Iacob, and ye leders of the house of Israel: "Shulde not ye knowe, what were lauffull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euell: ye plucke of mens skynnes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eate the flesh of my people, ad flay of their skynne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peces as it were in to a cauldron, ad as flesh in to a pot. ^b Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORDE, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: because that thorow their owne ymaginaciōs, they haue dealte so wickedly.

^B And as concerninge the prophetes that disceauē my people, thus the LORDE sayeth agaynst them: "When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shalbe well: but yf a man put not some thinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

"Therefore youre vision shalbe turned to night, ^c youre prophecyeinge to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer those prophetes, ^d the daye shalbe darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, ^e ^f saythsayers confounded: yee they shalbe fayne (all the packe of thē) to stoppe their mouthes, for they haue not Gods worde. "As for me, I am full of strength, ^g ^h of ⁱ sprete of ^j LORDE, full of iudgment ^k boldnesse: to shewe the house of Iacob their wickednesse, ^l the house of Israel their synne.

^C O heare this ye rulers of the house of Iacob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lauffull, and wraist asyde the thinge that is straight: "Ye that buylde vp Sion with bloude, and Ierusalem with doynge wronge. O ye iudges, ye geue sentence for giftes: O ye preastes, ye teach for lucre: O ye prophetes, ye prophecy for money. Yet wil they be takē as those that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LORDE amonge vs? "Tush, there can no misfortune happen vs. Therefore shal Sion (for youre sakes) be plowed like a felde: Ierusalē shall become an heape of stones, and the hill of ^m temple shal be turned to an hye wodde.

The iij. Chapter.

B UT in the latter dayes it wil come to ⁿ passe, that ^o the hill off the LORDES house shalbe set vp hyer thē eny mouēaynes or hilles: Yee the people shall preesse vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shal haist them thither, sayēge: Come, let vs go vp to the hill of the LORDE, ^p to the house of the God of Iacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

"For the lawe shall come out off Sion, ad the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shall geue sentence amonge the multitude off the Heithen, and reforme the people off farre coutrees: so that of their swerdes they shal make plowshares, and sythes off their speares.

^B One people shall not lift vp a swerde agaynst another, "yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but euery man shal syt vnder his vinyarde and vnder his fyge tre, and no man to fraye him awaye: for the mouth off ^q LORDE of hoostes hath spoken it. Therefore, where as all people haue walked euery man in ^r name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God for euer and euer. "At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE) will I gather vp the lame and the outcastes, and such as I haue chastened: and will geue yssue vnto the lame, and make of ^s outcastes a greate people: "and the LORDE himself shal be their kynge vpon the mount Sion, frō this tyme forth for euermore. "And vnto the (O thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the daughter Sion) vnto the shal it come: euē the first lordshipe and kyngdome of the daughter Ierusalē. Why thē art thou now so heuy? is there no kynge in the? are thy councelers awaye, that thou art so payned, as a woman in hir trauayle?

^C And now (o thou daughter Sion) be sory, let it greue the as a wife laboringe with childe: for now must thou get the out off the cite, and dwell vpon the playne felde: Yee vnto Babilō shalt thou go, there shalt thou be

Now also are there many people gathered together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Sion is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. But they knowe not the thoughtes off the LORDE, ^bthey vnderstonde not his counsell, that shall gather them together as the sheeues in the barne. Therefore get the vp (o thou daughter Sion) and throsse out the come: For I wil make thy horne yron, and thy claws brasse, that thou mayest grynde many people: their goodes shalt thou appropriate vnto the LORDE, and their substance vnto the ruler off the whole worlde.

The b. Chapter.

AFTER that shalt thou be robbed thy self, o thou robbers daughter: they shal laye sege agaynst vs, and smyte the iudge off Israel with a rodde vpon the cheke. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, ^cart litle amonge the thousandes off Iuda. Out off the shal come one vnto me, which shall be ^dgouernoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnyng, and from euerlastinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, vntill the tyme that she (which shall beare) haue borne: then shall the remnaunt off his brethren be conuerted vnto ^ethy children off Israel. He shal stonde fast, and geue fode in the strength of the LORDE, ^fand in the victory of the name of ^gthy LORDE his God: and when they be conuerted, he shall be magnified vnto the farthest partes of the worlde.

Then shal there be peace, so that the Assirian maye come in to oure londe, and treade in oure houses. We shall brynge vp seuen shepherdes and viij. prynces vpō them: these shal subdue the londe of Assur with the swerde, and the londe of Nymrod with their naked weapons. ^hThus shal he delyuer vs from the Assiriā, when he commeth within oure lande, and setteth his fote within oure borders. And the remnaunt of Iacob shal be amonge the multitude of people, as the dew of the LORDE, and as the droppes vpon the grasse, that tarieth for no man, and waiteth of no body. ⁱYee the residue of Iacob shalbe amonge the Gentiles and the multitude off people, as the lyon amonge the beestes of ^jthy wodde, and as the lyons whelp amonge a flocke of shepe: which (when he goeth thorow) treadeth downe, teareth in peces, and there is no man that can helpe. Thyne honde shalbe lift vp vpon thine enemies, and all thine aduersaries shal perish.

The tyme shal come also (sayeth the LORDE) that I wil take thine horses from the, ^kand destroye thy charettes. I wil breake downe the cities off thy londe, and ouerthrowe all thy stronge holdes. ^lAll witchcraftes will I rote out of thyne hande, there shall no mo soys sayenges be within the. Thine Idols and thyne ymages will I destroye out of ^mthy so that thou shalt nomore bowe thy self vnto the workes of thyne owne hondes. Thy groues wil I plucke vp by the rotes, ⁿand breake downe thy cities. Thus will I be auēged also, vpon all Heithen that will not heare.

The vi. Chapter.

HERKEN now what the LORDE sayeth: ^oVp, reprove the mountaynes, ^pand let the hillis heare thy voyce. O Heare the punyshment of the LORDE, ye mountaynes, and ye mightie foundaciōs of ^qthy earth: for the LORDE wil reprove his people, ^rand reason with Israel: O my people, what haue I done vnto the? or wherin haue I hurte the? geue me answer. ^sBecause I brought the fro the londe of Egipte, and delyuered the out of the house of bondage? Because I made Moses, Aaron and Miriam to lede the? ^tRemember (o my people) what Balach the kyng of Moab had ymagined agaynst the, ^uand what answer that Balaam the sonne of Beor gaue him, from Sethim vnto Galgal: ^vthy ye maye knowe the lounge kyndnesses of ^wthy LORDE.

What acceptable thyng shal I offre vnto the LORDE? shall I bowe my kne to the hye God? Shal I come before him with brent offeringes, and with calues of a yeare olde? Hath the LORDE a pleasure in many thousand rammes, or innumerable streames of oyle? Or shal I geue my firstborne for myne offences, and the frute of my body for the synne of my soule? I wil shewe the (O mā) what is good, and what the LORDE requyeth off the: Namely, to do right, to haue pleasure in lounge kyndnesse, to be lowly, and to walke with thy God: ^xthat thou mayest be called a cite of the LORDE, ^yand that thy name maye be rightuousnesse. Or shulde I iustifie the false balaunces and the bagge of disceatfull weightes, amonge those that be full off riches vnrightuously gotten: where the citesyns deale with falsede, speake lyes, and haue disceatfull tungen in their mouthes?

C Therefore I will take in honde to punysh the, and to make the desolate, because of thy synnes. Thou shalt eate, & not haue ynough: yee thou shalt bringe thy self downe. "Thou shalt fle, but not escape: ad those y thou woldest saue, wil I delyuer to the swerde. Thou shalt sowe, but not reape: "thou shalt presse out olyues, but oyle shalt thou not haue, to anoynte thy self withall: thou shalt treade out swete must, but shalt drynke nowyne. "Ye kepe the ordinaunces of Amri, & all the customes of the house of Achab: ye folowe their pleasures, therefore wil I make the waist, & cause thy inhabitors to be abhorred, O my people: & thus shalt thou beare thine owne shame.

The vij. Chapter.

A WO is me: I am become as one, that goeth a gleenynge in the haruest. There are no mo grapes to eate, yet wolde I fayne (with all my herte) haue of the best frute. There is not a godly man vpō earth, "there is not one rightuous amōge mē. They laboure all to shed bloude, & euery mā hunteth his brother to death: yet they saye they do well, when they do euell. As the prince wil, so sayeth the iudge: y he maye do him a pleasure agayne. The greate mā speaketh what his herte desyareth, & y hearers alowe him. The best off thē is but as a thistle, and the most rightuous of them is but as a brere in the hedge. But when the daye of thy preachers commeth, y thou shalt be vysited: thē shal they be waisted awaye. "Let no man beleue his frende, ner put his confidēce in a prince. Kepe the porte of thy mouth, from her y lieth in thy bosome: "for y sonne shal put his father to dishonoure, the daughter shal ryse agaynst her mother, y daughter in lawe agaynst hir mother in lawe: and a mans foes shalbe euen they of his owne housholde.

Neuertheslesse I wil loke vp vnto y LORDE, B I wil patiently abyde God my sauioure: my God shal heare me. O thou enemie of myne, reioyce not at my fall, for I shal get vp agayne: "and though I syt in darcknesse, yet y LORDE is my light. I will beare the punishment of the LORDE (for why, I haue offended him) till he syt in iudgment vpon my cause, and se that I haue right. He wil bringe me forth to the light, and I shal se his rightuousnesse.

She that is myne enemy shal loke vpon it, & be confounded, which now saith: "Where is thy LORDE God? Myne eyes shal beholde her, when she shalbe troden downe, as the claye in the stretes. "The tyme wil come, that thy gappes shal be made vp, and the lawe shal go abrode: and at that tyme shal they come vnto the, from Assur vnto the strōge cities, and from the stronge cities vnto the ryuer: from the one see to the other, from the one mountayne to the other.

Notwithstandinge the londe must be waisted, because of them that dwell therin, and for the frutes of their owne ymaginations. Therefore fede thy people with thy rodde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Charmel, Basan & Galaad as afore tyme. Maruelous thinges wil I shewe them, "like as when they came out of Egipte. This shal the Heithen se, and be aszshamed for all their power: "so that they shal laye their honde vpon their mouth, and stoppe their eares. "They shal licke the dust like a serpent, & as the wormes of the earth, y tremble in their holes. They shalbe afrayed of the LORDE oure God, & they shal feare y.

Where is there such a God as thou? that pardonest wickednes, and forgeuest the offences of the remnaunt of thine heretage? He kepeth not his wrath for euer. And why? his delyte is to haue compassion: "he shal turne agayne, & be mercyfull to vs: he shal put downe oure wickednes, & cast all oure synnes in to the botome of the see. Thou shalt kepe thy trust with Iacob, and thy mercy for Abraham, like as thou hast sworne vnto oure fathers longe agoo.

The Prophet Naum.

What Naum conteyneth.

Chap. I.

He prayseth the power and goodnesse of God : he reproveth the Niniutes, because they despyed the counsell and punyshment of God.

Chap. II

He descrybeth vnto them the terryblenesse of the plage.

Chap. III.

He reproveth the abhominacions of the malicious cite, and sheweth them of their punyshment.

THIS is the heuy burthen of Niniue, which Naum of Elchos dyd wryte, as he sawe it

The first Chapter.

THE LORDE is a gelous God, and a taker of vengeance: yee a taker of vengeance is [†] LORDE, and wrothfull. ^a The LORDE taketh vengeance of his enemies, and reserueth displeasure for his aduersaries. ^b The LORDE suffreth longe, he is of greate power, & so innocent, that he leaueth no man faultlesse before him. The LORDE goeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fete. Whē he reproveth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Charnel and the pleasure of Libanus waisteth awaye. The mountaynes tremble for him, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quaketh : yee the whole worlde, and all that dwell therein. ^c Who maye endure before his wrath? Or who is able to abyde his grymme displeasure? His anger taketh on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him.

Ful gracious is the LORDE, and a stronge holde in tyme of trouble, he knoweth thē that put their trust in him: when the floude renneth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the dareknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies. What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORDE on this manner? (Tush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come nomore trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the dronckardes be consumed together, euen when they be full. There come out of [†] soch as ymagin myschefe, and geue vngracious counsell agaynst the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Let thē be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil vexe the, but not vtterly destroye the. And now wil I breake his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sonder. But the LORDE hath geuen a commaundement cōcernynge the, that there shall come nomore sede of thy name. ^d The carued and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded.

BEHOLDE, vpon the mountaynes come the fete of him, "that bryngeth good tydinges, & preacheth peace. O Iuda, kepe thy holy dayes, perfourme thy promyses: for Belial shal come nomore in the, he is vtterly rote out.

The scatterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Iacob, like as y glory of Israel. The destroyers haue broken them downe, & marred the wyne braunches. The shyld of his giauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forwarde, his archers are wel deckte & trimmed. The charettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cressettes of fyre, and go swiftly, as the lightenyng.

B When he doth but warne his giauntes, they fall in their araye, & haistely they clymme vp the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shall fall. The quene hir self shal be led awaye captiue, and hir gentilwomen shal mourne as the doues, & grone within their hertes. ^b Niniue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to fle. Stonde, stōde, (shal they crie) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shalbe a multitude of all maner costly ornamentes. Thus must she be spoyled, emptied & clene striped out: that their hertes maye be melted awaye, their knees trēble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyōs, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes? where the lyon and the lyonesse wente with the whelpes, and no man frayed them awaye? But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyonesse: he fylled his dennes with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauyszhed. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charettes, that they shal smoke withall, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoylinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaungers shall nomore be herde.

The iij. Chapter.

WO to that bloudthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, & wil not leaue of from rauyszhinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, ruszhinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crienge of the horses, & the rollinge of the charettes. There the horse men get vp with naked swerdes, and glisterynge speares: There lyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of deed bodies: There is no ende of deed coarses, yee men fall vpon their bodies: And that for the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beutifull harlot: which is a mastresse of wychcraft, yee and sellethe the people thorow hir whordome, and the nacions thorow hir wichcraft.

^a Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil pull thy clothes ouer thy heade: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the Heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dyrte vpon y, to make the be abhorred, and a gasynge stocke: Yee all they that loke vpon the, shal starte backe, & saye: Niniue is destroyed.

B Who wil haue pyte vpō the? where shal I seke one to conforthe the? Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexandria? that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & walled with the see? Ethiopia and Egipte were hir strēgh, & that exceedinge greate aboue measure. Aphrica and Lybia were hir helpers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuyte: hir yonge children were smytten downe at the heade of euery strete, the lottes were cast for the most auuncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shalt thou also be droncken, and hyde thy self, and seke some helpe agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge cities shal be like fyge trees with rype fyges: which whē a mā shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater.

C Beholde, thy people with in the are but women: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal deuoure thy barres. Drawe water now agaynst thou be beseged, make vp thy strōge holdes, go in to the claye, tempre the mortar, make which whē they be colde, remayne in ¶ hedges: but when the Sonne is vp, they fle awaye, and no mā can tell where they are become. Thy shepherdes are aslepe (o kinge of Assur) thy worthies are layed downe: thy people is scatred abroad vpon the mountaynes, and no man gathereth them together agayne. Thy wounde can not be hyd, thy plague is so sore. All they that heare this of the, shall clappe their handes ouer the. For what is he, to whō thou hast not allwaye bene doynge hurte?

A prayer of the prophet.

The first Chapter.

THIS is the heuy burthē, which the prophet Abacuc dyd se. "O LORDE, how longe shal I crie, & thou wilt not heare? " How longe shall I complayne vnto the, suf-frynge wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why letttest thou me se weerynesse and laboure? Tyrāny and violence are before me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is torne in peces, and there can no right iudgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the righteous: this is the cause, ¶ wronge iudgment procedeth. " Beholde amonge the Heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be abaszshed: for I wil do a thinge in youre tyme, which though it be tolde you, ye shal not beleue.

For lo, " I wil rase vp ¶ Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwellinge places, that be not their owne. A grymme & boysteous people is it, these shal syt in iudgment & punyshe. Their horses are swifter then the cattles of the mountayne, & byte sorer then ¶ wolues in ¶ euenynge. " Their horsmen come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastely to deuoure as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them commeth an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captyues, like as the sonde. They shall mocke the kinges, and laugh the prynces to scorne. They shal not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinaunce agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh corage vnto them, to go forth & to do more euell, ^c & so ascribe that power vnto their God.

C But thou o LORDE my God, my holy one, thou art from the begynnynge, therefore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordered them for a punyshmēt, and set them to reprove the mightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euell, thou canst not beholde ^d & thinge that is wicked. ^e Wherefore then dost thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man that is better thē himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the crepinge beestes, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, & gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therefore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thorow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so plēteous. Wherefore they cast out their net agayne, & neuer ceasse to slaye the people.

The ij. Chapter.

A I STODE vpon my watch, and set me vpon my bulworke, to loke ^a & se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answere I shulde geue him ^b & reproceth me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so commeth by, maye rede it: for ^c & visio is yet farre of for a tyme, ^d but at ^e & last it shal come to passe, & not fayle. And though he tary, yet wait thou for him, ^f for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not prosper: but the iust shal lyue by his faith. ^g Like as the wyne discaueth the dronkarde, euen so the proude shal fayle & not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, & is as vnasciable as death. ^h All Heithen gathereth he to him, & heapeth vnto him all people.

B But shall not all these take vp a prouerbe agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapeth vp other mens goodes? How longe wil he lade himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, ⁱ & shal byte the, & awake, that shal teare ^j & in peces? yee thou shalt be their pray. ^k Seinge thou hast spoyled many Heithen, therefore shall the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens bloude, & for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite & vnto all them that dwel therein.

^l Wo vnto him, that couetously gathereth euell gotten goodes in to his house: that he maye set his nest an hye, to escape from the power of mysfortune. ^m Thou hast deuyed ⁿ & shame of thine owne house, for thou hast slayne to moch people, and hast wilfully offended: ^o so that the very stones of the wall shal crie out of it, and the tymbre that lieth betwixte the ioyntes of the buyldinge shall answere. ^p Wo vnto him, ^q & buyldeth the towne with bloude, and maynteneth ^r & cite with vnrightuousnes. Shal not the LORDE of hoostes bringe this to passe, that the laboures of the people shal be brent with a greate fyre, and that the thinge wher vpon the people haue weered them selues, shall be lost? ^s For the earth shalbe full of knowlege of the LORDES honour, like as the waters that couer the see.

C Wo vnto him that geueth his neighbour dryncke, to get him wrothfull displeasure for his dronkenesse: ^t that he maye se his preuytees. Therefore with shame shalt thou be fylled, in steade of honoure. Dryncke thou also, till thou slombre withall: for the cuppe of the LORDES right hōde shall compasse the aboute, and shamefull spewing in steade of thy worshiipe. For the wrōge that thou hast done in Libanus, shal ouerwhelme the, ^u and the wilde beastes shal make the afayed: because of mens bloude, and for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite, and vnto all such as dwel therein.

What helpe than wil ^v & ymage do, whom the workman hath fashioned? Or the wayne cast ymage, wherin because the craftesman putteth his trust, therefore maketh he domme Idols? A prayer of the prophet Abacar for the ignoraunt.

A LORDE, when I herde speake of ŷ, I was afrayed. The worke ŷ thou hast taken in honde, shalt thou perfourme in his tyme, O LORDE: and when thy tyme cometh, thou shalt declare it. In thy very wrath thou thinkest vpon mercy. God cometh from Theman, and the holy one from the mount of Pharan. Sela.

His glory couereth the heauens, and the earth is full of his prayse. His shyne is as ŷ sonne, & beames of light go out of his hondes, there is his power hid. Destrucciō goeth before him, and burnynge cressettes go from his fete. He stondesth, & measureth the earth: He loketh, & the people consume awaye, the mōutaynes of ŷ worlde fall downe to powlder, and the hilles are fayne to bowe them selues, for his goings are euerlastinge and sure.

I sawe, that the pavilions of the Morians and the tentes of the londe of Madian were vexed for weerynesse. Wast thou not angrie (o LORDE) in the waters? was not thy wrath in the floudes, and thy displeasure in the see? yes, whē thou sattest vpon thine horse, and when thy charettes had the victory. Thou shewdest thy bowe opely, like as thou haddest promised with an ooth vnto the trybes. Sela.

B Thou didest deuyde the waters of the earth. When the mountaynes saw the, they were afrayed, ŷ water streame wēte awaye: the depe made a noyse at the liftinge vp of thine honde. "The Sonne and Mone remayned still in their habitacion. Thine arrowes wente out glisteringe, and thy speares as the shyne of the lightenyng. "Thou trodest downe the londe in thine anger, and didest throsse the Heithen in thy displeasure. Thou camest forth to helpe thy people, to helpe thine anoynted. Thou smotest downe the heade in the house of the vngodly, & discoueredest his foundacions, euē vnto ŷ necke of him. Sela.

Thou cursest his septers, the captayne of his men of warre: which come as a stormy wynde to scatre me abroad, & are glad when they maye eat vp ŷ poore secretly. Thou makest a waye for thine horses in the see, euen in the mudde of greate waters. Whē I heare this, my body is vexed, my lippes tremble at ŷ voyce therof, my bones corrupte, I am afrayed where I stonde. O that I might rest in the daye of trouble, that I might go vp vnto oure people, which are alreedy prepared.

For the fyge trees shal not be grene, & the vynes shal beare no frute. The labour of ŷ olyue shalbe but lost, and the londe shall bringe no corne: the shepe shalbe taken out of ŷ folde, and there shalbe no catell in ŷ stalles. But as for me, I wil be glad in the LORDE, and will reioyce in God my Sauoure. "The LORDE God is my strength, he shall make my fete as the fete of hertes: & he which geueth ŷ victory, shal bringe me to my hye places, synginge vpon my psalmes.

Chap. III.

Punyshment because of the wickednesse of the Iewes: whom God therfore refused, and chose the Heithen.

The first Chapter.

A THIS is the worde of the LORDE, which came vnto Sophony the sonne of Chusi, the sonne of Gedolias, the sonne of Amarias y sonne of Hezechias: in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda. "I will gather vp all thinges in the londe (saieth the LORDE) I wil gather vp man and beest: I wil gather vp the foules in the ayre, and the fysh in the see (to the greate decaye of the wicked) & wil vtterly destroye the men out of the londe, saieth the LORDE. I wil stretch out myne honde vpon Iuda, and vpon all soch as dwel at Ierusalem. Thus wil I rote out the remnaunt of Baal from this place, and the names of the Kemuryns and prestes: yee & soch as vpon their house toppes worshipe & bowe them selues vnto the hoost of heauen: which swear by the LORDE,^a and by their Malchom also: which starte a backe from y LORDE, and nether seke after the LORDE, ner regarde him.

B "Be still at y presence of the LORDE God, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde: yee the LORDE hath prepared a slayne offeringe, and called his gestes therto. And thus shall it happen in the daye of the LORDES a slaynofferinge: "I will vyset the prynces, the kinges children, & all soch as weere straūge clothinge. In the same daye also wil I vyset all those, that treade ouer the threshold so proudly, which fyll their lordes house with robbery and falsede. At y same tyme (saieth the LORDE) there shall be herde a greate crie from the fyshporte, and an howlinge from y other porte, and a greate murthur from the hilles. Howle ye that dwel in the myll, for all the marchaunt people are gone, and all they that were laden with syluer, are rote out.

"At the same tyme wil I seke thorow Ierusalem with lanternes, and vyset them that contynue in their dregges, and saye in their hertes: Tush, the LORDE wil do nether good ner euell. Their goodes shalbe spoyled, and their houses layed waist. "They shall buylde houses, and not dwel in them: they shal plante vynyardes, but not drynke the wyne therof. "For the greate daye of the LORDE is at honde, it is harde by, & cometh on a pace. Horrible is y tydings of the LORDES daye, then shall the giaunte crie out: for that daye is a daye of wrath, a daye

The ij. Chapter.

COME together and gather you, O ye frauwerde people: or y thinge go forth that is concluded, & or the tyme be passed awaye as the dust: or the fearfull wrath of the LORDE come vpon you, yee or the daye of the LORDES sore displeasure come vpon you. ^cSeke the LORDE all yee meke harted vpon earth, ye that worke after his iudgmēt: seke rightuousnesse, seke lowlynnesse: that ye maye be defended in the wrothfull daye of y LORDE. ^dFor Gaza shal be destroyed, & Ascalon shal be layed waist: They shal cast out Aszdad at the noone daye, and Accaron shal be pluckte vp by the rotes.

Wo vnto you y dwel vpon the see coast, ye murthurous people: the worde of y LORDE shal come vpon you. O Canaan thou londe of the Philistynes, I wil destroye the, so that there shal no man dwel in the eny more: & as for the see coast, it shal be hyrdmens cōtages & shepe foldes: yee it shalbe a porcion for soch as remayne of the house of Iuda, to fede ther vpon. In y houses of Ascalon shal they rest towarde night: for the LORDE their God shal vyset thē, & turne awaye their captiuite. I haue herde the despite of Moab, & the blasphemies of the children of Ammon: how they haue shamefully intreated my people, and magnified them selues within the borders of their londe. Therefore as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel) Moab shalbe as Sodome, & Ammon as Gomorra: euen drie thorne hedges, salt pittes and a perpetuall wyldernes. The residue of my folke shall spoyle them, the remnaunt of my people shall haue them in possession. This shal happen vnto them for their pryde, ^ebecause they haue dealte so shamefully with the LORDE of hostes people, and magnified them selues aboute them. The LORDE shall be grymme vpon them, and ^fdestroye all the goddes in the londe. And all the Iles of the Heithen shal worshipe him, euery man in his place.

Ye Moriās also shal perish with my swerde: ^gYee he shall stretch out his honde ouer the north, and destroye Assur. As for Ninieue, he shal make it desolate, drye and waist. The flockes and all the beastes of the people shall lye in the myddest of it, pellicanes and storckes shall abyde in the vpper postes of it, foules shal synge in the wyndowes, and rauens shal syt vpon the balckes, for the bordes of Cedre shalbe ryuē downe. ^hThis is the proude and carelesse cite, that sayde in hir herte: I am, and there is els none. O how is she made so waist, y the beestes lye therin? Who so goeth by, mocketh her, and poynteth at her with his fynger.

The iij. Chapter.

WO to the abhominable, fylthie and ⁱcruel cite: which wil not heare, ner be reformed. Hir trust is not in the LORDE, nether wil she holde her to hir God. ^jHir rulers within her are as roaringe lyons: hir iudges are as wolues in the euenynge, which leaue nothings behynde them till the morow. But neuertheles they stonde vp early, to folowe the filthynes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore ye shal waite vpon me (saith the LORDE) vntil the tyme that I stonde vp: for I am determed, to gather the people and to bringe the kingdomes together, that I maye poure out myne anger, yee all my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. "For all the worlde shalbe consumed with the fyre of my gelousy. And then wil I clense the lippes of the people, that they maye euerychone call vpon the name of the LORDE, and serue him with one shulder. At y same tyme wil I bringe you in, and at the same tyme wil I gather you. The first Chapter.

IN the seconde yeare of kynge Darius, ^ain the vj. moneth the first daye of the moneth, came the worde of the LORDE (by the prophet Aggeus) ^bvnto Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel ^ŷ prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, sayenge: Thus speaketh the LORDE of hoostes, and saieth: This people doth saye: The tyme is not yet come to buylde vp the LORDES house. Then spake the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus [¶] said: ^cYe youre selues can fynde tyme to dwell in syled houses, and shal this house lye waist? Considre now youre owne wayes in youre hertes (saieth ^ŷ LORDE of hoostes) ye sowe moch, but ye bringe litle in: ^dYe eate, but ye haue not ynough: ye drinke, but ye are not fylled: ye decke youre selues, but ye are not warme: ^e¶ he ^ŷ earneth eny wage, putteth it in a broken purse.

33 Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Cōsidre youre owne wayes in youre hertes, get you vp to the mountayne, fetch wod, [¶] buylde vp the house: ^fthat it maye be acceptable vnto me, and that I maye shewe myne honoure, saieth the LORDE. Ye loked for moch, and lo it is come to litle: [¶] though ye brynge it home, yet do I blowe it awaye. And why so, saieth the LORDE of hoostes? Euē because that my house lyeth so waist, [¶] and ye renne euery man vnto his owne house. Wherefore the heauen is forbyddē to geue you eny dew, and the earth is forbydden to geue you encrease. [¶] I haue called for a drouth, both vpō the londe [¶] vpon the mountaynes, vpon corne, vpon wyne [¶] vpon oyle, vpon euery thinge that the grounde bryngeth forth, vpon men and vpon catell, yee and vpon all handy labour.

Then Aggeus the LORDES angel sayed in the LORDES message vnto the people: [¶] I am with you, saieth the LORDE. So the LORDE waked vp the sprete of Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and the sprete of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, and the sprete of the remnaunt of all the people: [¶] they came [¶] laboured, in the house of the LORDE of hoostes their God.

A VPON the xxiiij. daye of the sixte moneth, in the secōde yeaere of kinge Darius, the xxi. daye of the seuenth moneth, came the worde of the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus, sayenge: speake to Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, and to the residue of ꝑ people, & saye: ^aWho is left amōge you, that sawe this house in hir first beuty? But what thinke ye now by it? Is it not in youre eyes, euē as though it were nothinge? Neuerthelesse be of good chere, o Zorobabel (saieth the LORDE) ^bbe of good conforte, o Iesua thou sonne of Iosedec, hye prest: take good hartes vnto you also, all ye people of the londe, saieth the LORDE of hoostes, and do accordinge to the worde (for I am with you, ^csaieth the LORDE of hoostes) like as I agreed with you, when ye came out of the londe of Egypte: & my sprete shalbe amonge you, feare ye not.

B For thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: ^dYet once more will I shake heauē and earth, the see and the drye lōde: Yee I will moue all Heithen, & the conforte of all Heithen shall come, & so wil I fyll this house with honoure, saieth the LORDE of hoostes. The syluer is myne, ^e& the golde is myne, saieth the LORDE of hoostes. Thus ꝑ glory of the last house shalbe greater thē the first, saieth the LORDE of hoostes: & in this place wil I geue peace, saieth the LORDE of hoostes.

The xxiiij. daye of the ix moneth in the seconde yeaere of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto the prophet Aggeus sayenge: Thus saieth ꝑ LORDE God of hoostes: Axe the prestes concernynge the lawe, & saye: ^fYf one beare holy flesh in his cote lappe, & with his lappe do touch the bred, potage, wyne, oyle or eny other meate: shall he be holy also? The prestes answered, & saide: No. Then sayde Aggeus: Now yf one beyngē defyled with a deed carcase, touch eny of these: shall it also be vncleane? The prestes gaue answer & sayed: yee, it shall be vncleane. ^gThe Aggeus answered, and sayde: Euen so is this people & this nacion before me, saieth ꝑ LORDE: and so are all the workes of their hōdes, yee and all that they offre, is vncleane.

And now (I praye you) cōsidre from this daye forth, and how it hath gone with you afore: or euer there was layed one stone vpō another in the temple of the LORDE: that when ye came to a corne heape of xx. bushels, there were scarce ten: ^hand that when ye came to the wyne presse for to poure out L. pottes of wyne, there were scarce xx. For I smote you with heate, blasinge & hale stones in all the labours of youre hondes: yet was there none of you, that wolde turne vnto me, saieth the LORDE. Considre then from this daye forth and afore, namely, from the xxiiij. daye of the ix. moneth, vnto the daye that the foundation of the LORDES temple was layed: ⁱMarck it well, Is not the sede yet in the barne? haue not the vyues, the fyge trees, the pomgranates and olyue trees bene yet vnfrutefull? but frō this daye forth, I shal make them to prospere.

Morouer the xxiiij. daye of the moneth came the worde of the LORDE vnto Aggeus agayne, sayenge: Speake to Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and saye: I will shake both heauen and earth, and ouerthrowe the seate of the kingdomes, yee & destroye the mightie kingdome of the Heithē. I wil ouerthrowe the charettes, and those that syt vpon them, so that both horse and man shal fall downe, euery man thorow his neghbours swerde. The first Chapter.

IN the eight moneth of the secōde yeare of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto "Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo, the prophet, say-enge: The LORDE hath bene sore displeased at youre forefathers. And saye thou vnto them: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. ^bTurne you vnto me (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and I wil turne me vnto you, saith the LORDE of hoostes. ^cBe not ye like youre forefathers, vnto whom the prophetes cried a fore tyme, sayēge: Thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: "Turne you from youre euell wayes, ⁊ from youre wicked ymaginacions. But they wolde not heare, ner regarde me, saith the LORDE.

^a What is now become of youre forefathers and the prophetes? are they yet still alyue? But dyd not my wordes ⁊ statutes (which I cōmaunded by my seruantes ⁊ prophetes) touch youre fore fathers? Vpō this, they gaue answer ⁊ sayde: like as ⁊ LORDE of hoostes deuysed to do vnto vs, accordinge to oure owne wayes ⁊ ymaginacions, euen so hath he dealte with vs.

33 Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the xj. moneth (which is the moneth Sebat) in the seconde yeare of Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo the prophete, sayenge: I sawe by night, and lo, there sat one vpon a reade horse, and stode still amonge the Myrte trees, ^c that were beneth vpon the grounde: and behynde him were there reade, speckled and whyte horses.

Then sayde I: O my LORDE, what are these? And the angel that talked with me, sayed vnto me: I will shewe the what these be. And the man that stode amōge the Myrte trees, answered ⁊ sayde: These are they, whom the LORDE hath sent to go thorow the worlde. And they answered the angel of the LORDE, that stode amonge the Myrte trees, and sayde: We haue gone thorow the worlde: and beholde, all the worlde dwell at ease, and are carelesse.

C Then the LORDES angel gaue answer and sayde: O LORDE of hoostes, how longe wilt thou be vnmercifull to Ierusalē and to the cities of Iuda, ^d with whom thou hast bene displeased now these lxx. yeares? So the LORDE gaue a louyng and a comfortable answer, vnto the angel that talked with me. And the angel that communed with me, sayde vnto me: Crie thou, and speake, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I am exceedyngelous ouer Ierusalem and Sion, and sore displeased at the carelesse Heithen: for where as I was but a litle angrie, they dyd their best that I might destroye them. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: "I wil turne me agayne in mercy towarde Ierusalem, so that my house shalbe buylded in it, saith the LORDE of hoostes: yee and the plommet shal be layed abrode in Ierusalem, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

Crie also, and speake: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: My cities shall be in good prosperite agayne, the LORDE shall yet conforte Sion, and chose Ierusalem. Then lift I vp myne eyes and sawe, and beholde, foure hornes. And I sayde vnto the angel, that talked with me: what be these? he answered me: ^e These are ⁊ hornes, which haue scatred Iuda, Israel and Ierusalem abrode. And ⁊ LORDE shewed me iiij. carpenters. Then sayde I: what wil these do? He answered, ⁊ sayde: Those are the hornes, which haue so strowed Iuda abrode, that no man durst lift vp his heade: But these are come to fraye them awaye, and to cast out ⁊ hornes of the Gentiles, which lift vp their horne ouer the londe of Iuda, to scatre it abrode.

The ij. Chapter.

I LIFT vp myne eyes agayne, ⁊ loked: A and beholde, ^a a man with a measure lyne in his honde. Then saide I: whether goest thou? And he sayde vnto me: To measure Ierusalem, that I maye se how longe and how brode it is. And beholde, the angel that talked with me, wente his waye forth. Then wēte there out another angel to mete him, ⁊ sayde vnto him: Runne, speake to this yonge man, ⁊ saye: Ierusalem shal be inhabited without eny wal, for ^b ⁊ very multitude of people ⁊ catell, ^c ⁊ shal be therin. ^d Yee I myself (saith the LORDE) wil be vnto her a wall of fyre rounde aboute, ⁊ wilbe honoured in her.

O get you forth, O fle from the londe of ^e ⁊ north (saith the LORDE) ye, ^f whom I haue scatred in to the foure wyndes vnder heauē, saith the LORDE. Saue thy self, o Sion: thou that dwellest with ^g daughter of Babilon, for thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: 33 ^h With a glorious power hath he sent me out to the Heithē, which spoyled you: for who so toucheth you, shal touche the aple of his

"Be glad, & reioyce, o daughter of Sion: for lo, I am come to dwell in the myddest of the, saith the LORDE. At the same tyme there shal many Heithen cleue to the LORDE, & shal be my people. Thus wil I dwel in the myddest of the, & thou shalt knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto the. The LORDE shall haue Iuda in possession for his parte in the holy grounde, & shal chose Ierusalem yet agayne. Let all flesh be still before the LORDE, for he is rysen out of his holy place.

The iij. Chapter.

AND he shewed me Iesua [†]hye prest, standinge before the angel of the LORDE, and Satan stode at his right honde to resiste him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Satan: The LORDE reproue the (thou Satan) yee the LORDE that hath chosen Ierusalem, reproue the. Is not this a brande takē out of the fyre? Now Iesua was clothed in vncleane rayment, and stode before the angel: which answered & sayde vnto those, [†]he stode before him: take away [†]hye foule clothes from him. And vnto him he sayde: Beholde, I haue takē away thy synne from the, & wil decke the with chaunge of raymēt. He sayde morouer: set a fayre myter vpon his heade. So they set a fayre myter vpon his heade, & put on clothes vpon him, and the angel of [†]the LORDE stode there. Then the angel of the LORDE testified vnto Iesua, & spake, thus sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Yf thou wilt walke in my wayes, & kepe my watch: thou shalt rule my house, & kepe my courtes, & I wil geue the place amōge these that stonde here. Heare o Iesua thou hye prest, thou & thy frendes that dwell before the, for they are wōderous people. Beholde, [†]I will bringe forth the branch of my seruauit: for lo, the stone that I haue layed before Iesua: vpon one stone shalbe vij. eyes. Beholde, I will hewe him out (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and take away the synne of that londe in one daye. Then shall euery man call for his neghboure, vnder the vyne & vnder [†]hye fyge tre, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The iij. Chapter.

AND [†]hye angel that talked with me, came agayne, & waked me vp (as a man that is raysed out of his slepe) & sayde vnto me: What seist thou? And I sayde: I haue looked, and beholde: a candelsticke all of golde, with a boll vpon it & his vij. lampes therin, & vpon euery lampe vij. stalkes: And ij. olyue trees therby, one vpon the right syde of the boll, & the other vpon the left syde. So I answered, & spake to the angel [†]he talked with me, sayenge: O my lorde what are these? The angel that talked with me, answered & sayde vnto me: knowest thou not what these be? And I sayde: No, my lorde. He answered, & sayde vnto me: This is the worde of the LORDE vnto Zorobabel, sayenge: Nether thorow an hoost of men, ner thorow strēth, [†]but thorow my sprete, saith [†]hye LORDE of hoostes. What art thou (thou greate mountayne) before Zorobabel? thou must be made eauen. [†]And he shal bringe vp the first stone, so that men shall crie vnto him: good lucke, good lucke.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: [†]The hondes of Zorobabel haue layed [†]hye foundation of this house, his hondes also shal fynishe it: that ye maye knowe, [†]how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. For he that hath bene despysed a litle season, shal reioyce, whē he seyth the tynne weight in Zorobabels honde. The vij. eyes are the LORDES, which go thorow the hole worlde. Then answered I, & sayde vnto him: What are these two olyue trees vpon the right and left syde of the candelsticke? I spake morouer, & sayde vnto him: what be these ij. olyue branches which (thorow [†]hye two golden pipes) emptie them selues in to the golde? He answered me, & sayde: knowest thou not, what these be? And I sayde: No, my lorde. Then sayde he. These are the two olyue branches, [†]that stonde before the ruler of the whole earth.

he sayde vnto me: what seist thou? I answered: I se a flyenge boke of xx. cubites longe & x. cubites brode. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the curse, y goeth forth ouer the whole earth: For all theues shalbe iudged after this boke, & all swearers shalbe iudged according to the same. I wil bringe it forth (saith the LORDE of hoostes) "so y it shal come to the house of the thefe, & to the house of him, that falsly sweareth by my name: & shal remayne in his house, & consume it, with the tymbre & stones therof. Thē the angel that talked with me, wente forth, & sayde vnto me: lift vp thine eyes & se, what this is y goeth forth. And I sayde: what is it? He answered: this is a measure goinge out. He sayde morouer: Euen thus are they (y dwell vpon the whole earth) to loke vpon.

B And beholde, there was lift vp a talent of leade: & lo, a woman sat in the myddest of the measure. And he sayde: This is vngodlynnesse. So he cast her in to the myddest of the measure, & threwe y lompe of leade vp in to an hole.

Then lift I vp myne eyes, & looked: & beholde, there came out ij. women, & the wynde was in their wynges (for they had wynges like the wynges of a Storke) & they lift vp the measure betwixte the earth & the heauen. Then spake I to the angel, y talked with me: whyther wil these beare the measure? And he sayde vnto me: "in to the londe of Synear, to buylde them an house: which when it is prepared, the measure shall be set there in his place.

The vi. Chapter.

A MOROUER I turned me, lifynge vp myne eyes, & looked: & beholde, there came iiij. charettes out frō betwixte two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: "In the first charet were reade horse, In the secōde charet were blacke horse, In y thirde charet were whyte horse, In y fourth charet were horses of dyuerse colours, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lorde, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: "These are the iiij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stōde before the ruler of all y earth. That with the blacke horse wente in to the londe of the north, & the whyte folowed thē, and the sprekled horses wente forth towarde the south. These horses were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take their iourney ouer the whole earth. And he sayde: get you hence, and go thorow the worlde. So they wēte thorow out the worlde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, these that go towarde y north, shal still my wrath in the north countre.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto B me, sayenge: Take of the presoners that are come from Babilon: namely, Heldai, Tobias and Idaia: & come thou the same daye, and go in to the house of Iosias the sonne of Sophony. Then take golde and syluer, and make crownes therof, and set them vpon the heade of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, the hie prest, and speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, the man whose name is the braunch: " & he that shall springe vp after him, shal buylde vp the temple of the LORDE: yee euen he shall buylde vp the temple of the LORDE. / He shal beare the prayse, he shall syt vpon the LORDES trone, and haue the dominacion.

"A prest shall he be also vpon his trone, & a peaceable counsell shalbe betwixte them both. And the crownes shal be in the temple of the LORDE, for a remembrance vnto Helem, Tobias, Idaia and Hen the sonne of Sophony. And soch as be farre of, shal come and buylde the temple of the LORDE: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. And this shal come to passe, yf ye wil herken diligently vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God.

The viij. Chapter.

A IT happened also in the fourth yeare of kyng Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is called Casleu: what tyme as Sarasar and Rogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before y LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the prestes, which were in the house of the LORDE of hoostes, and to the prophetes: "Shulde I wepe in the fyfte moneth, and absteyne, as I haue done now certayne yeares? Then came the worde of the LORDE of hoostes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the prestes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned ^{in the v t vij. moneth} (now this lxx. yeaes) dyd ye fast vnto me? When ye ate also and dronke, dyd ye not eate and drinke for youre owne selues? Are not these the wordes, which the LORDE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Ierusalem was yet inhabited and welthy, she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt mē, both towarde the south and in the playne countrees?

B And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary, sayenge: Thus saith ȝ LORDE of hoostes: Execute true iudgment: shewe mercy and lounge kyndnesse, ^{euery} man to his brother: Do the wyddowe, the fatherlesse, the straunger, and poore no wronge: and let no man ymagen euell agaynst his brother in his hert. ^{Neuertheles} they wolde not take hede, but turned their backes, and stopped their eares, that they shulde not heare, yee they made their hertes as an Adamant stone, lest they shulde heare the lawe ȝ wordes, ^{which the} LORDE of hoostes sent in his holy sprete by the prophetes afore tyme.

Wherefore the LORDE of hoostes was very wroth at them. And thus is it come to passe, ^{that like as he} spake and they wolde not heare: euen so they cried, and I wolde not heare (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but scatered them amonge all Gentiles, whom they knewe not. Thus the londe was made so desolate, ȝ there traualed no man in it nether to ner fro, for that pleasaunt londe was vtterly layed waist.

The viij. Chapter.

A SO the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I was in a greate gelousy ouer Sion, yee I haue bene very gelous ouer her in a greate displeasure. thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I wil turne me agayne vnto Sion, and wil dwel in the myddest of Ierusalem: ^{so that} Ierusalem shalbe called a faithfull and true cite, the hill of the LORDE of hoostes, yee an holy hill.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes:

There shall yet olde men and women dwel agayne in the stretes of Ierusalem: yee and such as go with stauies in their hondes for very age. The stretes of the cite also shalbe full of yonge boyes and damselles, playnge vpon the stretes.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: yf the residue of this people thynke it to be vnpossible in these dayes, shulde it therfore be vnpossible in my sight, ^{sayeth the} LORDE of hoostes? Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil deliuer my people B from the londe of the east and west, and wil brynge them agayne: that they maye dwel at Ierusalem. ^{They} shalbe my people, and I will be their God, in treuth and rightuousnesse. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: let youre hondes be stronge, ye that now heare these wordes by the mouth of the prophetes, which be in these dayes that the foundation is layed vpon the LORDE of hoostes house, that the temple maye be buylded. ^{For why?} before these dayes nether men ner catel coude wyne eny thinge, nether might eny man come in and out in rest, for trouble: but I let euery man go agaynst his neyghboure.

Neuerthelesse I wil now intreate the residue of this people nomore, as afore tyme (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but they shalbe a sede of peace. ^{The} vynyarde shal geue hir frute, the grounde shal geue hir increase, and the heauens shal geue their dew: and I shal cause the remnaunt of this people, to haue all these in possession. And C it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the Heithen (O ye house of Iuda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I deliuer you, that ye shalbe a blessinge: feare not, but let youre hōdes be stronge.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: like as I deuysed to punysh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wrath (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determed now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Iuda and Ierusalem, therfore feare ye not. Now the thinges that ye shal do, are these: ^{Speake} euery man the treuth vnto his neyghboure, execute iudgment truly and peaceably within Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: There shall yet come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: "Vp, let vs go, and praye before the LORDE, let vs seke the LORDE of hoostes, I wil go with you. Yee moch people and mightie Heithen shal come and seke the LORDE of hoostes at Ierusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. The ix. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE shalbe rehearsed at Adrach, & Damascus shal be his offeringe: for the eyes of all mē and of the trybes of Israel shall loke vp vnto the LORDE. The borders of Hemath shal be harde therby, Tyrus also & Sidon, for they are very wise. ^bTyrus shal make hirself stronge, heape vp syluer as the sonde, and golde as the claye of the stretes. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power in to the see, and she shalbe consumed with fyre. This shal Ascalon se, and be afraied. Gaza shalbe very sorry, so shal Accaron also, ^dbecause hir hope is come to confucion. For the kinge of Gaza shal perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwel.

Straungers shall dwel at Aszdod, & as for ^fpryde of ^gPhilistynes, I shal rote it out. Their bloude will I take awaye from their mouth, and their abhominaciōs from amonge their teth. Thus they shal be left for oure God, yee they shalbe as a prynce in Iuda, &

Accaron like as Iebusi. And so will I compase my house rounde aboute with my men of warre, goinge to and fro: that no oppressoure come vpon them eny more. For that haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Reioyce thou greatly, o daughter Sion: be glad, o daughter Ierusalem. ^fFor lo, thy kinge commeth vnto the, euen the rightuous and Sauoure: Lowly and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpō the foale of an asse. I wil rote out the charettes frō Ephraim, & the horse from Ierusalem, the batel bowes shal be destroyed. He shall geue the doctryne of peace vnto the Heithen, ^gand his dominion shalbe from the one see to the other, & from the floudes to the endes of the worlde.

Thou also thorow the bloude of thy couenaunt: ^hshalt let thy presoners out of the pytte, wherin is no water. Turne you now to the stronge holde, ⁱye that be in preson, & longe sore to be delyuered: And this daye I bringe the worde, that I wil rewarde the dubble agayne. For Iuda haue I bent out as a bowe for me, and Ephraim haue I fylled.

Thy sonnes (o Siō) wil I rayse vp agaynst ^kthe Grekes, and make the as a giantes swearde: the LORDE God shalbe sene aboute thē, and his dartes shall go forth as the lightenyng. The LORDE God shall blowe the trompet, and shal come forth as a storme out of the south.

^lThe LORDE of hoostes shall defende thē, they shall consume and deuoure, and subdue them with slyng stones. They shal drynke & rage, as it were thorow wyne. They shalbe fylled like ^mbasens, & as ⁿhornes of ^oalder. The LORDE their God shal delyuer thē in ^pdaye, as the flock off his people: for the stones off his Sanctuary shalbe set vp in his lāde. O how prosperous and goodly a thyng shall that be? The corne shall make the yonge men chearefull, and the new wyne the maydens.

sayers se lyes, and tell but vayne dreames: the comforth that they geue, is nothyng worth. Therefore go they astraye like a flocke of shepe, ad are troubled, because they haue no shepherde. " My wrothfull displeasure is moued at the shepherdes, and I will vyset the goates. For the LORDE of hoostes wil graciously vyset his flocke (the house of Iuda) and holde them as a goodly fayre horse in the batell. ^a Out of Iuda shal come the helmet, the nale, the batelbowe, and all the princes together. They shalbe as the giauntes, which in the batell treade downe the myre vpon f stretes. They shal fight, for f LORDE shalbe with them, so that the horsmen shalbe confounded.

³³ I wil cōforte the house of Iuda, and preserue the house of Ioseph. I wil turne them also, for I pytie them: and they shal be like as they were, when I had not cast them of. For I the LORDE am their God, and wil heare them. Ephraim shalbe as a giaunt, and their herte shalbe cherefull as thorow wyne: Yee their children shal se it, and be glad, and their herte shal reioyce in the LORDE. I wil blowe for them a gather them together, for I wil redeme them. They shall increase, as they increased afore. I wil sowe thē amonge the people, f they maye thinke vpo me in farre countrees: they shal lyue with their childrē, and turne agayne. I wil bringe them agayne also from the londe of Egipte, and gather them out of Assiria. I wil carye them in to f londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they shal wante nothyng. He shall go vpon the see of trouble, and smyte the see waves: so f all the depe floudes shalbe dried vp. The proude boostinge ^c of Assur shalbe cast downe, and the scepter off Egipte shall be taken awaye. I wil comforte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, saith the LORDE.

The xi. Chapter.

³⁴ OPEN thy dores (o Libanus) that the fyre maye consume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye Fyrre trees, for the Cedre is fallē, yee all f proude are waisted awaye. Howle (o ye oke trees of Baasan) for f mightie stronge wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the shepherdes mourne, for their glory is destroyed. Mē maye heare the lyons whelpes roare, for the pryde off Iordane is waisted awaye.

Thus sayeth the LORDE my God: Fede the shepe of f slaughter, which shalbe slayne of those that possesse them: yet they take it for no synne, but they f sell thē, saye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: Yee their owne shepherdes spare them not. Therefore wil I nomore spare those that dwell in the londe (sayeth the LORDE) but lo, I will deluyer the people, euery man in to his neighbours honde, and in to the hōde of his kynge: that they maye smyte the londe, and out off their hondes wil not I deluyer them.

I myself fedde f slaughter shepe (a poore flocke verely) ad toke vnto me two stauēs: the one I called louynge mekenesse, the other I called wo, and so I kepte the shepe. Thre shepherdes destroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye with them, nether had they eny delyte in me. Then sayde I: I will fede you nomore, ^d the thinge that dyeth, let it dye: and that wil perishe, let it perishe, a let the rēnaunt eate, euery one the flesh of his neighbour. I toke also my louynge meke staff, ad brake it, that I might disannull the conuenaunt, which I made with all people, And so it was broken in that daye.

Then the poore symple shepe that had a respecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I sayde vnto them: yff ye thynke it good, brynge hither my pryce: yf no, then leaue. So they wayed downe xxx. syluer pens, f value that I was prysed at. ^e And the LORDE sayde vnto me: cast it vnto the potter (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I toke the xxx. syluer pens, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORDE.

Then brake I my other staff also (namely wo) that I might lowse the brotherheade betwixte Iuda and Israel. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take to the also the staff off a foolish shepherde: for lo, I will rayse vp a shepherde in the londe, which shall not seke after the thinges that be lost, ner care for soch as go astraye: he shall not heale the wounded, he shal not norish the thinge that is whole: but he shall eate the flesh off soch as be fat, and teare their clawes in peces.

O Idols shepherde, that leaueh the flocke. The swerde shal come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye. His arme shalbe clene dried vp, and his right eye shalbe sore blynded.

The xij. Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE hath deuysed for Israel.

A THUS saieth the LORDE, which spread the heauens abrode, ^alayde the foundation of the earth, and geueth man ^y breath of life: Beholde, I will make Ierusalem a cuppe of surfet, vnto all the people ^y are rounde aboute her: ^aYee Iuda himself also shalbe in the sege agaynst Ierusalem. At the same tyme will I make Ierusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all soch as lift it vp, shalbe toarne and rête, and all the people of the earth shalbe gathered together agaynst it.

B In that daye (sayeth ^y LORDE) I will make all horses abashed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Iuda, ^{ad} smyte all the horses of the people with blyndnesse. And the prynces of Iuda shall saye in their hertes: The inhabiteurs off Ierusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORDE off hoostes their God. ^aIn that tyme will I make the prynces of Iuda like an hote burnynge ouen with wodd, and like a cresshet off fyre amonge the strawe: so that they shal cōsume all the people roūde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the left. Ierusalē also shalbe inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Ierusalem stondesth.

The LORDE shall preserue the tentes off Iuda like as afore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Dauid and the glory of the cytesyns of Ierusalem, shalbe but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Iuda. In that daye shall the LORDE defende the citesyns of Ierusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shalbe as Dauid: ^aand the house of Dauid shalbe like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORDE before them.

C At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all soch people as come agaynst Ierusalem. ^aMorouer, vpon the house off Dauid and vpon the citesyns off Ierusalem, will I poure out the sprete of grace and prayer: ^aso that they shal loke vpon me, whom they haue persued: and they shall bewepe him, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne: Yee and be sory for him, as men are sory for their first childe.

^aThen shall there be a greate mournyng in Ierusalem, like as the lamentacion at Adremnon in the felde off Maggadon. ^aAnd the londe shall bewayle, euery kynred by the selues: The kynred off the house of Dauid them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: ^aThe kynred off the house of Nathan them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred off the house of Leui the selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred of the house of Semei them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: In like maner, all the other generaciōs, euerychone by them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues.

The xiiij. Chapter.

IN that tyme shall the house off Dauid and ^athe citesyns off Ierusalem haue an open well, ^ato wash of synne and vncleennesse. And then (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) I will destroye the names of Idols out off the londe: ^aso that they shal nomore be put in remembrance.

^aAs for the false prophetes also and the vn clene sprete, I shall take them out of the londe: So that yf eny off them prophcy eny more, his owne father and mother that begat him, shall saye vnto him: ^aThou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORDE: Yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophcyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, euery one off his vision when he prophcieth: nether shall they weere sack clothes eny more, to disceaue mē with all. ^aBut he shall be fayne to saye: I am no prophet: I am an husbonde man, for so am I taught by Adam fro my youth vp. ^aAnd yf it be sayde vnto him: How came these woundes then in thine hondes? He shall answer: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

^aArise (o thou swearde) vpon my shepherde, and vpon the prynce of my people, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes: Smyte the shepherde and the shepe shalbe scatred abrode, and so will I turne myne honde to the litle ones. And it shal come to passe (sayeth the LORDE) that in all the londe two partes shalbe roted out,

Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will saye: it is my people. And they shal saye: LORDE, my God.

The xiiiij. Chapter.

BEHOULDE, the daye of the LORDE cometh, that thou shalt be spoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the Heithen, to fight agaynst Ierusalem: so that the cite shalbe wonne, the houses spoyled, and the women defyled. The half of the cite shal go awaye in to captiuyte, and the residue of the people shal not be caried out of the cite.

After that shall the LORDE go forth to fight agaynst those Heithen, as men vse to fight in the daye of battell. The shall his fete stode vpon the mount oliuete, that lieth vpon the east syde of Ierusalem. And γ mount oliuete shal cleue in two, eastwarde, α westwarde so γ there shal be a greate valley: α the halff mount shal remoue towards the north, and the other half towards the south.

And ye shall fle vnto the valley of my hilles, for the valley off the hylles shal reach vnto Asal. Yee fle shall ye, like as ye fled for the earthquake in the dayes off Osias kynge of Iuda. And the LORDE my God shal come, and all sanctes with him. "In that daye shal it not be light, but colde and frost. This shalbe that specyall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORDE: nether daye ner night, but aboute the eueninge tyme it shal be light. "In that tyme shall there waters of life runne out from Ierusalem: the half parte of them towards the east see, ad the other half towards the vttemost see, and shall continue both somer and wynter. "And the LORDE himself shalbe kynge ouer all the earth.

At that tyme shal there be one LORDE only, and his name shalbe but one. Men shal go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Gibea to Remmon, and from γ south to Ierusalem. "She shalbe set vp, and inhabited in hir place: From Ben Iamins porte, vnto the place of the first porte, "and vnto γ corner porte: and from the tower of Hanael, vnto the kynges wyne presses. There shall men dwell, and there shal be nomore cursinge, but Ierusalem shalbe safely inhabited.

This shalbe the plage, wherwith γ LORDE wil smyte all people, that haue fought agaynst Ierusalem: Namely, their flesh shal consume awaye, though they stonde vpon their fete: their eyes shall corrupe in their holes, and their tunge shal consume in their mouth.

In that daye shall the LORDE make a greate sedicion amoge them, so that one ma shal take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neghboure. "Iuda shal fight also agaynst Ierusalem, ad the gooddes of all the Heithen shalbe gathered together rounde aboute: golde and syluer and a very greate multitude off clothes. And so shal this plage go ouer horses, mules, camels, asses and all the beastes that shall be in the hooste, like as yonder plage was.

Euery one that remaineth then of all γ people, which came agaynst Ierusalem, shal go vp yearly, to worshipe the kynge (euen γ LORDE of hoostes) "and to kepe the feast off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Ierusalem, for to worshipe the kynge (euen the LORDE of hoostes) vpon the same shal come no rayne. Yff the kynred of Egipte go not vp α come not, it shall not rayne vpon them nether.

This shalbe the plage wherwith γ LORDE wil smyte all Heithen, that come not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles: Yee this shalbe the synneplage of Egipte and the synneplage of all people, that go not vp to kepe the feast off tabernacles.

At that tyme shal the rydinge geer of γ horses be holy vnto the LORDE, and the kettels in the LORDES house shal be like the basens before the alter: yee all the kettels in Ierusalem and Iuda, shalbe holy vnto the LORDE of hoostes: and all they that slaye offeringes, shall come and take of them, and dight them therin. And at that tyme there shal be no mo Cananites in the house of the LORDE.

The Prophet Malachy.

What Malachy conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The benefites of God, shewed specially vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punyishment of the vnthanfulnessse, vnfaithfulnessse and covetousnesse of the prestes and the people.

Chap. II.

He threatneth punyishment and confucion vnto

the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.

Chap. III.

Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Off the abrogacion of the olde leuiticall prestheade. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearfull daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE sheweth agaynst Israel by Malachy.

I HAUE loued you, sayeth f LORDE: ad yet ye saye: wherein hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Iacobs brother, sayeth the LORDE? yet haue I loued Iacob, and hated Esau: "Yee I haue made his hilles waist, and his heretage a wyldernes for dragōs. And though Edom sayde: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde vp agayne the places that be waisted: yet (sayeth f LORDE of hoostes) what they buylded, that brake I downe: a so that it was called a cursed londe, and a people, whom the LORDE hath euer bene angrie withall.

Your eyes haue sene it, ad ye youre selues must confesse, that f LORDE hath brought the londe of Israel to greate honoure. Shulde not a sonne honour his father, and a seruaut his master? Yf I be now a father, where is myne honoure? 'yf I be the LORDE, where am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Now to you prestes, that despise my name. B And yf ye saye: wherein haue we despised thy name? In this, that ye offre vnclene bred vpō myne alter. And yf ye wil saye: wherein haue we offred eny vnclene thyng vnto the? In this that ye saye: the alter of the LORDE is not to be regarded. Yf ye offre f blynde, is not f euell? d And yf ye offre the lame and sick, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy prynce, shal he be cōtent with the, or accepte thy personne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes?

And now make youre prayer before God, that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for soch thinges haue ye done. Shal he regarde youre personnes (thynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so moch as to shut f dores, or to kyndle f fyre vpō myne alter for naught? I haue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes: and as for the meatofferinge, 'I wil not accepte it at youre honde. e For from the rysinge vp of f sonne vnto f goinge downe of the same, my name is create amonge the Gentiles: Yee in euery place shal there sacrifice be done, and a cleane meatofferinge offred vp vnto my name: for my name is greate amonge the Heithē, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye saye, the altur of [¶] LORDE is not to be regarded, and the thinge that is set thervpon, not worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye: It is but laboure and trauayle, and thus haue ye thought scorne at it, (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) offerynge robbery, yee the lame and the sicke. Ye haue brought me in a meatofferynge, shulde I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LORDE? Cursed be the dyssembler, which hath in his flocke one that is male, and when he maketh a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kynge (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and my name is fearfull amonge the Heithen.

The ij. Chapter.

AND now (o ye prestes) this commaundement toucheth you: yf ye will not heare it, ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) ^a I wil sende a curse vpon you, [¶] will curse youre blessings: yee curse them will I yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal corrupte youre sede, and cast donge in youre faces: euen the donge of youre solempne feastes, and it shal cleue fast vpon you. And ye shall knowe, that I haue sent this commaundement vnto you: that my couenaunt which I made with Leui, might stonde, sayeth [¶] LORDE of hoostes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace with him: this I gaue him, that he might stonde in awe of me: and so he dyd feare me, [¶] had my name in reuerence. The lawe of treuth was in his mouth, and there was no wickednesse founde in his lippes. He walked with me in peace [¶] equitye, ^b and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. For the prestes lippes shulde be sure knowlege, that men maye seke the lawe at his mouth, for he is a messaunger of the LORDE of hoostes. But as for you, ye are gone cleue out off the waye, and haue caused the multitude to be offended at the lawe: ^c ye haue broken the couenaunt of Leui, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore wil I also make you to be despised, and to be of no reputacion amonge all [¶] people: because ye haue not kepte my wayes, but bene parciall in the lawe.

^d Hauē we not all one father? Hath not one God made vs? why doth euery one off vs then despyse his owne brother, and so breake the couenaunt of oure fathers? Now hath Iuda offended: yee the abhominacion is done in Israel and in Ierusalē, for ^e Iuda hath defyled the Sactuary of the LORDE, which he loued, and hath kepte the daughter of a straunge God. But the LORDE shal destroye the mā that doth this (yee both the master [¶] the scolar) out off the tabernacle of Iacob, with him that offreth vp meatofferynge vnto the LORDE off hoostes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the altur of the LORDE is couered with teares, wepyng and mournynge: so that I will no more regarde the meatofferynge, nether wil I receaue or accepte eny thinge at youre hōdes.

And yet ye saye: wherfore? Euen because [¶] that where as the LORDE made a couenaunt betwixte [¶] and the wife off thy youth, thou hast despyred her: Yet is she thyne owne cōpanyon and married wife.

So dyd not ^f the one, [¶] yet had he an excellent sprete. What dyd then the one? He sought the sede promised of God. Therefore loke well to youre sprete, [¶] let no man despyse [¶] wife of his youth. Yf thou hatest her, put her awaye, sayeth the LORDE God of Israel, and [¶] geue her a clothinge for the scorne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Loke well then to youre sprete, and despyse her not. Ye greue the LORDE with youre wordes, and yet ye saye: wherwithall haue we greued him? In this, that ye saye: All that do euell are good in the sight of God, and soch please him. Or els where is the God that punysheth?

The iij. Chapter

BEHOLDE, [¶] I wil sende my messaunger, [¶] which shal prepare the waye before me: and the LORDE whom ye wolde haue, shal soone come to his temple, yee euen the messaunger of the couenaunt whom ye longe for. Beholde, he commeth, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But who maye abyde the daye of his comynge? Who shalbe able to endure, when he appeareth? For he is like a gold-smythes fyre, ad like wasshers sope. He shall syt him downe to trye and to clense ⁊ syluer, he shal poure the children of Leui, and purifie them like as golde and syluer: that they maye brynge meatofferings vnto the LORDE in rightuousnes. Then shall the offeringe of Iuda and Ierusalem be acceptable vnto the LORDE, like as from the begynninge ⁊ in the yeaes afore tyme. I will come ⁊ punysh you, ⁊ I my self wil be a swift wytnes agaynst the witches, agaynst the aduouterers, agaynst false swearers: yee ad agaynst those, that wrögeously kepe backe the hyrelynges dewty: which vexe the wyddowes ⁊ the fatherlesse, ⁊ oppresse the straunger, and feare not me, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. For I am the LORDE ⁊ chaunge not, ⁊ ye (o children of Iacob) wil not leaue of: ye are gone awaye fro myne ordinaüces, ⁊ sens ⁊ tyme of youre forefathers haue ye not kepte them.

^b Turne you now vnto me, and I wil turne me vnto you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Ye saye: Wherin shal we turne? Shulde a man vse falsede and disceate with God, as ye vse falsede and disceate with me? Yet ye saye: wherin vse we disceate with the? In Tythes and heaue offeringes. Therefore are ye cursed with penury, because ye dyssemble with me, all the sorte of you.

Brynge euery Tythe in to my barne, ⁊ there maye be meat in myne house: and proue me withall (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) yf I wil not open the wyndowes of heauen vnto you, and poure you out a blessinge with plenteousnesse. Yee I shal reprove the consumer for youre sakes, so that he shall not eate vp the frute of youre grounde, nether shal ⁊ vnyarde be baren in the felde, sayeth ⁊ LORDE of hoostes: In so moch that all people shal saye, that ye be blessed, for ye shall be a pleasaunt löde, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes.

Ye speake hard wordes agaynst me, sayeth the LORDE. And yet ye saye: What haue we spoken agaynst the? Ye haue sayed: It is but lost labour, to serue God: What profit haue we for kepyng his commaundementes, and for walkinge humbly before the LORDE off hoostes? Therefore maye we saye, that the proude are happie, and that they which deale with vngodlynesse, are set vp: for they tempte God, and yet escape.

But they that feare God, saye thus one to another: The LORDE cōsidreth and heareth it. Yee it is before him a memorial boke written for soch as eare the LORDE, and remembre his name. And in the daye that I wil make (saith ⁊ LORDE of hoostes) they shalbe myne owne possession: and I wil fauoure them, like as a man fauoureth his owne sonne, that doth him seruyce. Turne you therefore, and conside what difference is betwixte the rightuous and vngodly: betwixte him that serueth God, ad him that serueth him not.

For marck, the daye commeth that shall burne as an ouē: and all the proude, yee and all soch as do wickednesse, shalbe straw: and the daye that is for to come, shall burne thē vp (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) so that it shal leaue them nether rote ner braunch. But vnto you that feare my name, shall the Sōne of rightuousnesse aryse, ⁊ health shal be vnder his winges. Ye shal go forth, ⁊ multiplie as ⁊ fat calves. Ye shal treade downe ⁊ vngodly: for they shalbe like the ashes vnder the soles of your fete, in the daye ⁊ I shal make, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Remember the lawe of Moses my seruaunt, which I committed vnto him in Oreb^c for all Israel, with the statutes and ordinaüces. Beholde, ^a I will sende you Elias ⁊ prophet: before the cōmyng off the daye of the great and fearfull LORDE. He shall turne the hertes of the fathers to their children, and the hertes of the children to their fathers, that I come not, and smyte the earth with cursynge.

The transylatoure vnto the reader.

THESE bokes (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not iudged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other scripture, as thou mayest perceaue by S. Jerome in epistola ad Paulinum. And the chefe cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnaunt vnto the open and manyfest trueth in the other bokes of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them together to the intent that I wolde haue them despysed, or litle sett by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: Yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open scripture (tyme, place, and circumstaunce in all thinges considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vntruly & peruersly aledged. Treuth it is: A mā's face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether cā it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a styll water. These & many other darck places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myxte with blynde and cuetous opynions of men, which haue cast soch a myst afore the eyes of ſy symple, that as longe as they be not cōferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be vnderstonde, then as cuetousnes expoundeth them. But who so euer thou be that readest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for soch dreames, visions and darck sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstandinge, commytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the sprete of God (which is the author therof) shal lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomō (which thou findest not herin) ſy prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes songe in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde boke of the kynges, so that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge eny of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodotios translacion. Neuertheles, both because of those ſy be weake and scrupulous, and for their sakes also that loue soch swete songes of thankesgeuinge: I haue not left them out: to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also might haue the more occasion to geue thankes vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

The first Chapter.

AND Iosias helde the feast of Easter in Ierusalem vnto the LORDE,^a and slewe ʒ Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth. He set ʒ prestes also in ordre (acordige to their daylie courses) beyng arayed in longe garmētes in the tēple of the LORDE. And he spake vnto the Lewites the holy ministers of Israel, that they shulde halowe them selues vnto the LORDE, to set the holy arke of the LORDE, in the house that kynge Salomō the sonne of Dauid had buylded and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke vpon youre shulders. Now serue youre LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre vyllagies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Israel hath ordered, & acordinge as Salomon his sonne hath honorably prepared: Yee loke ʒ ye all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordringe and distribution of the pryncipull mē which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do seruyce for the childrē of Israel. ^a Kyll [¶] Passeouer, & prepare offeringes for youre brethren, and do accordinge to the commaundemēt of [¶] LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moses. And vnto [¶] people [¶] was foude, Iosias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, & thre thousande oxē. These the kynge (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, accordinge as he had promysed: & to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe & an hundreth oxē. Morouer Iechonias & Semeias and Nathanael brethren, & Hasabias, Iehiel and Iosabad, gaue them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyue hundreth bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Leuites stode goodly in their orde, and had the vneleuended bred thorow out [¶] trybes. And after the ordinge of the princypall men in the trybes, they offred vnto the LORDE in the sight of the people, accordinge as it is written in the boke of Moses, ^b & so they rosted the Easterlambe as accordinge was. As for the thāk offeringes & the other, they dight thē in ketels & pottes, & sett them before the people with good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offred the fatt, vntyll the tyme was expyred, but the Leuites prepared for them selues & for their brethren the childrē of Aaron. The syngers also [¶] children of Asaph stode in their orde, accordinge as Dauid had deuysed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary & Iedithū, which were appoynted by the kynge. Morouer the porters & dorekeepers stode by the dores & [¶] diligently, so [¶] none wente out of his stondinge & seruyce: for their brethren (the Leuites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges perfourmed, that belonged to the offringe of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Passeouer, & offred thank offeringes besyde [¶] sacrifice of [¶] LORDE, accordinge to [¶] commaundement of kynge Iosias.

^c So the children of Israel which were thē present helde an honorable Passeouer, & the feast of swete bred vij: dayes lōge. Yee soch a Passeouer was not kepte in Israel, from [¶] tyme of the prophet Samuel. And all the kynges of Israel helde not soch an Easter, as this which kynge Iosias helde, & [¶] prestes, [¶] leuites, [¶] Iewes & all Israel, of all thē [¶] were at Ierusalē. In [¶] xviii: yeare of [¶] raigne of Iosias was this Passeouer kepte. And with a perfecte hert dyd kynge Iosias orde all his workes (before [¶] LORDE) & [¶] things [¶] were wryttē of hī in tymes past, cōcernynge those [¶] synned & were vngodly agaynst [¶] LORDE before all people, & [¶] sought not the worde of [¶] LORDE vpon Israel. After all these actes of kynge Iosias, Pharaō [¶] kynge of Egipte wēte vp, & came towarde ^c Carcamis by Euphrates, & Josias wēte to mete hī. Then sent the kynge of Egipte vnto Iosias, sayenge: what haue I to do with [¶], o kynge of Iuda? I am not sent of [¶] LORDE to fight agaynst [¶], for my warre is upō Euphrates, go thou [¶] waye home agayne in all [¶] haist. And Iosias wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but vndertoke to fight agaynst him, & herkened not vnto [¶] worde of [¶] prophet, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battaill agaynst him in [¶] felde of Mageddo. And the prynces preassed to kynge Iosias. Then sayde the kynge vnto his seruantes: ^d Cary me awaye out of the battayll, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruantes tokē him awaye out of the front of the battayll. Then satt he vp vpon the secōde charett, came to Ierusalē, dyed, & was buried in his fathers sepulchre. And in all Iewry they mourned for Iosias, yee the rulers also with their wyues made lamētacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done euer still in Israel.

These thinges are written in the boke of the stories of [¶] kynges of Iuda: namely, all the actes & workes of kynge Iosias, his kyngly power & maiesty, his vnderstandinge in the lawe of God, & what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wryttē in the boke of the kynges of Israel & Iuda. ^e And [¶] people toke Iechonias the sonne of Iosias, & made him kynge in [¶] steade of Iosias his father, whan he was xxxiiij. yeare olde. And he reigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kinge of Egipte put him downe, [¶] he shulde not raigne in Ierusalē, & raysed vp a taxinge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer & one talēt of golde. The kinge of Egipte also made Ioachim his brother kynge of Iuda & Ierusalē. As for thē of the kynges counsell with the kynge himself and Zaraceles his brother, he tokē thē, & caried thē awaye presoners into Egipte. Fyue

¶ E tƿentie yeare olde was Ioachim, when he was made kynge in the londe of Iuda and Ierusalem, and he dyd euell before the LORDE. ^a After this, Nabuchodonosor ꝑ kynge of Babylō came vp, bounde him with bandes of yron, & caried him vnto Babilō. Nabuchodonosor also toke all ꝑ vessel ꝑ were halowed in the tēple of the LORDE, & all ꝑ Iewels, & caried thē vnto Babilon, & brought thē in to his owne tēple at Babilon. Of his vncleennes & vngodlynnes, it is writtē in ꝑ boke of the actes of ꝑ kynges. And Ioachim his sonne reigned in his steade: He was made kynge beynge xviij. yeare olde, & reigned but thre monethes & x. dayes in Ierusalē, & dyd euell before the LORDE. So after a yeare, Nabuchodonosor sent & caused him be brought vnto Babilon with ꝑ holy vessels of ꝑ LORDE, & made Sedechias his brother kynge of Iuda and Ierusalē, when he was xxi. yeare olde: and he reigned xj. yeare.

¶ And he dyd euell also in ꝑ sight of ꝑ LORDE, & cared not for ꝑ wordes ꝑ were spokē vnto hī by ꝑ prophet Ieremy at ꝑ mouth of the LORDE. ^b And where as he had made on oath vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor, he man-swore himself, & fell frō him hauynge a stiff neck & hert, & trāsgressed all ꝑ statutes & ordinaunces of the LORDE God of Israel. The rulers also & heades of ꝑ people of the LORDE dyd moch euell, & became vngodly, more thē the Heithen, beyng defyled in all maner of abhominaciōs: Yee & defyled ꝑ holy tēple of the LORDE at Ierusalē. And the LORDE God of their fathers sent his messaungers vnto thē, to turne them backe & to call thē agayne frō their synnes: for he wolde fayne haue spared thē for his holy tabernacles sake. Neuertheles, they had his messaungers in derision: & loke what God spake vnto thē by his prophetes, they made but a sporte of it. This drew on so longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth with his people for their vngodlynnes, & tyll he caused the kynges of ꝑ Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men with the swerde, yee euen in the compasse of their holy tēple, & spared no body, nether yonger olde, nether mayden ner yonge man: but they were all delyuered in to the power of the kynges of ꝑ Caldees, & all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they, & caried them vnto Babilon. ^c As for the house of the LORDE, they brēt it, & brake downe the walles of Ierusalē, set fyre vpon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldinges and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayne with the swerde, they caried vnto Babilon.

Thus became they ꝑ presoners & bōde mē of ꝑ kynge of Babilon, tyll they were delyuered & raygned for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he promysed them by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy, and tyll the londe had hir rest: ^d namely, all the time ꝑ it laye wayest, had it rest & quyetnes lxxvij. yeares.

The ii. Chapter.

¶ NOW whā kynge Cyrus raygned ouer the Persians, ^e & whā the LORDE wolde perfourme the worde ꝑ he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy: the LORDE raysed vp the sprete of Cyrus, the kynge of the Persiās, so ꝑ he caused this wrytinge to be proclamed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kynge of ꝑ Persians: The LORDE of Israel thāt hye LORDE hath made me kynge of the lōde, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at Ierusalem in Iewry. Yf there be eny now of youre people, ꝑ LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Ierusalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute ꝑ place, shal helpe thē, whether it be with golde, with syluer, with giftes, with horses and necessary catell, and all other thinges that are brought with a fre wyll to the house of the LORDE at Ierusalē.

¶ Then the pryncipall mē out of the trybes and vyllages of Iuda and Ben Iamin stode vp: so dyd the prestes also & the leuites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalē. And they that were aboute them, helped them with all maner of golde, and syluer, and catell also and with many liberall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered vp therto. Kynge Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornamentes, that were halowed vnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon had caried awaye from Ierusalem, and consecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and delyuered them to Mithridatus his treasurer, and by him they were delyuered to Salmasar ⁊ debyte in Lewry. And this was the nōbre of them: Two thousande and iij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde and syluer were v. M. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Salmasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Ierusalē out of the captiuyte of Babilon. Now in the tyme of kynge Artaxerses the kynge of Persia, these men: Balemus and Mithridatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Balthemus, Semelius ⁊ scribe, and other that dwelt in Samaria ⁊ in other places vnder ⁊ dominion therof, Wrote a letter vnto kynge Artaxerses, wherein they complained vnto the kynge of them in Lewry and Ierusalem. The letter was made after this maner:

C Syr, thy seruantes Rathimus the story wryter, Sabellius the Scribe, ⁊ other iudges of thy courte in Celosyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to our lorde the kynge, that the Iewes which are come vp frō you vnto vs in to the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set vp the tēple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be sett vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue trybutes and taxinges, but also rebell vterly agaynst the kynge. And for so moch as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thought it reason, to thinke no scorne of it, but to shewe it vnto our lorde the kynge, ⁊ to certifie him therof: to the intent yf it please the kinge, he maye cause it be sought in the booke of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch warnynge wrytten, and shalt vnderstonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Iewes which dwell therein, haue euer bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaithfull and fightinge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherefore now we certifie oure lorde the kynge, that yf this cite be buylde and occupied agayne, ⁊ the walles therof set vp a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosyria and Phenices.

D Then wrote the kynge to Rathimus the story wryter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius ⁊ scribe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and haue founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are dishobedient, and haue caused moch warre, ⁊ that mightie kynges haue raigned in Ierusalem, which also haue raysed vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherefore, I haue commaūded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyldinge: for so moch as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathymus and Sabellius the scribe and the rulers in the londe had red the wrytinge of kynge Artaxerses, they gatt them together, and came in all the haist to Ierusalem with an hoost of horsemen, and with moch people of fote, and forbad them to buylde. And so they left of from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the seconde yeare of kynge Darius.

The iij. Chapter.

KYNGE Darius made a greate feast vnto A his seruantes, vnto all his courte, ⁊ to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes ⁊ rulers that were vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopie, an hundredth ⁊ xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepte the kynges personne, and watched his body, commoned amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let euery one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kinge Darius geue greate giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and couerings: he shall make him a costly charett ⁊ a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde ⁊ pryncipall nexte vnto kynge Darius, ⁊ that because of his wysdome, and shalbe called ⁊ kynges kynsman.

So euery one wrote his meaninge, sealed it B and layed it vnder the kinges pelowe, and sayde: whan the kyng aryseth, we will geue him oure wrytinges: and loke whose worde the kyng and his chefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thinge. The secode wrote: The kyng is ströger. The thirde wrote: wemen haue yet more strength, but aboue all thinges y trueth beareth awaye the victory. Now whan the kyng was rysen vp, they toke their wrytinges and delyuered them vnto him, and so he red them. Then sent he forth to call all his chefe lordes, all the debytes q rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the councell, the wrytinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for y yonge mē, y they might declare their meanynges thē selues by mouth. So when they were sent for, and came in, y kyng sayde vnto them: shew vs and make vs to vnderstōde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.

C Then beganne the first (which had spokē of the strength of wyne) q sayde: O ye men, wyne is maruelous ströge,^a and ouercōmeth them y drynke it: it disceaueth the mynde, q bryngeth both the poore man q y kyng to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it also with the bondman and with the fre, with the poore q ryche: it taketh awaye their understandinge, and maketh them careles and mery, so that none of them remembreth eny heuynes, dett or dewtie: It causeth a man to thinke also that y thinge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kyng, nor y he is in auctorite, q y he ought not to do soch thinges. Morouer, whan men are drynckinge, they forgett all frendshipe, all brotherly faithfulness and loue: but as soone as they are dronckē, they drawe out the swerde q wil fight: q whā they are layed downe frō the wyne, q so rysen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Iudge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thinges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tongue.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THEN the secode (which had sayde, y the kyng was stronger) beganne to speake, sayēge: O ye men, are not they the strongest q most excellent, y cōquere the lōde q the see, q all y is in y see q in the earth? Now is the kyng lord of all these thinges, q hath dominion of thē all: q loke what he cōmaūdeth, it is done. Yf he sende his mē forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles q towres. They are slayne, q slaye (other men) them selues, q ouer passe not y kynges worde. Yf they get the victory, they brynge the kyng all the spoyle. Likewyse, the other y medle not with warres and fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge trybute vnto y kyng. And yf y kyng alone do but cōmaunde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cōmaunde to forgeue, they forgeue: yf he cōmaunde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd dryue awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he commaunde to buylde, they buylde: yf he cōmaūde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cōmaunde to plante, they plāte. The comon people q y rulers are obedient vnto him. And y kyng in the meane season sytteth hi downe, eateth and drynketh, q taketh his rest: thē kepe they watch rōūde aboute y kinge, q not one of thē darre gett him out of y waye, to do his owne busynes, but must be obediēt vnto y kinge at a worde. Iudge ye now o ye men, how shulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediēt? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tonge. The thirde (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of wemen q of y trueth) begāne to saye after this maner: O ye mē, it is not y greate kyng, it is not the multitude of mē, nether is it wine y excelleth: Who is it thē, y hath y lordshipe ouer thē? Haue not wemen borne the kyng, q all y people y rule these thinges? Haue not wemē borne thē, q brought thē vp, y plante the vynes, wherout y wyne cōmeth? They make garmētes for all mē, they geue honour vnto all men, q with out wemen can not men lye. Yf they gather golde q syluer q all precious thinges, q se a fayre q wel fauoured womā, they leaue all together, and turne their eyes onely vnto the woman, q gape vpon her, q haue more desyre vnto her, then vnto the syluer q golde, or eny maner of precious thinge. A mā leaueth his father^b y brought him vp, he leaueth his owne naturall cōūtre, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, ner mother, ner cowntre. By this then ye must nedes knowe, y wemen haue y domynion ouer you.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his swerde & goeth his waye to steale, to kyll, to murder, to sayle vpon the see, & seyth a lyon, and goeth in the darcknes: and when he hath stollen, disceaue & robbed, he bringeth it vnto his loue. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes & become bondmen for their wyues sakes: many one also haue perished, & haue bene slayne, & haue synned because of wemen.

And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power, & all lodes stode in awe of him, & no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I se, y Apame (y daughter of the greate kynge Bartacus) the kynges cōcubine, satt besyde the kynge vpō the right hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it vpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Morouer, the kynge looked vpō her with open mouth: yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also: but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, & to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not wemen then stronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that do these thinges. Then the kynge & the prynces looked one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the trueth: O ye men, are not wemē stronger? Greate is the earth, hye is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compaseth the heauen rounde aboute, and fetcheth his course againe to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the trueth, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth calleth vpon the trueth, the heauen prayseth it, all workes shake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, wemen are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vnrighteous, yee all their workes are vnrighteous, and there is no trueth in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. ^aAs for y trueth, it endureth, and is alwaye stronge: it lyueth, and cōquereth for euermore worlde without ende.

The trueth accepteth no personnes, it putteth no difference betwixte rych or poore, betwixte y mightie or symple, but doth right vnto euery mā, whether they be euel or good, & all men are louyngly dealt withall in the workes of it. In the iudgment of it there is no vnrighteous thinge, but strength, kingdome & power and maiesty for euermore. Blessed be the God of trueth.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all y people cried & sayde: Greate is the trueth, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge vnto him: Axe what thou wilt, more then is appointed in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy companyons: thou shalt sytt nexte me, and be my kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge: Remembre thy promyse and vowe, which thou hast vowed and promysed (in the daye whan thou camest to the kyngdome) to buylde vp Ierusalem, and to sende againe all the vessels and Iewels, that were taken awaye out of Ierusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne: And thy minde was to buylde vp the temple, which the Edomites brēt, whan Ierusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is y maiesty, which, I desyre & axe of the: that thou perfourme the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth hast made vnto the kynge of heauen.

Then Darius the kynge stode vp, and kyssed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all y lordes and nobles, y they shulde conueye him forth, & all them y wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all y shreues y were in Celosyria & Phenices, & vnto Libanus, y they shulde harle cedre trees from Libanus vnto Ierusalem, to buylde y cite withall. Morouer he wrote vnto all y Iewes that were gone out of his realme in to Iewry because of the fredome, y no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulde come to their dores: and that all their londe which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomytes shulde geue ouer the cities and vyllagies of the Iewes, which they had taken in: yee & that they shulde yearly geue xx. talētes to y buyldinge of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge of the brent offeringes (as it is commaunded) ten talentes yearly also: And y^e all they which come from Babilon to buylde the cite, shulde haue fre lybertie, they & their children, and all the prestes.

F He wrote the greatnesse also, & commaunded that the holy garment shulde be geuen the, wherin they ministred: and wrote that commaundementes shulde be geuen to the Leuites, vntill the daye, that the house were fynished and Ierusalem buylded vp: and commaunded that all they that watched the cite, shulde haue their porcions and wagies.

He gaue ouer also all the vessell y^e Cyrus had separated from Babilon: & all y^e Cyrus had geuē in cōmaundement, y^e same charged he also, y^e it shulde be done, & sent vnto Ierusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face towarde Ierusalē, & prayed y^e kinge of heauē, & sayde: Of y^e cōmeth victory, of the cōmeth wysdome & clearnesse, & I am thy seruauant. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wysdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of oure fathers.

And so he toke the letters, & wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethrē y^e were at Babilō, & they prayed y^e God of their fathers, y^e he had geuē them refreszshinge & lyberte to go vp, & to buylde Ierusalē & the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes & gladnesse, seuen dayes longe.

Of f prestes f executed f office of f presthode, a were not founde: The sonnes of Obia, f sonnes of Achisos, the sonnes of Addin, which married one of f daughters of Phargeleu, a were named, after him. The writinge of f same kynred was sought in f register of their generacion, but it was not foude: and therefore were they forbyddē to execute f office of f presthode. Vnto these sayde Nehemias and Astharas, f they shulde haue no porcion in f Sanctuary, tyll there rose vp an hie prest, f were well instructe in the playne clearnes a trueth. Of all Israel (besyde seruantes a maydens) there were xliij. M. iij. C. a xl. Now were there of seruantes a maydens, vij. M. iij. C. and xxxvj. Of synginge mē a synginge women there were ij. Their heades also and the rulers in the trybes, when they came to Ierusalem, a wolde buylde a sett vp f tēple of God againe in his place, they gaue (after their abylyte) vnto the tēple, to f treasure a to f seruyce of the Sactuary, xij. M. poundes of golde, v. thousande of syluer, a an hundredth prestes garmētes. And so dwelt the prestes a the Levites, a the people f wente out to Ierusalē a in the cowntre there aboute, the syngers also a the porters, euery one of Israel in his owne lande.

E So whan the seuenth moneth came, and whan the childrē of Israel were euery man^a at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the courte, which was before f east dore. And there stode Iesua the sonne of Iosedec and his brethern f prestes, a Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethern, settinge vp an aluter, to offe brent sacrifices vpon it, as it is written in f lawe of Moses.

There came people also of other cōuntries, and the Heithen out of all londes set vp the aluter in his place, and offred sacrifices a brent offerynges vnto the LORDE in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe.^b ^b Leui. 23. f.

And daylie offred they as acordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offeringes also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. "And all they that vowed offeringes vnto the LORDE, beganne at the new Moone of ^f seuēth moneth to offre vnto God, for the temple of the LORDE was not yet buylded. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpētērs, money, meate & drynke with chearfulness. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue cartes, ^f they shulde cary Cedre trees from Libanus to be ieastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the hauen of Ioppa, acordinge as it was appoynted and ordeyned, by Cyrus kynge of the Persians.

And in the seconde yere they came in to the temple of God at Ierusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel^b the sonne of Salathiel, and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, and their brethren the prestes and Leuites, and all they that were come vnto Ierusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon, & layed the foundation of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yere ^f they were come in to Iewry and Ierusalem. And they appoynted the Leuites (that were aboue xx. yereare olde) vnto the seruyce of the LORDE: so Iesua and his sonnes and his brethren all the Leuites stode together, and performed the lawe & ordinance in the house of the LORDE.

And the prestes stode and had their garments & trompettes, & the Leuites, the sonnes of Asaph had Cymbals, geuyng thanks, and prayes vnto the LORDE, acordinge as Dauid the kynge of Israel had ordeyned.^c And the songe that they dyd synge vnto the LORDE, was after this maner: O synge vnto the LORDE,^d for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Israel endureth for euer. And all the people blew out with trompettes, and sunge with loude voyce, praysyng the LORDE together in the rearinge vp of the house of the LORDE. There came also from amonge the prestes and Leuites the rulers and elders, acordinge to the trybes and kynreds (soch as had sene the house afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many also with trompettes and greate ioye: In so moch, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepyng and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpō the trompettes.

Then came the enemies of the trybes of Iuda and Ben Iamin,^e to knowe what that trōpettyng and noyse of shawmes might be. And they perceaued ^f it was they which were come agayne out of captiuyte, & wolde buylde the temple a new vnto the LORDE God of Israel. So they wente to Zorobabel and Iesua and to the rulers of the villages, & sayde vnto them: Shal we buylde with you also? for we like wyse haue herde youre LORDE, & we walke after the same maner, from the dayes of Aszbazareth the kinge of Assiria, which brought vs hither. Then Zorobabel and Iesua and the rulers of the villages of Israel sayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye shulde buylde the temple of oure God with vs: we oure selues alone wil buylde vnto the LORDE, like as Cyrus^f the kynge of the Persians hath commaūded vs.

But the Heithen in the londe layed them selues against those that were in Iewry, helde vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpō them preuely, stopped soch as brought eny thinge to them, forbad them to buylde, & hyndered those that made the passage, that the buyldinge shulde not be finished: & this continued so longe as kynge Cyrus lyued: & so they put of the buyldinge for the space of two yereare, vntill ^f raigne of kynge Darius.

The vi. Chapter.

NOT with stondinge, in the seconde yere of the raigne of Darius,^e Aggeus & Zachary the sonne of Addo prophecied vpon them in Iewry and Ierusalem, in the name of the God of Israel. Then Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec stode vp,^d and beganne to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, when the prophetes of the LORDE helped them.

At the same tyme came Sysennes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlordes and his companions, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden & commaūded you to buylde the house? to make the rofe and all other thinges agayne? And who are the workemen, that buylde them? Neuer-theles the elders of the Iewes had soch grace of the LORDE, that they wolde not be lett (though they were prouoked therto) but buylded on still, vntill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answer receaued from him. The letter that these men sent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

33 Sysennes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, and the land lordes with their cōpaniōs, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their salutacion vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lorde the kynge, that we came in to the londe of Iewry, ⁊ wente to Ierusalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greate house of God and the tēple, with greate costly fre stone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greate haist with the worke, ⁊ helpe one another, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greate diligence ⁊ worshipe is it made. Then axed we the elders, who had cōmaunded them to make vp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to ⁊ intēt that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of those ⁊ were ⁊ rulers of the worke. So they gaue vs this answer: we are the seruantes of the LORDE, which made heauen and earth: ⁊ as for this house,^a it hath bene buylded and set vp afore tyme by the greate and mightie kynge of Israel. But whan oure fathers prouoked God vnto wrath, ⁊ synned agaynst the God of Israel, ^bhe gaue thē ouer in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe ⁊ house and brēt it, and caried awaye the people presoners vnto Babilon.

C Neuertheles, in the first yere that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon, Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buylde vp this house agayne: and all the ornamentes that Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Ierusalem vnto Babilon, and appropriated vnto his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and delyuered them to Zorobabel ⁊ to Salmanasar the vndershreue, commaundynge them, ⁊ they shulde brynge those same ornamentes agayne to Ierusalē in to ⁊ tēple, ⁊ to begynne from ⁊ tyme forth, to buylde the tēple agayne in his owne place. Thē Salmanasar layed the foundation of ⁊ LORDES house at Ierusalem, and euer sence haue they buylded, ⁊ yet is it not ended. And therefore (O kynge) yf thou thinkest it good, let it be sought in the Lybraries ⁊ rolles of kynge Cyrus: yf it be founde thē, that it is done with the counsell and cōsent of kynge Cyrus, and yf oure lorde ⁊ kynge be so mynded, let him wryte vnto vs therof.

Then cōmaunded kynge Darius, to seke in the Lybraries:^c and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde soch a wrytinge: In the first yere of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kynge Cyrus cōmaunded, ⁊ the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem shulde be buylded agayne (⁊ odoures to be made there contynually vnto the LORDE) whose heyth shalbe ten cubites, ⁊ bredth lx. cubites ⁊ iij. square with thre hewen stones, with a losfe of tymbre of the same countre, yee with a new loft, ⁊ the expenses therof to be geuen of ⁊ house of kynge Cyrus. And the ornamentes of golde ⁊ syluer, ⁊ Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at Ierusalē, where they were afore. Sysennes also the vndershreue in Syria and Phenices, ⁊ prynces and their companions, and the other ⁊ be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

I Cyrus haue cōmaunded also, that they shal buylde the house of the LORDE whole vp: ⁊ haue ordeyned them, to helpe those ⁊ be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fynished: ⁊ out of the tribute and taxinge that is yearly rayسد vp in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the same to be delyuered vnto Zorobabel the officer: that he therewithall maye ordeyne oxen, rammes, lambes, ⁊ corne, salt, wyne and oyle, and that contynually euery yere: after the expences which the prestes that be at Ierusalem, shew to be made daylie:^d this shalbe geuen vnto them without delaye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hiest God, for the kynge and for his seruantes, and to praye for their lyues. Let it be proclaimed also on euery syde, that who so euer breaketh or despyseth this cōmaundement of ⁊ kynge, shalbe hanged vpon a galow (made of his owne good) ⁊ all his goodes shalbe seasoned vnto f kynge. The LORDE therfore (whose name is there called vpon) rote out and destroye all f kynges and people, that vndertake by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vncureously with the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem. I Darius the kinge haue ordeyned, that these thinges shalbe done with all diligence.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN Sysennes f vndershreue in Celosyria and Phenices, and the other landlordes with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kynge Darius had ordened, were diligent in the holy workes, a were fellow helpers with the olde rulers of the Iewes. And so the worke of the Sanctuary wente forth and prospered, whan Aggeus and Zachary prophecied. And they performed all thinges thorow the commaundement of the LORDE God of Israel, and after the deuyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerses kynges of Persia.

B And thus was oure house fynished, vnto the xxij. daye of the moneth Addar in f vij. yeare of kynge Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes a the Leuites, a the other that were come out of captiuyte, a soch as were ioyned vnto them, dyd acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses. And in the dedicacion of the temple they offred an hundredth oxen, an C. rammes, iij. C. lambes, a xij. goates for the synnes of all the people of Israel, after f nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also a the Leuites stode arayed in the prestly garmetes, after f trybes, ouer all f workes of the LORDE God of Israel, acordinge to f boke of Moses, and the porters by all the dores.

C And the children of Israel (with those f were come out of captiuyte) helde the Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, whan the prestes and the Leuites were sanctified. They that came out of captiuyte, were not all sanctified together: but the Leuites were all sanctified together. And so all they that came out of captiuyte, kylled the easter lambe, for their brethre, for the prestes a for them selues. And the childre of Israel f came out of captiuyte, a escaped fro all f abominacions of the Heithē, sought the LORDE, and kepte the feast of vnleuened bred vij. daies longe, eatinge a drynkynge a were mery before the LORDE: f the LORDE had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Assiria, a comforted their handes to the workes of f LORDE God of Israel.

The viij. Chapter.

AND after him, whan Artaxerses the kynge of f Persiās reigned, there wete vnto him Eszdras the sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Helchia, f sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoc, f sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amarias, f sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Boccus, f sonne of Abisu, f sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, f sonne of Aaron f first prest. This Eszdras wete vp from Babilon (for he had good vnderstandinge in f lawe of Moses, f was geuē of the LORDE God of Israel, to be taught a done in dede.) And f kinge fauoured him, a dyd him greate worshippe and honoure, after all his desyres. There wente vp with him also certayne of f children of Israel, of the prestes, of f Leuites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of f temple at Ierusalem.

In the vij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerses, in the v. moneth, f is in the vij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth, a came the hye waye to Ierusalē after his commaundement, like as the LORDE had prospered their iourney. For in these Eszdras gat greate instrucciō, f he shulde leaue none of f thinges behynde, which were in f lawe a cōmaundementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteousnes a iudgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerses, a delyuered f wrytinges (f were come fro Artaxerses the kynge) to Eszdras the prest a reder of the lawe of the LORDE: And this is f cōpye of f letter: Kynge Artaxerses sendeth his gretinge vnto Eszdras the prest a reder of the lawe of f LORDE: Of frendshipe a good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be eny of the Iewes, of f prestes a Leuites in my realme, which desyeth a is contēt to go with the vnto Ierusalē, f he maye do it. Therefore yf eny be mynded to beare the cōpany, let thē come together, a go with the (like as I am contēt a my vij. frendes my cōcēlars:) to se what they do at Ierusalē a in Iewry, a kepe f thinges acord-inge as thou hast in þy lawe of the LORDE:

 B 3 to bringe the giftes vnto God the LORDE of Israel, þy I & my frendes haue promysed to Ierusalē, & all the syluer & golde þy is in þy countre of Babilon, vnto þy LORDE to Ierusale, with the thinge þy is geuē for the people in the LORDES temple at Ierusalem: Yee that the same syluer & golde maye be gathered, and oxen, rammes, shepe & goates and other that belōge to these thinges: and that they maye offer sacrifices vnto the LORDE, vpon the aluter of their LORDE, whiche is at Ierusalem.

And what so euer thou & thy brethrē wyl do with the syluer & golde, þy do after þy mynde, & after the cōmaundement of the LORDE thy God: & like wyse with all the holy vessels, þy are geuē the for the seruyce of the house of the LORDE thy God: & other thinges what soeuer is necessary for the to the worke of the temple, þy shalbe geuē the of the kynges treasure: & loke what thou with thy brethrē wilt do with the golde and syluer, that do after þy wil of the LORDE. And I kynge Artaxerses haue commaunded the keepers of þy treasures in Syria and Phenices, that what soeuer Eszdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORDE doth wryte, it shalbe geuen him: tyll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lyke maner: Of corne also an C. measures, and tyll an hūdreth vessels of wyne, and other plenteous thinges without nombre.
 Let all thinges be done after the lawe of þy hiest God, that the wrath of God aryse not in the realme of the kynge and of his sonnes.
 I commaunde you also, that ye requyre no taxinge ner tribute of the prestes, Leuites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, ner of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge against them. As for the (O Eszdras) set thou iudges and arbiters in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wysdome of God: and lerne all soch as are ignoraunt in the lawe of God thy LORDE, and let all them that offende agaynst the lawe, be punyshed: whether it be with death, with payne, to be condemned in money, or to be banyshed.

Then sayde Eszdras þy wryter: Blessed be þy God of oure fathers, that hath geuen so good a mynde and wyll in to the hert of the kynge, to magnifie his house þy is at Ieru-salem, and hath made me to be accepted in the sight of þy kynge, of his counsell, of his frēdes and of his nobles. And so I was sted-fast in my mynde, acordinge as the LORDE my God helped me, and I chose out men of Israel, to go vp with me. And these are the heades* (after their kynreds & houses of their fathers) that wente vp with me from Babilon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerses: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonius. Of þy sonnes of Siemarith, Amenus. Of the sonnes of Dauid, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia. C

Of the sonnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundreth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captayne of Moabilon, Zaraei, and with him ij. C. and
 l. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Iechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gotholie, and lxx.
 with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Iob, Abdias Ieheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Bania, Sali-moth the sonne of Iosaphia, and with him an
 C. and lx. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij.
 men. Of the sonnes of Esead, Iohannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonicā those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam þy sonne of Gebel and Semeias, & with him lxx.
 men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre dayes, and there I mustered them.

*As for the sonnes of the prestes and Leuites, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar, & Eccelom, and Masman, & Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Ioribimathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū
 (these were the leders and men of experiēce)
 & I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Loddeus, which was by the place of the treasury, & commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Loddeus and to his brethren & to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the prestes office in the house of the LORDE oure God. And with the mightie hāde of oure LORDE God, they brought vnto vs mē of good experience, from amōge the sonnes of Moolius, the sonne of Leui, þy sonne of Israel, Sebebeiam & the sonnes & his brethrē Aszbin

¶ Anim, of whom there were xviij. From amonge the children of the sonnes of Cananeus, ¶ their sonnes were xx. men. And of them ¶ served in the temple, whom Dauid had ordeyned, and the pryncipall men that ministred for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wrytinge.

Then commaunded I a fastynge vnto ¶ yonge men before the LORDE,^a ¶ I might desyre of him a prosperous iourney ¶ a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for oure children and for the catell, because of the layenges awayte: ¶ I durst not require of the kynge men of horse ¶ of fote, to conueye vs safely agaynst oure enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kynge, that ¶ power of the LORDE oure God shulde be with them, that seke him with their whole hert. And therefore we besought God oure LORDE earnestly because of these thinges, and he was mercifull vnto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge ¶ rulers of the people, ¶ from ¶ prestes of ¶ temple xij. men, ¶ Sebeia ¶ Asania, ¶ ten men of their brethren with them. And I weied thē the golde ¶ the syluer ¶ all the prestly ornāmetes of the house of oure God, which the kynge ¶ his coucell, ¶ his prynces ¶ whole Israel had geuē. And whan I had weyed it, I gaue thē an Cl. talētes in syluer, an C. talentes of syluer vessell, an C. talentes of golde, ¶ of goldē vessell seuē tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, ¶ saide vnto thē: ye also are holy vnto the LORDE, ¶ the vessels are holy, ¶ the golde ¶ the syluer is promised vnto the LORDE the God of oure fathers. Be diligent now ¶ kepe it, vntill the tyme ¶ ye delyuer it to the rulers of the people, to ¶ prestes, to the Leuites ¶ to ¶ pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in Ierusalem, ¶ in the chambre of the house of oure God.

So ¶ prestes ¶ the Leuites which receaued of me the golde,^b the syluer ¶ the vessell, brought it to Ierusalē in to the tēple of the LORDE. And from Thia we brake vp the xij. daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Ierusalē. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weyed golde ¶ syluer was delyuered in ¶ house of the LORDE the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the sonne of Ior the prest, ¶ with him was Eleazar ¶ sonne of Phineas, and with thē were Iosabbus ¶ sonne of Iesnet, Medias ¶ the sonne of Banus, ¶ certayne of the Leuites to the nombre ¶ to the waight: ¶ the waight of them was writtē vp the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captiuyte, they offred sacrifice vnto the LORDE the God of Israel: euē xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxxvj. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goates for synne, xij. kyne for a thank-offeringe, all to the sacrifice of the LORDE. And ¶ kinges cōmission delyuered they vnto ¶ stewards and debytes of the kynge, and to the vndersheues in Celosyria and Phenices.

Now whan these thinges were done, the rulers came vnto me, and sayde: The generacion of Israel, the prynces, ¶ prestes and Leuites, the straunge people and indwellers of the londe, haue not put awaye their vnclennesse, from the Cananites, Hethites, Pheresites, from the Moabites, Egipcians ¶ Edomites. For both they and their sonnes haue mingled them selues with the daughters of them, ¶ the holy sede is mixte with the outlandish Heithen, ¶ sens the begynnyng of their raigne haue the rulers and heades bene partakers of their wickednesse.

As soone as I had herde these thinges, immediatly I rent my holy garmentes, and pulled out ¶ hayre of my heade ¶ my beard, ¶ sat me downe soroufull ¶ heuy. So all they that were moued thorow the worde of the God of Israel, came vnto me: and I sat still full of heuines vntill the euenynge sacrifice. Then stode I vp frō fastinge, hauynge rent clothes ¶ the holy garmēt, kneled downe vpon my knees, helde out my hādes vnto ¶ LORDE, ¶ sayde: O LORDE, I am confounded ¶ ashamed before thy face, for oure synnes are become many vpon oure heades, ¶ oure wickednesse are exalted vnto the heauē: for sens ¶ tyme of oure fathers we are in greate sinne vnto this daye. And for the synnes of vs ¶ oure fathers, we with oure brethren ¶ with oure prestes haue bene deliuered vnto the kinges of the earth, in to the swerde, ¶ in to captiuite, ¶ became a spoyle with confucion ¶ shame vnto this daie. And now O LORDE God, how greate is the mercy ¶ we haue gottē of the? in ¶ thou hast left vs a rote ¶ a name in the place of thy Sanctuary, to discouer oure light in the house of $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ LORDE oure God, τ geuē vs meate at all tymes of our ministracion. And whan we were in captiuyte, we were not forsaken of the LORDE oure God: but he made the kynges of Persia gracious τ fauourable vnto vs, so $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ they gaue vs vytayles τ meate, yee τ leue to buylde vp the tēple of oure LORDE God agayne, to repayre the waisted places of Sion, and to dwell in Iewry τ Ierusalem. And now O LORDE, what shall we saye, hauynge all these thinges in possession? For we haue broken thy cōmaundementes, which thou gauest vnto vs by the handes of thy seruantes the prophetes, sayenge: The londe $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ ye go vnto, τ $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ is geuen you for an heretage to haue in possession, is defyled with the vncleennes τ fylthynges of the Heithen, τ with their abhominacion haue they poluted it alltogether. Therefore shal ye not ioyn^e youre daughters vnto their sonnes, ner mary youre sonnes vnto their daughters: Morouer, ye shall neuer seke to make peace with them, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ ye maye increase τ eate the best in the lande, τ $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ ye maye deuyde $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ inheritaunce of the lande vnto youre children for euermore. As for the thinge $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ now happeneth vnto vs, it commeth all for oure wicked workes and greate synnes. yet hast thou geuen vs soch a rote, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ we are come againe in to oure owne londe: and we are so wicked, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ we haue brokē thy statutes τ cōmaundementes agayne, τ mengled oure selues with the vncleenes of the outlandish Heithen. O LORDE, art thou angrie with vs? wilt thou rote vs cleane out? $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ oure rote τ name remayne nomore? O LORDE God of Israel, thou art true, for oure rote endureth yet vnto this present daye. And beholde, now are we before $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ in oure synnes, now can we not stonde before the in them.

And whan Esdras with this prayer had knowleged the synne, wepinge,^b τ lyēge flatt vpon the grounde before the tēple, there gathered vnto him from Ierusalem a greate multitude of men τ women, of yonge men τ maydens, for there was a very greate wepinge and mournynge in the cōgregacion. So whan Iechonias the sonne Ieheli one of the children of Israel cried, he sayde vnto Esdras: we haue synned agaynst the LORDE, because we haue married outlandish women of the Heithē. Now art thou ouer all Israel.

We wil sweare an ooth therfore vnto $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ LORDE, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ we shal put awaye all oure wyues which we haue takē of the Heithē, with their childrē: like as it is appoynted the by oure fore elders. Stonde vp then, open thou it and declare it playnely vnto vs acordige to the lawe of $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ LORDE: for the matter belongeth vnto $\text{\textcircled{f}}$, τ we wyll helpe the, quyte thy self manly. So Esdras arose, and toke an ooth of the rulers of $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ prestes τ of $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ Leuites τ of all Israel, to do after these thinges, and they sware.

The ix. Chapter.

THEN Esdras stode vp from the courte of the tēple without, τ wente in to the chāber of Ionathas the sonne of Nasabus, τ remayned there, τ ate no meate ner dronke drynke, for the multitude of the wickednes of the people. And there was made a proclamacion in all Iewry τ at Ierusalem, for all soch as were gathered at Ierusalē out of captiuyte, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ who so euer came not to Ierusalē within two or thre dayes (acordinge to the iudgment of the olde lordes of counsell) his goodes shulde be taken from him, τ he excluded from the cōgregacion of the captiuyte. And in thre dayes were all they of the trybe of Iuda τ Ben lamin gathered together at Ierusalem, the xx. daye of $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ ix. moneth. And $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ whole multitude sat tēblyng in the courte of the temple, for it was wynter. So Esdras arose vp, τ sayde vnto them: ye haue done vnrighteously, in that ye haue taken outlandish wyues to mariage, τ so to increase the synnes of Israel. And now knowlege the same, τ geue prayse vnto the LORDE God of oure fathers, τ perfourme his wil, departinge from the Heithen of the londe, τ from the outlandish wyues. Then cried the whole multitude with loude voyce, τ sayde: like as thou hast spokē, so wil we do: But for so much as the people are many, τ $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ wynter here, we maie not stōde without $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ house: agayne, this worke is not a thinge, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ can be fynished in a daye or two, for we be many $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ haue synned in these thinges: Ordene therfore, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ the rulers of the multitude and all they that dwell with vs, and as many as haue outlandish wyues, the prestes also and iudges of euery place, maye stonde in the tyme appoynted, tyll they lowse vp the wrath of the LORDE in this busynes.

Then Ionathas the sonne of Ezeli, ⁊ Ozias and Thecam receaued ⁊ charge of this matter, ⁊ Bozoramus, ⁊ Leius and Sabatheus helped thē therto. After this, all they stode vp ⁊ were come out of captiuyte. And Eszdras the prest chose vnto him the pryncipall men from amonge the fathers accordinge to their names, ⁊ in the new moone of the tenth moneth they sat together, to examen this matter. And so the matter was a determyng (concernynge the men ⁊ had outlandish wyues) vntill the new moone of the first moneth. And of the prestes ⁊ had mixte thē selues with outlandish wyues, there were founde:^c Of the sonnes of Iesu the sonne of Iosedec ⁊ his brethren, Mazeas, Eleazer, Ioribus ⁊ Ioadeus, which offred them selues to put awaye their wyues, ⁊ to offre a ramme for their ignoraunce. And of the sonnes of Gemmeri, Masseas, ⁊ Esses ⁊ Ieelech Azarias. Of ⁊ sonnes of Fosera, Limosias, Hismaen, Nathanea, Iussio, Ieddus, ⁊ Talsas. And of the Leuites, Iosabodus, Semeis and Colnis, Caletas, Facteas, Colnas and Elionas. Of the syngers of the Sāctuary, Eliarib, Zackarus. Of the porters, Sallumus ⁊ Tolbanes. And of Israel, of the children of Foro, Osi ⁊ Remias, ⁊ Geddias, ⁊ Melchias, Michelus, Eleazarus, Iēmebias ⁊ Bannas. And of the childre of Iolaman, Chanias, Zachary, Ietzrelus, Ioddus, Erimoth ⁊ Elias. And of ⁊ sonnes of Iathoim, Eliadas, Liasamus, ⁊ Zochias, Larimoth, Sabis ⁊ Tebedias. And of ⁊ sonnes of Zebeas, Iohānes Amanias, Zabdias, ⁊ Emeus. And of the sonnes of Bannus, Olammus, Maluchus, Ieddus, Iasub, Asabus ⁊ Ierimoth. And of ⁊ sonnes of Addin, Naatus ⁊ Moosias ⁊ Caleus ⁊ Raanas Maasuas, Mathathias, Besel, Bannus, and Manasses.

And of the sonnes of Naue, Nones, Afeas, Melchias, Sameas, Simō, Ben Iamin, Malchus ⁊ Marras. And of the sonnes of Asom, Carianeus, Mathathias, Bannus, Eliphalach, Manasses, Semei. Of the sonnes of Bannus, Jeremy, Moodias, Abramas, Iohel, Baneas, Peliaas, Iona, Marimoth, Eliasib, Mathaneus, Eliasis, Orizas, Dielus, Semedius, Zambris ⁊ Ioseph. Of ⁊ sonnes of Nobeus, Idelus, Mathathias, Sabadus, Zecheda, Sedmi, Iesseus, ⁊ Baneas. All these had takē outlādish wemē to mariage, ⁊ they put thē awaye with their childre.

The prestes ⁊ Leuites, ⁊ all they ⁊ were of Israel, dwelt at Ierusalem ⁊ thorow out all ⁊ londe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth, ⁊ the childre of Israel were in their dwellynge. And ⁊ whole multitude came together vpon ⁊ floore at ⁊ east syde^d of the holy porte of ⁊ tēple. And they spake vnto Eszdras ⁊ hie prest ⁊ reder, ⁊ he wolde brynge ⁊ lawe of Moses, which was geuē of ⁊ LORDE God of Israel. So Eszdras the hie prest brought the lawe vnto the whole multitude, to man and woman, ⁊ to all prestes, ⁊ they might heare the lawe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth. And he red in ⁊ floore ⁊ is before ⁊ holy porte of ⁊ tēple, from the mornynge early vntill the euenynge, before men ⁊ wemen. And they applied their mynde all vnto the lawe.

And Eszdras the prest ⁊ reder of ⁊ lawe stode vp vpon a scaffolde of wodd, which was made therfore: ⁊ vpon his right hande there stode by him Mathathias, Samus, Ananias, Azarias, Vrias, Ozechias, ⁊ Balsamus: Vpon his lefte hāde stode Faldeus, Misael, Malachias, Abuschas, Sabus, Nabadias, ⁊ Zachary. Then toke Eszdras ⁊ boke before the whole multitude, for he was ⁊ pryncipall and had in most honoure of thē all. And whā he had red out ⁊ lawe, they stode all straight vp vpon their fete. So Eszdras prayed the LORDE the most hye God, the Allmightie God of hoostes. And all ⁊ people answered, Amen: ⁊ helde vp their hādes, fell downe flat vpon the earth, ⁊ prayed ⁊ LORDE: Iesus, Beneas, Sarebias, Iaddimus, Accubus, Sabbatheus, Calithes, Azarias, Ioradus, Ananias, ⁊ Philius the Leuites which taught the lawe of the LORDE, ⁊ red the lawe of the LORDE in the cōgregacion, ⁊ euery man sett those before ⁊ vnderstode the lawe. Then spake Atharathes vnto Eszdras the hye prest ⁊ reder, ⁊ to the Leuites ⁊ taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: ⁊ all they ⁊ had herde the lawe, wepte. So Eszdras sayde:^e Departe youre waye then, ⁊ eate the best, ⁊ drynke the sweetest, ⁊ sende giftes vnto them ⁊ haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye sory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, & sent rewardes vnto the y had nothinge, y they also might eate with gladnesse: for they were exceedingly reioysed, thorow the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Ierusalem to holde the feast, accordinge to the couenaunt of y^e LORDE God of Israel.

The first Chapter.

A THE seconde boke of ꝑ prophet Eszdras:^a (ꝑ sonne of Saraia, the sonne of Azarias, ꝑ sonne of Helchia, ꝑ sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoc, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarahias, the sonne of Vzī, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui) which was presoner in the lande of the Meedes, in the raigne of Artaxerses kynge of Persia.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, saynge: ^aGo thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their children their wickednesses, which they haue done against me, that they maye tell their childers childrē the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto straunge goddes. Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egipte, from the house of bondage? But they haue prouoked me vnto wrath, & despyed my counceils. Pull thou out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe.

It is a people without lernynge & nourture. How longe shal I forbearē them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sakes:^c Pharaō with his seruātes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne:^d All ꝑ nacions haue I destroyed and roted out before them, and in ꝑ east haue I brought two landes and people to naught, euen Tyre & Sydon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speake thou therfore vnto them, saynge: Thus sayeth the LORDE:^e I led you thorow the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begynnyng. I gaue you Moses to be youre capayne, and Aaron to be the prest:^f I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greate wōders haue I done amōge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I ^ggaue you quales to eate, and tentes for youre sucoure: Neuertheles ye murmured, and ascrybed not ꝑ victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yee this same daie do ye yet murmoure. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? Whan ye were hongrie in the ^hwildernes, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wildernes, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue serued ꝑ Egipcians, then to dye in this wilderness. Thē had I pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gaue you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not ⁱI hew ꝑ hardstone, & caused water ynough to flowe thereout? For the heate, I couered you with ꝑ leaues of the trees. A good pleasaunt fatt londe gaue I you: I cast out the Cananites, the Pheresites and Philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, saieth the LORDE?

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: ^jWhan ye were in the wildernes, in the water of the Amorites, beyng a thyrst & blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for youre blasphemies, but cast a tre in to ꝑ water, and made the ryuer swete. What shall I do vnto the, O Iacob? Thou Iuda woldest not obeye me. ^kI wil turne me to another people, & vnto those will I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsakē me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, I shal haue no mercy vpon you. ^lWhan ye call vpō me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue defyled youre hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to commytt manslaughter. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: ^mhaue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a norse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I shulde be youre owne father? ⁿI gathered you together, as an henne gathereth hir chensens vnder hir wynges. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. ^oWhan ye offre vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for your solempne feast dayes, youre new moones and youre circumcisions haue I forsaken. I sent vnto you my seruantes the prophetes,

F Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: youre house must be desolate. I wil cast you out as the wynde doth y^e strawe: youre children shal not be frutefull, for they haue despysed my commaundement, and done y^e thinge y^e is euell before me. The ii. Chapter.

A THUS sayeth the LORDE: I brought this people out of bondage, I gaue thē my cōmaundementes by my seruauētes y^e prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despysed my cōuēls. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow ⁊ forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heuynes haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE youre God, and done y^e thinge that is euell before him. But what shall I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsakē: go youre waye (o my children) and axe mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these childrē, which wolde not kepe my couenaunt: y^e thou brynge them to cōfucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be scatred abrode amonge the Heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorne of my couenaunt.

Woe be vnto the Assur, thou that hydest the vnrighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remembre what I dyd vnto Sodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and aszshes. Euen so also wyll I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE vnto Esdras: Tell my people, y^e I wil geue them the kyngdome of Ierusalem, which I wolde haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the euerlastyng tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oyntment: they shal nether labourer ner be weery. Go ye youre waye, ⁊ ye shal receaue it. Praye for youre selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therin. Now is the kingdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heauē and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth y^e LORDE. Mother embrace thy children, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

C And those that be deed wyll I rayse vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of y^e graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruauētes Esay and Ieremy, after whose counsell I haue sanctified ⁊ prepared for the, xij. trees with dyuerse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylck and hony, ⁊ seuen mountaynes, wherpo^r there growe roses and lilies, wherin I wyl fyll my children with ioye. Execute iustice for the wyddowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse: geue to y^e poore: defende the cōfortlesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sick: laugh not a lame man to scorne: defende the crepell, and let the blinde come in to y^e sight of my clearnes. Kepe the olde ⁊ yonge within thy walles: ⁴where so euer thou fyndest the deed, tokē them, and burye them, and I shal geue the the first place in my resurreccion. Holde D styll (O my people) and take thy rest, for thy quyetes is come. Fede thy children O thou good norsse, stablish their fete: As for the seruauētes whom I haue geuen the, there shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl seke the from thy nombre, vexe not thy self.

For whan the daye of trouble and heuynes commeth, other shal wepe and be soroufull, but thou shalt be mery and plenteous. The Heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothinge agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal couer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre euerlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childrē, for I wyl delyuer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childrē, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Allmightie.

Enbrace thy childrē, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Eszdras receaued a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Israel. But whan I came vnto thē, they set me at naught, and despyed the commaundement of ꝑ LORDE. And therefore I saye vnto you O ye Heithen, that heare and vnderstonde: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you euerlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Be ready to the rewarde of the kyngdome, for the euerlastinge light shall shyne vpon you for euermore. Fle the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulnes of youre glory. I testifie my sauioure openly: O receaue the gift ꝑ is geuen you, and be glad, geuyng thanks vnto him, that hath called you to the heauenly kyngdome. Aryse vp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmētes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shutt vp thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longest for, is fulfilled: beseke the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnyng, maye be halowed.

I Eszdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a greate people, whom I coude not nombre, ꝛ they all prayed the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuyng. And in the myddest of thē there was a yonge mā of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon euery one of their heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marueled at greatly. So I axed ꝑ angell, ꝛ sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothinge and put on the immortall, and haue testified ꝛ knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what yonge personne is it, that crowneth them, ꝛ geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is ꝑ sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commend them, that stode so stify for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thinges and how greate wonders of the LORDE thy God, thou hast sene.

The iiii. Chapter.

IN the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, I was at Babilon ꝛ laye troubled vpō my bed, ꝛ my thoughtes came vp ouer my hert: for I sawe ꝑ desolacion of Sion, ꝛ the plenteous wealth of them ꝑ dwelt at Babilon: ꝛ my sprete was sore moued, so that I begāne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hiest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnyng, whan thou plant-edst ꝑ earth, (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundement vnto ꝑ people, and a body vnto Adam, ^a which was a creature of thy handes, and hast brethed in him the breth of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradyse, which gardē of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaudemēt to loue ꝑ waye, which he transgressed, ꝛ immediatly thou appoynt-edest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nacions, trybes, people, ꝛ kynredes out of nombre. ^c And euery people walked after their owne wil, and did nyce thinges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despyed them.

^d But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Neuertheles one of them thou leftest: namely, Noe with his housholde, of whom come all righteous mē. And it happened that, when they ſ dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greате people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now whan they all lyued so wickedly before the, " thou didest chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abram. Him thou louedest, and vnto him only thou shewdest thy wyll, and maydest an euerlastinge couenaunt with him, promisinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. ^b And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Iacob and Esau. As for Iacob thou didest chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Iacob became a greате multitude.

And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egipte, thou broughtest thē vp to the mount Sion, 'bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouyng the grounde, makyng the depthes to shake, and troublinge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the sede of Iacob, and diligence vnto the generaciō of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from thē that wicked hert, that thy lawe might bryng forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was overcome, and so be all they ſ are borne of him. ^a Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were brought to an ende. ^c Then didest thou raysse the vp a seruauant called Dauid, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offere vp incense and sacrifice vnto the therin. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabitants of the cite forsoke the, and in all thinges dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite ouer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, ſ they shal therefore haue the domynion of Sion? For whan I came there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greате wickednesse, that it coude not be nōbred: yee whan my soule sawe so many euell doers (in ſ xxx. yeare) my hert fayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynes, and sparest ſ wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserued thine enemies, & this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceaue how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, ſ knoweth the, sauynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued ſ couenautes, as Iacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their labour hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the Heithē, & I se, ſ they be rych & wealthy, & thynke not vpon ſ commaundementes. Weye thou therefore oure wickednesse now in ſ balauce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be no where founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, ſ hath not synned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and Heithen.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND the angell that was sent vnto me ^a (whose name was Vriel) gaue me answer, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē to moch vpon it in this worlde, and thou thinkest to comprehend the waye of the Hyest. Then sayde I: yee my lorde. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the: wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desyrest to se, and I shal shewe the from whēce the wicked hert commeth. And I sayde: tell on my LORDE. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: Yf I shulde axe the, how depe dwellings are in the see? Or how greате water springes are vpon \hat{y} firmamēt? Or how greate water sprynges are in the begynnynge of the depe? Or which are the outgoinges of Paradise? Peraduētūre thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wente downe yet in to \hat{y} depe ner hell, nether dyd I euer clymme vp in to heauen. Neuertheles now haue I axed the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thorow thou hast trauayled, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answer of them.

33 He sayde morouer vnto me: Thine owne thinges, and such as are growne vp with \hat{y} , canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to cōprehende the waye of the Hyest, and now outwardly in the corrupte worlde, to vnderstōde the corrupcion \hat{y} is eydent in my sight? Thē sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, thē that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffre, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wēte in a wod, and the trees toke soch a deuyce and sayde: "Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddess.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deuyce, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wodd, that we maye make our londē the wyder. The thought and deuyce of the wodd was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wod: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewyse to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stopped them.

34 Yf thou were iudge now betwyxte these two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue deuysed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me τ sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgment, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see to his floudes: ^beuen so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstōde nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstōde the thinges, that are aboue the hea-uens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseke the (O LORDE) let me haue vnderstōdinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thinges, but of soch as we daylie medle withall: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the Heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loued) is geuen ouer, to be punyshed of vngodly naciōs: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wrytten couenantes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the worlde as the greshopers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouer vs? Of these thinges haue I axed question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The D more thou searchest, the more thou shalt maruel, for the worlde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehend the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, ^cfor this worlde is full of vnrighteousnes and weaknes.

But as concernynge the thinges wherof thou axest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruccion therof is not yet come. Yf the euell now that is sowne, be not turned vpsyde downe, and yf the place where \hat{y} euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come \hat{y} is sowne with \hat{y} good. For the corne of euell sede hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnyng, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme? and how moch shal he yet brynge forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

35 Pondere now by thyself, whā \hat{y} corne of euell sede is cutt downe, how greate a barne shal it fyl? I answered and sayde: How and whā shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are oure yeaeres few τ euell? And he answered me, sayēge: Haist not thou to moch vpon the Hyest, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in vayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not \hat{y} soules also of the righteous axe question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan commeth the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpō this Ieremiel the archangel gaue them answer, and sayde: ^dEuē whan the nombre of the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the worlde in the balaunce: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfilled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peraduenture it is not, that the barne of the righteous shall not be fylled, because of the synnes of the that dwell vpon earth.

f So he answered me, and sayde: Go y waye to a woman with childe, and axe her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir childesbed maye kepe y byrth eny lōger within her. Thē sayde I: No LORDE, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secrete places of soules are like y preuy chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauallyeth, maketh haist, whan the tyme and necessite of the byrth is at hande: Euē so doth she haist to deluyer it that is commytted vnto her. Loke what thou desyrest to se, it shalbe shewed the from the begynnynge. Then answered I and sayde: Yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therefore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come thē is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

6 And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpō y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, and beholde, an whote burnynge ouē wente ouer before me: and it happened y whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this there wete ouer before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne with a storme: and whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remayned still. Then sayde he vnto me: like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceedeth the smoke, euen so y measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: May I lyue (thynkest thou) vntyll that tyme? Or what shall happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokēs wherof thou axest me, I maye tell the of thē in a parte: but as touchinge *y life, I may not shewe the, for I am not sent therefore.

* Some rede, my life.

The v. Chapter.

NEUERTHELESSE, as concernynge the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shalbe takē in a greate nombre, and the waye of the trueth shalbe hyd, and the lōde shalbe baren from faith: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge ago. And the lōde that thou seist now to haue rule, shalt thou shortly se waist. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after y thirde trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moone thre tymes in the daye, and bloude shal droppe out of wodd, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shalbe vnquyete: and euen he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the foules shal flyt, and the Sodomitish see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce therof.

13 There shalbe a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be oft sent agayne, and the wyld beasts shal go their waye, and menstruous women shal beare monsters, and salt waters shalbe founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyt and vnderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secrete places, and shalbe sought of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnrighteousnes and voluptuousnes haue the vpperhande vpon earth. One lande also shal axe another, and saye: Is righteousnes gone thorow the? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge optayne: they shal laboure, but their wayes shall not prosper.

To shewe the soch tokens I haue leue, and yf thou wylt praye agayne, and wepe as now, and fast seuen dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater thinges. Then I awaked, and a fearfulness wente thorow all my body, and my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I almost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, helde me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

C And in the seconde night it happened, y Salathiel the captayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou bene?

and why is thy countenance so heuy? Knowest thou not, ŷ Israel is commytted vnto the, in the londe of their captyuete? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherde that leaueth his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: Go thy waye fro me, and come not nye me: ¶ he herde it, and as I sayde, so wete he his waye fro me. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepyng, like as Vriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that ŷ thoughtes of my hert were very greuous vnto me agayne, ¶ my soule receaued ŷ sprete of vnderstandynge, ¶ I begane to talke with the most hiest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wod of ŷ earth ¶ of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen ŷ one onely vynyarde: and of all londes of the whole worlde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the grounde thou hast chosen the one lylie: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer: and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all ŷ foules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the catell ŷ are made, thou hast prouyded ŷ one shepe: ¶ amoge all ŷ multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou louedest, thou gauest a lawe, ŷ is proued of all.

¶ And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vnto many? ¶ ¶ vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scatred ŷ one onely people amonge many? which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde ŷ promises, ¶ neuer beleued ŷ couenautes? And though thou werest enemye vnto ŷ people, yet shuldest thou punysh the with thine owne handes. Now whā I had spokē these wordes, the angell ŷ came to me ŷ night afore, was set vnto me, ¶ sayde vnto me: Heare me, ¶ herke to ŷ thinge ŷ I saye, ¶ I shal tell ŷ more. And I sayd: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed ¶ troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou ŷ people better, then him ŷ made them? And I sayde: No LORDE, but of very grefe ¶ cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hiest, and to seke out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not.

And I sayde: wherfore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childesbed then my graue? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Iacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

And he sayde vnto me: Nobre me ŷ thinges, ŷ are not yet come: gather me together ŷ droppes, that are scatred abroad: make me ŷ floures grene agayne, ŷ are wythered: opē me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shut vp: Shewe me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourest to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who may knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellynge with mē? As for me, I am vn wise: how maye I the speake of these thinges, wherof thou axest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of these thinges ŷ I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my iudgment, or in the ende the loue that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde o LORDE, yet art thou nye vnto them that haue no ende: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyll lycken my iudgment vnto a ryng. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered ¶ sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are for to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature may not haist aboue the maker, nether maye the worlde holde the at once, that shalbe created.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruaut, that thou luyng maker hast made the creature luyng at once, ¶ the creature bare it? eue so might it now also beare them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Axe the childesbed of a womā, and saye vnto her: Yf thou bringest forth childrē, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therefore, to bryng forth ten children at once. And I sayde: she can not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childesbed vnto the earth, for those that be sowne vpon it by processe of tyme. For like as a yonge childe maye not brynge forth the thinges that belonge to the aged, euen so haue I ordered the worlde which I made.

And I axed and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geue me a waye, I wyl speake before y: for ouer mother of whō thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge, & now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me & sayde: Axe a woman that beareth children, & she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherefore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but less of stature? And she shal answer the: They y be borne in the youth of strēth, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the child-esbed fayleth) are other wyse. Cōsidre now thy self, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and haue passed ouer the strength of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruauant, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The vi. Chapter.

AND he sayde vnto me: In the begynnyng whan the grounde was made, before the worlde stode, or euer y wyndes blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundations of Paradise were layed, before the fayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were established, before y innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer y highnesses of y ayre were lifted vp, afore y measures of the firmament were named, or euer y chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the presente yeares were sought out, and or euer the inuencions of them y now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that now gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I cōsidre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shalbe the partyng asunder of the tymes? Or whan shalbe the ende of the first, and the begynnyng of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abrahā vnto Isaac, whā Iacob & Esau were borne of him, Iacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Iacob is the begynnyng of it that foloweth. The bande of man betwixe the hele and the hande. Other question (Esdras) axe thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseke the, shewe thy seruauant the ende of thy tokēs, wherof thou shewedest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stōde vp vpon thy fete, and heare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greate mocion, but y place where thou stōdest shal not be moued. And therefore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not afrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundation of y earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quaketh, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whā I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and herkened: and beholde, there was a voyce y spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, y dayes come, y I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpō earth, and wyl begynne to make inquisition of them, what they be y haue hurte equityte with vnrighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shalbe fulfilled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shalbe ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

The bokes shalbe opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, & the children of a yeare olde shal speake with their voyces: the womē with childe shal brynge forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shall lyue, and be raysed vp: & sodely shal the sowne places appeare as the vnsowne, the full store houses shal sodenly be founde emptye, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whā euery man heareth, they shalbe haistely afrayed. At that tyme shall frenedes fight one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare with them.

The sprynges of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so euer remayneth from all these thinges that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not taisted death frō their byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shalbe chaunged, and turned in to another meynynge: for euell shalbe put out, and disceate shalbe quenched. As for faith, it shal florish, corrupcion shalbe overcome: and the trueth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

And it happened whan he talked with me, that I loked demurely vpō him, before whō I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe ſ, the tyme of ſ night for to come.

Yf thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seue dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the Hyest: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous dealynge, he hath sene also thy chastite, which thou hast had euer sence thy youth: and therefore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haist not with ſ tymes that are past to thynke vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, ſ I wepte agayne, and fasted seuen dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre wekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert vexed within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the Hyest: for my sprete was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnynge (euen the first daye) and saydest: Let^a heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sprete, and the darkneses were yet on euery syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene.

Vpon the seconde daye thou maydest the sprete of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deuyson betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remayne aboue, and the other beneth. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, ſ the waters were gathered in the seuenth parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intēt ſ men might sowe and occupie huszbandrie therein. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was madē. For immediatly there was greate innumerable frute, & many dyuerse pleasures & desyres of temptacion, floures of chaungeable coloure and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Vpon the fourth daye thou cōmaundedst that the Sonne shulde geue his shyne, and ſ Moone hir light: the starres didest thou sett in ordre, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man,^b that was for to be made. Vpō the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seuenth parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde bringe forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the domme water and without soule, brought forth luyunge beastes at the commaundement of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, ſ one thou callest Enoch and the other Leuiathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seuenth parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherin are a thousande hilles. But vnto Leuiathā thou gauest the seuenth parte, namely the moyst, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wylt, and whan.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest cōmaundement vnto the earth, that before the it shulde brynge forth beastes, catell and all ſ cреpe, & (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest lorde of all thy creatures: Of him come we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this haue I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be like a spetle, and hast lickened the abundaūce of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rofe of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the Heithē which haue euer bene reputed as nothinge, haue begōne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuoure vs: but we thy people (whom thou hast called ſ first borne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent louer) are geuen in to their handes and power. Yf the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritaunce in possession with the worlde? How longe shal this endure?

The vii. Chapter.

AND it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene by me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Vp Eszdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake on LORDE my God. Thē sayde he vnto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, y it might be depe and greate: but the intrauce is narow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? Yf he wente not thorow the narow, how might he come in to the brode?

Item, another. A cite is buylded and sett vpon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intrauce is narow and sodane, like as yf there were a fyre at the right hande, and a depe water at the left, and as it were onely one strate path betwixte thē both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

Yf this cite now were geuen to an heyre, & he neuer wente thorow this parloous waye, how wolde he receaue his inheritaunce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: Euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: & whan Adam trāsgressed my statutes, then was y thinge iudged that was done. Then were y inraunces of the worlde made narow, full of sorow and trauayle: They are but few & euell, full of paret and laboure. For the inraunces of the fore worlde were wyde and sure, and brought immortall frute.

B Yf they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehend these straye and vayne thinges, moch lesse maye they cōprehende and vnderstonde the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seynge thou art but a corruptible mā? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall? And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

Thē sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordered in thy lawe,^a that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perishe. Neuer-theless the righteous shall suffre straye thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that haue lyued vngodly & suffred straye thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he saide vnto me: There is no iudge aboute God, and none that hath vnderstondinge aboute the Hyeest. For there be many y perish, because they despyse y lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geuen straye commaundement to such as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lyue: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Neuertheles they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymaged vayne thinges, & purposed to synne, and sayde morouer, that there was no God, & that God regarded it not. His wayes haue they not knowne, his lawe haue they despyed, & denyed his promyses: in his statutes & ordinaunces haue they not bene faithfull & stedfast, and haue not performed his workes.

And therfore Eszdras, vnto the full, plenty: and to the empye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, y these tokens which I haue tolde the, shal come to passe, & the bryde shall appeare: & the earth y now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: & who so euer is deliuered from y foresayde euels, shal se my wōders. For my sonne Iesus shal be openly declared, with those y be with him: and they y remayne, shal be mery in foure hundreth yeares.

After these same yeares shall my sonne Christ dye, and all men that haue life: and y worlde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seuen dayes, like as in the fore iudgmentes, so that no man shall remayne. And after seuē dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shalbe raysed vp, & shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that haue slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in sylence, and the secrete places shal deliuer those that be committed vnto them: And y most hiest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, & all misery shal vanysh awaye, and lōge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shall contynue, y trueth shal remayne, and faith shal waxe strōge, the worke shal folowe, and the rewarde shall be shewed, the righteousnesses shall watch, and the vnrighteousnesses shall beare no rule.

^a Deut. 8. a.

D Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites,^a & Moses for the fathers \hat{y} synned in the wyldernes, & he \hat{y} came after him for Israel, in \hat{y} tyme of Ahas and Samuel: and Dauid for \hat{y} destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, & Helias for those that receaued rayne, and for the deed, that he might lyue: and Ezechias for \hat{y} people in the tyme of Sennacherib: & dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.

Euē so now, seyng \hat{y} corrupte is growne vp, and wickednes increased, and the righteuous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherfore shal it not be so now also?

He answered me, and sayde: This present worlde is not \hat{y} ende, there remaineth moch honour in it, therefore haue they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and \hat{y} begynnynge of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corruption vanysheth, all voluptuousnes is lowsed, all myszeleue taken awaye, righteousness growne, and the verite spronge vp. Then shall no man be able to saue him that is destroyed, ner to oppress him \hat{y} hath gottē \hat{y}

E victory. I answered thē, & sayde: This is my first & last sayenge: \hat{y} it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geuē him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lyue in heynes, & after death to loke for punysment? O thou Adā, what hast thou done? For though it was thou \hat{y} synned, thou art not fallē alone, but we all \hat{y} come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortall tyme, where as we medle with deadly workes? & that there is promysed vs an euerlasting hope, where as we oure selues are euell and vayne? & \hat{y} there are layed vp for vs dwellynges of health & fredome, where as we haue lyued euell? and that the worshipec of \hat{y} Hiest is keppe to defende them, which haue led a pacient life, where as we haue walked in \hat{y} most wicked wayes of all? and that there shalbe shewed a paradise, whose frute endureth for euer, wherin is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in? for we haue walked in vnpleasaunt places: And that the faces of them which haue absteyned, shal shyne aboute the starres, where as oure faces shalbe blacke and darcke? For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death?

F Thē answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion & thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shall suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shall receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life,^b that thou mayest lyue. Neuertheles they beleued him not, nether the prophetes after him, No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that heynes shulde not reach vnto them to their destruccion, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred thē selues to be enfourmed in saluacion.

I answered then & sayde: I knowe LORDE, that the Hiest is mercyfull, in \hat{y} he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe:^c and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberal to geue where as it requyreth: and that he is of greate mercy, for he multiplieth his louynge kyndnesses towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mercies, the worlde shal not be made luyng, with those that dwell therein: He geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made luyng. And yf the iudge forgaue not those \hat{y} bē healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye \hat{y} multitude that stryue, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The viij. Chapter.

AND he answered me, sayēge: The most A hiest made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a symilitude, Esdras: As whan thou axest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it \hat{y} golde cometh of.

^c Rom. 2. a.

Euen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created,^a but few shall be preserued. Then answered I & sayde: Then swallowe vp the witt (thou soule) and deuoure the vnderstandinge, for thou art agreed to herken and to geue eare, and wyllinge to prophecie: for thou hast no longer space geuen the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thou not geue thy seruauent leue, & we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest geue sede vnto oure hert, and buylde oure vnderstandinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that euery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one workmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childesbed, and thou geuest the membres, and thy creature is preserued in fyre and water: & ix. monethes doth thy worke suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserueth and it & is preserued, shal both be kepte together: & whan tyme is, the childesbedd delyuereth & thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

B For thou hast commaunded the brestes to geue mylck vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be nourished for a tyme: and then thou disposest and ordrest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nuturest it in thy lawe, and refourmest it with thy vnderstandinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it lyuynge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which with so greates labours is created and fashioned thorow thy commaundement, thou coudest lyghtly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preserued.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sory: and of thy inheritance, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for Iacob, for whose sake I am greued: therefore begynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, euen of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therefore heare my voyce, and vnderstode my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

^a Mat. 20. b. and 21. b.

This is the begynnyng of the wordes of Esdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in euerlastyngnesse, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose stole is excedding hye, whose glory and maiesty maye not be comprehēded, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with tremblinge, whose kepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is stedfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynance is fearfull, whose loke dryeth vp the depthes, whose wrath maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, & whose trueth beareth wytnes: O heare & prayer of thy seruauent, and marck with thine eares the petition of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so lōge as I haue vnderstandinge, I will answer. O loke not vpō the synnes of thy people, which serue & in the trueth. Haue no respecte vnto the wicked studies of the Heithen, but to the desyre of those that kepe thy testimonies with sorowes. Thinke not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be thy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in & righteousnes and glory; for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

B For yf thou hast mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousnes: for & righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue rewarde. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough towards him?

^b For of a trueth there is no man amonge them that be borne, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done amysse. For in this (O LORDE) thy righteousnes & thy goodnes shalbe praysed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not rych in good workes.

^b 3 Re. 8. g.

2 Par. 6. f.

1 Ioh. 1. b.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges hast thou spoken a right, and acordinge vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cōsidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destrucciō, "but I wyll reioyse ouer the worke and thought of ȳ righteous. I wil remembre also the pilgramege, the holymakynge and the rewarde. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the huszbād man soweth moch sede vpon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or plāted is not all keppe safe, nether doth it all take rote: Euen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserued.

E I answered then & sayde: Yf I haue founde grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbāde mans sede perisheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to moch rayne vpon it: Euen so perisheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and likened him vnto the huszbande mans sede. Be not wroth at vs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritaunce: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

F Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for such as be to come. For thou wātest yet moch, seyng thou mayest loue my creature aboue me: I haue oft times drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous. In this also thou art maruelous before the Hyest, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, ȳ thou art had in soch honoure amonge the righteous. Therefore shal greate wrechidnes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in ȳ worlde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vnderstonde thou for thy self, and seke out glory for such as be like the: for vnto you is paradise opened, the tre of life is plāted, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wyszdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and moth is hyd from you, & into hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulnes. Sorowes are vanyshed awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortalite. And therfore axe thou no more questions, cōcernynge the multitude of them that perishe. For they haue taken libertie, despysed the Hyest, thought scorn of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

C Morouer, they haue troden downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of, is made ready for you: Euē so is thyrst and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wil that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vnthankfull vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therfore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the, and to such as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O LORDE, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begynne to do at the last: but at what tyme and whan, thou hast not shewed me.

The ii. Chapter.

A HE answered me then and saide: Measure thou the tyme diligently in it self, whan thou seist that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde ȳ before: so shalt thou vnderstonde, that it is the very same tyme, wherin the Hyest wil begynne to vysit the worlde, which he made. And whā there shalbe sene earthquake and vproure of the people in the worlde, then shalt thou well vnderstonde, that the most hiest spake of those thinges, from the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnynge.

For like as all that is made in the worlde, hath a begynnynge and ende, and the ende is manifest: Euen so the tymes also of the Hyest haue playne begynnynge in wonders and signes, and the ende in workynge and in tokens. And euery one that shalbe sauēd, and shall be able to escape by his workes & by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shall be preserued from the saide pears, and shal se my sauoure in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the worlde. Then shall they be in carefulness, and which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytfully, shall dwell in paynes.

B For such as in their life haue receaued benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome, and whan they had yet open rowme of amendemēt and conuersion, & vnderstode not, but despyed it: [¶] same must knowe it after death in payne. And therefore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngodly shalbe punyshed, & how the righteous shalbe saued, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and whan it is. Then answered I and sayde: "I haue talked before & now I speake, and wyl speake also herafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the droppes.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the sede: as the floures be, so are the colours also: soch as the workman is, soch is also [¶] worke: and as the huszband man is himself, so is his huszbandrye also, for it was the tyme of the worlde. And whan I prepared for them that are now, or euer the worlde was made, wher in they shulde dwel, then was there no man that withstode me.

C Now whan euery one was, and the maker also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moneth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maners were corrupte. So I considered the worlde, and beholde, there was parell, because of [¶] thoughtes that were come in to it. And I sawe, and spared thē greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plante from amonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish thē, which are growne vp in vayne, and let my grape & wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with greate labour haue I made it vp.

Neuertheles yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seuen dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to [¶] felde of floures, where no house is buylded, and eate onely of the floures of the felde, taist not flesh, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely. Praye vnto the Hiest continually, so will I come, and talke with the.

D So I wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Ardath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge [¶] floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and [¶] meate of the same satisfied me. After seuen dayes I sat vpon the grasse, & my hert was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the Hiest, and saide: O LORDE, thou [¶] shewest thy self vnto vs, ^b thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wyldernes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, whan they came out of Egipte, and thou spakest, sayēge: Heare me O Israel, and marke my wordes thou sede of Iacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and it shal brynge frute in you, & ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaued the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, & the frute of [¶] lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why? it was thine. For they that receaued it, perished, ^c because they kepte not [¶] thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome whan the grounde receaueth E sede, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, whan it perisheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe & are broken, which are sowne or putt therin. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we [¶] haue receaued the lawe, perish in synne, and oure hert also which receaued the lawe: notwithstandinge ^d the lawe perisheth not, but remaineth in his labour.

And whan I considered these thinges in my hert after this maner, I loked aboute me with myne eyes, ^e and vpon the right syde I sawe a woman, which mourned sore, made greate lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peces, & she had aszshes vpon hir heade.

Thē lke I my thoughtes go, [¶] I was in, F & turned me vnto her, & sayde: wherfore wepest thou? why art thou so sory & discomforted? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me bewayle my self & take yet more sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, & brought very lowe. And I said vnto her: what ayleth [¶]? Or who hath done eny thinge to [¶]? tell me. She sayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and baren, and haue had an huszband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do nothinge els daye and night and all houres, but make my prayer to ꝑ Hyest. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy handmayden, loked vpon my misery, considred my trouble, and gaue me a sonne, and I was glad of him, so was my huszbad also and all my neighbours, and we gaue greate honoure vnto ꝑ Mightie. And I norished him with greate trauayle. So whan he grewe vp, ⁊ came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

The r. Chapter.

AND it happened that whan my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: the ouerthrew we all the lightes, and all my neighbours rose vp to cōforte me. The toke I my rest vnto the secōde daye at night: ⁊ whan they had all rested, ꝑ they might comforte me, I rested also, and rose vp by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remayne here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditacions and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not oure heuynes and mournynge, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion oure mother is all wofull and sorry, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery? seinge we be all now in heuynes, ⁊ make oure mone (for we be all soroufull.) As for the heuynes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demande the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begynnynge all men are borne of her, ⁊ other shal come: and beholde, they walke allmost all in to destruccion, and many of them shalbe roted out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournynge, then she, that hath lost so greate a multitude? and not thou, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournynge is not like the mournynge of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heuynes: as for the earth, according to the ordynance of ꝑ earth onely, so that many are gone awaye in her, as it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with trauayle ⁊ sorowe, euen so the earth also from the begynnynge geueth hir frute vnto man, for him ꝑ made her. And therefore witholde thy sorowe and heuynes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto ꝑ, beare it strōgly." For yf thou iudgeth the marck ⁊ ende of God to be righteous and good, and receauest his counsell in tyme, thou shalt be commended therein. Go thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbande.

And she sayde vnto me: that wyll I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I comoned more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be coūceled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Ierusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waist, oure aulter broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synginge layed downe, the thankesgeuyng put to sylence, oure myrth is vanished awaye, the light of oure candlestick is quenched, ꝑ Arke of the couenant is takē from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon ouer vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Leuites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues rauyshed, oure righteous men spoyled, and oure childre destroyed, oure yonge men are brought in bōdage, and oure strōge worthies are become weake: and Sion (which seale is ꝑ greatest of all) is lownd vp from hir worshipe: for she is deliuered in to the handes of them that hate vs.

And therfore shake of ꝑ greate heuynes, and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Mightie maye be mercyfull vnto the, and that the Hyest maye geue the rest from ꝑ laboure and trauayle. And it happened, that whan I was talkynge with her, hir face dyd shyne ⁊ glyster, so that I was afraied of her, and mused what it might be. And immediatly she cast out a greate voyce, very fearfull, so that ꝑ earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I loked, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nomore: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundation.

Then was I afraied, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Vriel the angell, which came to me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many consideracions and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was speakynge these wordes, he came vnto me, and loked vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge vexed? and the vnderstandinge of thy hert, and wherefore art thou sory? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and I haue done acordynge vnto thy wordes,^a I wente in to the felde, and there haue I sene thynges, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vnto me: Stōde vp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde I: Speake on to me my LORDE, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I haue sene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. Or shall my vnderstandynge be disceaued, and my mynde? But now I beseke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruauent of this wōder. He answered me thē and sayde: heare me, and I shall enfourme the, and tell the wherefore thou art afraied, for the Hyest hath opened many secrete thynges vnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is right, and that thou takest sorowe continually for thy people, and makest greate lamentacion for Sion: and therefore vnderstonde the vision which thou sawest a litle whyle agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mournynge, and thou hast comforted her: Neuertheles now seist thou the licknes of the woman no more, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answer: The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion: and where as she tolde the, that she hath bene thirtie yeaeres vnfrutefull and baren, those are the xxx. yeaeres, wherein there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeaeres Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the baren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she norished him with labour, that was the dwellynge of Ierusalem. But where as the sonne dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Ierusalem. And thou sawest hir lickenesse, how she mourned for hir sonne: and what els happened vnto her, I haue shewed y.

^a 4 Esd. 9. a.

And now God seyth, that thou art sory in thy mynde, and suffrest from y hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir cleannesse, and the fayrnes of hir bewtye.

And therefore I bad the remayne in the felde, where no house is buylded. For I knew y the Hyest wolde shew this vnto the, therefore I commaunded the to go in to the felde, where no foundacion ner buyldinge is. For in the place where the Hyest wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therefore feare not, and let not thine hert be afraied, but go thy waye in, and se the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how greate it is, and how greate thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, & then shalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehend. For thou art blessed aboue many other, and art called with the Hyest, as y few. But to-morow at night thou shalt remayne here, and so shal the Hyest shewe the visions of hye thynges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in y last dayes. So I slepte the same night like as he cōmaunded me.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from y see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and thre heades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I behelde, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the other, yet rested it with the residue.

Morouer I sawe, that the Aegle flew with his wynges, and raigned vpon earth, & ouer all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I sawe y all thynges vnder heauen were subiecte vnto him, and no man spake against him, no not one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, & gaue a sounde with his fethers, & a voyce sayēge after this maner: watch not all together, slepe euery mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preserued at the last. Neuertheles I sawe, y the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his cōtrary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them. And I loked, & beholde, vpon the right syde there arose one fether, & raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, ȳ when it raigned, the ende of it came, & the place therof appeared no more. So the nexte folowinge stode vp, & raigned, & had a greate tyme: & it happened, ȳ when it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, & sayde: Heare thou ȳ hast kepte in the earth so lōge, this I saye vnto the, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after ȳ atteyne vnto thy tyme. Then arose the thirde, & raigned as the other afore, & appeared nomore also. So wēte it with all the residue one after another, so ȳ euery one raigned, & thē appeared nomore. Thē I loked, & beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers ȳ folowed were set vp vpon the right syde, ȳ they might rule also: and some of thē ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of thē were set vp, but ruled not. After this I loked, & beholde, ȳ xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: & there was nomore vpon the Aegles body, but two heades that rested, & sixe fethers. Then sawe I also, ȳ the sixe fethers were parted in two, & remayned vnder the heade, ȳ was vpon the right syde, for the foure cōtynued in their place. So I loked, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to set vp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde was sooner awaye then the first. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought also by thē selues to raigne: & whā they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myddest, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heade was turned with them ȳ were by him, & ate vp ȳ two vnder wynges, ȳ wolde haue raigned.

But this heade put ȳ whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those ȳ dwelt vpon earth with moch labour, and he had the gouernaunce of the worlde, ouer all the foules that haue bene. After this I loked, and beholde, the heade that was in the middest, sodenly appeared nomore, like as ȳ wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, & ouer those that dwelt therin. And I behelde, & lo, the heade vpon the right side, deuoured it that was vpon the left syde. And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me: lōke before the, and conside the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennyng haistely out of ȳ wod, and he sent out a mans voyce vnto the Aegle, and sayde: Heare thou, I wyl talke with the, and the Hyst shal saye vnto the: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure beastes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that ȳ ende of their times might come thorow thē?

And the fourth came, and ouerwanne all the beastes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde with greate fearfulness, and ouer the whole compasse of the earth with the most wicked labour, and so longe time dwelt he vpon the earth with disceate, & the earth hast thou iudged not with trueth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyet, thou hast loued lyers, and destroyed the dwellynges of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the walles of such as dyd the no harme. Therefore is thy wrongeous dealyng and blasphemy come vp vnto the Hyst, and thy pryde vnto the Mightie. The Hyst also hath loked vpon the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therefore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngracious heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy vayne body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, whan she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for ȳ iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The xij. Chapter.

AND it happened whā ȳ Lyō spake these wordes vnto ȳ Aegle, *ȳ heade ȳ afore had ȳ vpperhāde, appeared nomore: nether dyd ȳ foure wynges appeare eny more, ȳ came to hi, & were sett vp to raigne, & their kyngdome was small & full of vproure.

And I sawe, & beholde, they appeared nomore, & ȳ whole body of ȳ Aegle was brēt, & the earth was in greate feare. Then awaked I out of the trance of my mynde, and from greate feare, and sayde vnto my sprete: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in ȳ thou searchest

* Rede, I sawe, and beholde, out the wayes of the Hyest: lo, yet am I weery in my minde, and very weake in my sprete, and litle strēth is there in me, for the greate feare that I receaued this night. Therefore wil I now beseke the Hyest, \hat{y} he wyl comforte me vnto the ende, τ I sayde:

33 LORDE LORDE yf I haue founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with \hat{y} before many other, τ yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, cōforte me then, and shew me thy seruauant the interpretacion τ playne differēce of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly cōforte my soule: for thou hast iudged me worthy, to shew me \hat{y} last of tymes.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the interpretation of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come vp from the see, is the kyngdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother "Daniel, but it was no expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

C Beholde, the dayes come, that there shal ryse vp a kyngdome vpō earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes \hat{y} were before it. In the same kyngdome shal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the secōde shal begynne to raigne, and shal haue more tyme thē the other, τ this do \hat{y} xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from \hat{y} body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there shall aryse greate stryuynges, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, bot shal be set in to his begynnynge. And \hat{y} eight vnderwynges which thou sawest hāge vnto \hat{y} wynges of hi, betokē, \hat{y} in hi there shal aryse eight kynges, whose tyme shalbe but small, τ their yeares swift, τ two of them shal beare. But whan the middest tyme commeth, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte vnto \hat{y} ende.

And where as thou sawest thre heades restynge, this is the interpretacion: In his last shal the Hyest rayse vp thre kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to thē, τ they shal haue the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therein, with moch labour aboute all those \hat{y} were before thē. Therefore are they called \hat{y} heades of the Aegle: for it is they \hat{y} shal bringe forth his wickednes agayne, τ \hat{y} shal performe τ fynish his last. And where as thou sawest, that \hat{y} greate heade appeared nomore, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpō his bed, τ yet with payne, for the two that remaine, shalbe slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal deuoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde himself.

34 And where as thou sawest two vnderwings vpon the heade that is on the right syde, it signifieth, that it is they, whō the Hyest hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small kyngdome, τ full of trouble. The Lyon whō thou sawest rysinge vp out of the wodd and roaringe, and speakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukynge him for his vnrighteousnesse, is the wynde, which the Hyest hath kepte for them and for their wickednesse vnto the ende: he shal reprove them, and rente them asunder before them. For he shal sett them lyuyng before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal he delyuer with trouble, those \hat{y} be preserued ouer myne endes: and he shal make them ioyfull vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken vnto the from the begynnynge. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretacion. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the secrete of the Hyest.

Therefore wryte all these thinges \hat{y} thou hast sene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach thē the wyse in the people, whose hertes thou knowest maye comprehendē and kepe these secretes. But wayte thou here \hat{y} self yet seuen dayes moo, that it maye be shewed the, what so euer it pleaseth the Hyest to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

35 And whan all the people perceaued, \hat{y} the seuen dayes were past, τ I not come agayne into \hat{y} cite, they gathered them all together from the least vnto the most, τ came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the, \hat{y} thou forsakest vs, τ syttest here in this place? For of all people thou only art left vs, as a grape of the vyne, and as a candell in a darcke place, and as an hauen τ shippe preserued from \hat{y} tēpest. Haue we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake vs? Were it not better for vs, that we had bene brent with Sion? For we are no better, then they \hat{y} dyed there:

and they wepte with loude voyce. Then answered I the ⁊ sayde: Be of good cōforte O Israel, ⁊ be not heuy thou house of Iacob: for ⁊ Hiest hath you in remēbraunce, ⁊ ⁊ Mightie hath not forgottē you in tētaciō. As for me, I haue not forsakē you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of ⁊ misery of Israel, that I might seke mercy for ⁊ lowe estate of youre Sāctuary. And now go youre waye home euery mā, and after these dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wēte their waye in to the cite, like as I commaunded them: but I remainyd still in the felde seuen dayes, as ⁊ angell bad me, and I ate onely of the floures of the felde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND it happened after the seūē dayes, ⁊ I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenance to cōsider, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brent that herde him, like as the earth whan it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe, ⁊ beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of mē out of nombre from the foure wyndes of the heaue, to fight agaynst ⁊ man, that came out from ⁊ see. And I loked, ⁊ beholde, he graued himself a greate mōutayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen, ⁊ I coude not.

I sawe after these, ⁊ all they which came to fight agaynst him, were sore afraied, and yet durst they fight. Neuertheles whan he sawe the fearsnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift vp his hande ner helde swerde, ner eny weapon: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes ⁊ wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he cast out sparkes and stormes, and they were all myxte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flames, and ⁊ greate storme, ⁊ fell with a russhe vpon ⁊ people, which was prepared to fight ⁊ brēt thē vp euerychone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust ⁊ smoke. Whan I saw this, I was afraied.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sory, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sick thorow greate feare, and I awaked, and sayde: thou hast shewed ⁊ seruauant all ⁊ wōders frō ⁊ begynnynge, ⁊ hast counted me worthy, ⁊ thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpretation of this dreame. For thus I cōsidre in my vnderstandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, ⁊ moch more wo vnto thē that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heuynes.

Now vnderstonde I ⁊ thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therefore are they come in to greate parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier, ⁊ he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the worlde, and now to se ⁊ thinges ⁊ shal happen in ⁊ last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The interpretation of the sight shall I shewe the, and I will open vnto the, the thinge ⁊ thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretation. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are soch as haue workes ⁊ faith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therefore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanyng of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man commynge vp from the depe of the see, ⁊ same is he whom God the Hiest hath kepte a greate season, which by his owne self shall deliyuer his creature, ⁊ he shal orde thē that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, ⁊ out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre and storme, ⁊ how ⁊ he lift vp nether swerde ner weapon, but ⁊ the ruszshinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude, ⁊ came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyl deliyuer thē ⁊ are vpon earth, ⁊ in a traunce of mynde shall he come vpon thē, ⁊ dwell in the earth. And one shal vndertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place

agaynst another," one people agaynst another, ¶ one realme agaynst another. When this commeth to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and thẽ shal my sonne be declared, whō thou sawest clymme vp as a mā. And when all þ̃ people heare his voyce, euery man shal in their owne lōde leaue the battayll, þ̃ they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shall be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to ouercome him by fightinge. But he shal stōde vpon the toppes of the mount Sion.
Newertheles Sion shall come, ¶ shall be shewed, beynge prepared ¶ buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without eny hādes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people þ̃ are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginations: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punyshed, are licked vnto the flamme:
and without eny labourē shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is cōpared vnto the fyre.

And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried away prisoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom ^b Salmanasar the kinge of Assiria toke prisoner, and caried them ouer ^c water, and so came they in to another londe.

But they gaue them this counsell, ⁊ they shulde leaue the multitude of the Heithē, and to go forth in to a farther cowntre, where neuer mankynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narrow passages of the water of Euphrates, and God shewed tokens for thē, and helde still the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that cowntre there was a greate waye, namely of a yeaere and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, ⁊ Hyest shall holde still the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal dēfede his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, F shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge vp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cast nether seke out ner knowe these things that are in the depe of the see, euen so maiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretation of the dreame which thou sawest, therefore thou onely art here lightened:
for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought
it. "Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstandinge thy mother, and therefore haue I shewed the þy treasure of the Hiest. After three dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous things wyl I declare vnto the.

Then wente I forth in to y^e felde, geuynge praise and thankes greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he gouerneth the same, and soch as is in tyme, and there I satt thre dayes.

The viii. Chapter.

V PON the thirde daye I satt vnder an oake tre, then came there a voyce vnto me out of the bush, & sayde: Eszdras, Eszdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. Thē spake he vnto me: "In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Moses, & talked with him, whā my people serued in Egipte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egipte, & brought him vpō ſ mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him ſ secretes of the tymes, and the ende, and commaunded him, sayēge:
These wordes shalt thou declare, & not hyde
thē. And now I saye vnto the, that thou laye vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretacions which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be reaceued of all, thou shal be turned and remayne with my councell, and with such as be like the, vntyll ſ tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to waxe olde.
For the tyme is deuoyd in to twolue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth there that, which is after $\frac{1}{2}$ half of $\frac{1}{2}$ tenth parte.

B Therefore prepare and ordre thy house, and reforme thy people: comforte such of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruction: let go from the mortall thoughtes: cast away the burthens of man: put of the weake nature: laye vp in some place $\frac{1}{2}$ thoughtes that are most heuy vnto the, and haist the to flyt from these tymes: for soch euell & wickednesse as thou hast now sene happē, shal they do yet moch worse. For the weaker that the worlde and the tyme is, the more shal synne and wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpon earth. For the truth is fled farre awaye, & lesynge is hard at hande. For now haisteth the vision to come, that thou hast sene.

C Then answered I and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and reforme the people which are present. But they $\frac{1}{2}$ shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhorte or rebuke the? Thus the worlde is set in darcknes, and they $\frac{1}{2}$ dwell therin, are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. Yf I haue fōūde grace before the, sende the holy goost in to me, and I shall wryte all that hath bene done in the worlde sene the begynnynge, which was wryten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, may lyue.

And he answered me, sayēge: Go $\frac{1}{2}$ waye, gather thy people together, & saye vnto the, that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many boxe trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a cādle of vnderstōdinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be performed which thou shalt begynne to wryte. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto $\frac{1}{2}$ wyse. Tomorrow this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.

D Then wēte I forth (as he commaūded me) and gathered all $\frac{1}{2}$ people together, and sayde: Heare these wordes o Israel: Oure fathers from the begynnynge were straungers in Egipte, from whēce they were delyuered, and receaued the lawe of life, ^o which they kepte not, which ye also haue trasgressed after the. Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amōge you by the lot to possesse. But youre fathers and ye youre selues also haue done vnrighteousnes, & haue not kepte the wayes which the Hyest cōmaunded you. And for so moch as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that he had geuen you. And now are ye here and youre brethren amōge you. Therefore yf so be that ye wil subdue youre owne vnderstandinge, and reforme youre hert, ye shal be kepte aliue, & after death shal ye opteyne mercy. For after death shall the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and $\frac{1}{2}$ names of the vngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no mā therefore come now vnto me, ner axe any question at me these xl. dayes.

E So I toke the fyue men (as he commaunded me) and we wente in to the fælde, and remayned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayēge: Esdras, Open thy mouth, & drynke that I geue the. The opened I my mouth, & beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colour of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had drunken it, my hert had vnderstōdinge, and wyszdome grew in my brest: for my sprete was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut no more. The Hyest gaue vnderstōdinge vnto the fyue men, $\frac{1}{2}$ they wrote $\frac{1}{2}$ hye thiges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the night they ate bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wrote two hundreth & foure bokes.

And it happened whā the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the Hyest spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wryttē, speake openly, $\frac{1}{2}$ the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe $\frac{1}{2}$ lxx. last, $\frac{1}{2}$ thou mayest shew it onely to such as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the sprynge of vnderstōdinge, the fountayne of wyszdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The xii. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, speake thou in the eares of A my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyll put in $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ mouth, saith the LORDE: and cause them to be wrytten in a letter, for it is the trueth. Feare not the ymaginaciōs against $\text{\textcircled{f}}$, let not $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ vnfaithfulness of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. For all the vnfaithfull shal dye in their vnfaithfulness. Beholde saith the LORDE, I wil brynge plagues vpon the worlde: $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ swerde, hunger, death and destruccion, for wickednes hath the vpper hande in all $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ earth, and their shamefull workes are fulfilled.

^o Mat. 24. a. 1 Joh. 2. c.

^b Deut. 4. 5.

^c Eze. 3. a. Apo. 10. b.

B Therefore saith the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suffre them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wickedly. Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therefore (saith the LORDE) I wil surely aūge, and receaue vnto me all the innocēt bloude from amonge them.

^a Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwel in Egipte, but wyl brynge them out with a mightie hande and a stretched out arme, and smyte it with plagues as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egipte shal mourne, and the foundations of it shalbe smytten with the plage and punyshment, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ God shal brynge vpon it.

C They that tyll $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ grouēde, shal mourne, for their sedes shal be destroyed thorow the blastyng and hale, and an horrible starre. Wo worth $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ worlde and them that dwell therein, for $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ swerde $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ their destrucciō draweth nye: $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ one people shal stōde vp to fight against another, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ swerdes in their hādes. For mē shalbe vnstedfast, and some shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and hādelinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ shal not be able. For because of their pryde $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ cities shalbe brought in feare, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ houses shal shake, and men shalbe afraied. A man shal haue no pitie vpon his neyghboure, but one shal prouoke another vnto battayll, to spoyle their goodes because of the hunger of bred, and because of the greate trouble.

D Beholde, I gather $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ call together all the kynges of $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ earth which are from the vprysyng, from the south, from the east and Liba-nus to turne vnto them, and restore the thinges that they haue geuē them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my chosen, so wil I do also, and recōpense thē in their bosome. Thus sayeth $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ LORDE God: My right hande shal not spare $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ synners, and my swerde shal not cease ouer them, that shed the innocēt bloude vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath cōsumed the foundations of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saith the LORDE. I wil not spare them. Go youre waye ye children from violence, defyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all thē that synne agaynst him, and therefore deliyuereth he them vnto death and destrucciō: For now are the plagues come vpon the worlde, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ ye shal remayne in thē. For God shal not deliyuer you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

E Beholde, an horrible vision commeth frō the east, where generacions of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpō earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afraied: and as the wyld bores out of $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ wod, so shal they go out, and with greate power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with thē, and shal waiste the porcion of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembreinge their byrth, and shal turne aboute swearinge together in greate power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afraied, and kepe sylence at their power, and shal fle: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal besege thē, and consume one of thē, and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

F Beholde cloudes from the east, and from the north vnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ greate starre vpon earth and their starre, and the bloude shalbe from the swerde vnto the bely, and the smoke of mā vnto $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ Camels lytter: And there shalbe greate fearfulness and tremblinge vpō earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afraied, and a tremblinge shal come vpon them.

^a Apo. 6. b. and 19. a.

^a Psal. 43. c. Rom. 8. c. 1 Co. 4. b.

And then shal there come greate raynes from \hat{y} south and from the north, and parte from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal shutt them vp agayne, τ the cloude which he rayned vp in wrath, and the starre to cause feare towarde \hat{y} east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, τ the greate cloudes shalbe lift vp, and \hat{y} mightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afayed and the \hat{y} dwell therein, and that they maye poure out ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and hale and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: \hat{y} all felde maye be full, and all ryuers, τ they shal breake downe the cities τ walles, mountaynes τ hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasse of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afayed, they shal come to her and besege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vp vnto the heauen, and all they that be aboute her, shal bewaile her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia \hat{y} cōfortest thyself also vpō the hope of Babilon, and art a worshippe of hir personne: Wo be vnto the thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, \hat{y} hast decte \hat{y} daughters i whordome, that they might tryumphe and please thy louers, which haue allwaye desyred to cōmytte whordome with the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir workes and inuencions.

Therefore sayeth God: I wyl sende plagues vpon the, wyddowhode, pouerte, hōger, warres, and pestilence, to waist thy houses with destruction and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dried vp as a floure, whan \hat{y} heate aryseth \hat{y} is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sick as a poore wife that is plagued τ beate of women: so \hat{y} the mightie and louers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so hate the saith the LORDE? Yf thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the stroke of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death, whan thou wast drōkē: set forth the bewtye of thy countenance.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therefore shalt thou receaue * rewarde.

* Some rede, no rewarde.

Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (sayeth the LORDE) euen so shal God do vnto the, and shal delyuer the in to the plage. Thy childrē shal dye of hunger, τ thou shalt fall thorow \hat{y} swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, τ all thine shal perish with the swerde in \hat{y} felde. They \hat{y} be in \hat{y} mōutaynes shal dye of hunger, τ ate their owne flesh, τ drinke their owne bloude for very hōger of bred and thyrst of water. Thou vnhappye shalt come thorow the see, τ receaue plages agayne.

In the passage they shal caste downe the slayne cite, τ shal rote out one parte of \hat{y} londe, τ cōsume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stubble, τ they shalbe thy fyre and shal consume the: thy cities and thy londe, thy wod and thy frutefull trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy children shal they cary awaye captiue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and marre the bewtie of thy face.

The xvi. Chapter.

WO vnto the Babilon τ Asia, wo vnto \hat{y} Egypte τ Syria: gyrd your selues with clothes of sack τ hayre, and mourne for your childrē, be sory, for your destruction is at honde. A swerde is sent vpon you, τ who wil turne it back? A fyre is kyndled amōge you, τ who wil quench it? Plages are sent vnto you, τ what is he that wyl dryue them awaye? Maye eny man dryue awaye an hōgrie lyon in the wod? Or maye eny mā quench the fyre in the stubble, whan it hath begonne to burne? Maye one turne agayne the arowe, \hat{y} is shot of a stronge archer? The mightie LORDE sendeth the plages, τ what is he that wil dryue them awaye? The fyre is kyndled τ gone forth in his wrath, and what is he that will quench it? He shall cast lightenynges, and who shal not feare? He shal thonder, and who shall not be afayed? The LORDE shal threaten, and who shal not vtterly be beaten to poulder at his presence? The earth quaketh, τ the foundacions therof: \hat{y} see aryseth up with wawes from the depe, and the floudes of it are vnquyte, τ the fishes therof also before the LORDE, τ before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arowes that he shuteth, are sharpe, τ shall not mysse, whan they begynne to be shot in to \hat{y} endes of the worlde.

B Beholde, ȳ plagis are sent, ⁊ shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, ⁊ shal not be put out, tyll it consume the foundations of the earth. Like as an arowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not backward, euen so ȳ plagis ȳ shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wyl delyuer me in those dayes? The begynnyng of sorowes ⁊ greate mourning: the begynnyng of derth ⁊ greate death: the begynnyng of warres, ⁊ the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnyng of euels, ⁊ they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, when the plagis come? Beholde, hōger and plage, trouble ⁊ anguysh are sent, as scourges for amending. But for all these thinges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye myndefull of ȳ scourges.

C Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, ȳ they shal thinke them selues to be in good case: and euen then shal myschefe growe vpo earth, warres, derth ⁊ greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpo earth shal perish of hōger, ⁊ the other that escape the hunger, shal the swerde destroye: ⁊ the deed shalbe cast out as donge, ⁊ there shalbe no man to cōforte them. For ȳ earth shalbe waisted, ⁊ the cities shalbe cast downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll ȳ earth ⁊ to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute, ⁊ who shal plucke thē of ⁊ gather them? The grapes shal be ripe, ⁊ who shal treade thē? For all places shalbe desolate of mē, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, ⁊ two in the felde, which shall hyde thē selues in the thicke buszshes, ⁊ in the clyffes of stones: like as when there remayne thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as when a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligētly sought thorow the vynyarde.

D Euen so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for thē ȳ search their houses with the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waiste, ⁊ the feldes therof shall waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal trauallye there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no brydegromes: the wemen shal make lamentacion, hauynge no huszbandes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their brydegrome. In the warres shall they be destroyed, ⁊ their huszbandes shal perish of hunger. O ye seruantes of the LORDE, heare these thinges, ⁊ marck thē. Beholde, the worde of the LORDE, O receaue it: beholde, the plagis drawe nye, ⁊ are not slack in tarienge. Like as a trauaylinge woman, which after ȳ ix. moneth brigheth forth a sonne, when the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre afore that the paynes come vpo hir body, ⁊ when the childe cōmeth to the byrth, they tary not the twynklynge of an eye: Euē so shall not ȳ plagis be slack to come vpon earth, ⁊ the worlde shal mourne, ⁊ sorowes shal come vpo it on euery syde.

E O my people, heare my worde, make you redy to the battayll: ⁊ in all euell be euen as pylgryms vpon earth. He ȳ selleth, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: ⁊ he ȳ byeth, as one that wil lese." Who so occupieth marchaūdies, as he that wynneth not: ⁊ he that buydeth, as he that shall not dwell therein: he that soweth, as one ȳ shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shall get no children: and they ȳ mary not, as the wyddowes: "⁊ therfore they ȳ laboure, laboure in vayne. For straungers shall reape their frutes, ⁊ spoyle their goodes, ouer throwe their houses, ⁊ take their childrē captiue, for in captiuyte ⁊ hunger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marchaundies with robbery, how longe decke they their cities, their houses, their possessions ⁊ personnes? the more wil I punysh them for their synnes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an whore enuyeth an honest woman, so shall righteousnes hate iniquyte, when she decketh hir self, and shall accuse her to hir face, when he cōmeth that defendeth, which shal make inqysiciō for all synne vpo earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquite shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousnes shal raigne amonge you.

F Let not the synner saye, that he hath not synned: for coles of fyre shal burne vpon his heade, which saith before the LORDE God ⁊ his glory: I haue not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all ȳ workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes ⁊ their hertes. For he spake but the worde: " let the earth be made, & it was made: let the heauē be made, and it was made. In his worde were ȳ starres made, & he knoweth the nombre of them. He searcheth the grounde of the depe, & the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, and what it conteyneth. He hath shut the see in the myddest of the waters, and with his worde hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heauen like a vowe, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made srynges of water, and poles vpō the toppe of the mountaynes, ȳ the floudes might poure downe from ȳ stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddest of ȳ body, and gaue him breth, life and vnderstandinge, yee and the sprete of ȳ Allmightie God, which made all thinges, and hath searched the groude of all the secretes of the earth.

Ⓢ He knoweth youre ymaginacions & inuēcions, and what ye thynke whan ye synne, & wolde hyde youre synnes. Therefore hath ȳ LORDE searched and sought out all youre workes, and he shal bewraye you all. And whan youre synnes are brought forth, ye shalbe ashamed before men, and youre owne synnes shalbe youre accusers in that daye. What wil ye do? Or how will ye hyde youre synnes before God and his angels? Beholde, God himself is the iudge, feare him, leaue of from youre synnes, and forget youre vnrighteousnesses, and medle nomore with them: so shal God lede you forth, and delyuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greate multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the ydle with Idols: and they that cōsent vnto them, shal be had in derision, laughed to scorne, & trodden vnder fote.

For vnto the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greate insurreccion vpon those that feare ȳ LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shall spare no man: they shall spoyle and waist soch as feare the LORDE, their goodes shall they take from them, and shute them out of their houses. Then shall it be knowne who are my chosen, & they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, saith the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at honde, but I wil delyuer you from the same. Be not ye afraied, dispayre not, for God is youre captayne.

Who so kepeth my cōmaundementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, & let not youre vnrighteousnesses be lift vp. Wo be vnto thē that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wickednesses: like as a felde is hedged in with buszshes, and the path therof couered with thornes, ȳ no man maye trauaile thorow: and so is he taken, and cast in the fyre, and brent.

TOBIAS was of the trybe and cite of Nephtali, which lyeth in the hye countrees of Galile aboue Naason the waye towarde the west, hauynge the cite of Sephet vpon the left syde.

Though he was taken presonner in the dayes of Salmanasar kynge of the Assirians, neuertheles beyng in captiuyte, he forsoke not f̄ waye of trueth: In so moch that what so euer he might gett, he parted it dailie with his felowpresoners & brethren, that were of his kynred. And though he were yonger thē all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behaue himself childishly in his workes. And when all the other wente to the golde calues, which ¹Ieroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Ierusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped ²ƿ LORDE God of Israel, ³faithfully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yere he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuertes. These and soch like thinges dyd he accordinge to the lawe of God, whan he was yet but yonge.

B But whan he was a man, he toke out of his owne trybe⁴ a wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp, to feare God, and to refraine from all synne.

Now whan he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kynred was come in captiuitie vnto Ninieue, what tyme as they all ate of the meates of the Heithē, he ⁵kepte his soule, and was neuer defyled in their meates. And for so much as he was myndefull of the LORDE in all his hert, God gaue him fauoure⁶ in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list.

C So wente Tobias vnto all them that were in prison,⁷ and comforted them, and gaue them wholesome exhortacions. And whan he came to Rages a cite of the Medes, hauynge ⁸* ten talētes of syluer (of ⁹ƿ thinges wherwith the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greate company of people of his kinred, one Gabelus (which was of his owne trybe) beyng in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer vnder an handwritinge.

After a longe season whan Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thorow out all his kynred, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of thē, as moch as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slaine, and that diligently.

D And whan Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of Iewry,¹⁰ (what tyme as God punyshed him for his blasphemy) ¹¹ƿ in his wrath slew many of the children of Israel, Tobias buried their bodies.¹² But whan it was tolde the kynge, he commaunded to slaye him, and toke awaye all his goodes. Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne ¹³ƿ with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The ij. Chapter.

AFTER these thinges vpon a solempne ¹⁴ƿ daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, ¹⁵ƿ sayde vnto his sonne: Go ¹⁶ƿ waye ¹⁷ƿ brynge hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make mery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, left the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarse, toke him ¹⁸ƿ bare him preuely in to his house, ¹⁹ƿ whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarse, he ate his meate with mournynge and feare, remembryng²⁰ ƿ wordes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: ²¹ƿ your hie feastes shalbe turned to sorowe and heuynes.

But whan ²²ƿ Sonne was downe, he wente his waye ²³ƿ buried him. Then all his neighbours reproued him, sayenge: It is not lōge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the²⁴ because of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the daunger of death, and buriest thou the deed againe? Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, ²⁵ƿ buried them at mydnight.

C It happened vpō a daye, that he had buried ²⁶ƿ deed, ²⁷ƿ was weery, came home, ²⁸ƿ layed him downe by the wall ²⁹ƿ slepte. And whyle he was a slepe, there fell downe vpō his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so ³⁰ƿ he was blynde. ³¹ƿ This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his paciēce, like as of holy Iob. For in so moch as he euer feared God from his youth vp, ³²ƿ kepte his commaundementes, he was not heuy against God, that the plage of blyndnes chaused vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

B For like as blessed Iob was had in derision of kynges, euen so was he laughed to scorne of his elders & kynsfolkes, which sayde vnto him: ^awhere is thy hope, for [¶] which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tobias rebuked thē, & spake: Saye not so, for we are the children of holy men,^b & loke for the life, which God shal geue vnto them, that neuer turne their beleue from him. Anna his wife wente daylie to the weeuynge worke, & loke what luyng she coude get with the labour of hir handes, she brought it. And it happened [¶] she toke a kyd and brought it home.

And whan hir huszband herd it crie, he sayde: loke [¶] it be not stollen,^c restore it agayne to the owners: for it is not lauffull for vs, to eate or to touch eny thinge of theft. Then was his wife angrie, and sayde: ^aNow is thy hope become vayne openly, & thy allmes dedes are manifest. With these & sōch like wordes dyd she cast him in the tethe.

The iij. Chapter.

A THEN Tobias toke it heuely, & with teares beganne to make his prayer, sayēge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgmētes are true, yee all [¶] wayes are mercy, faithfulness & iudgmēt.^f And now O LORDE be myndefull of me, & take no vengeance of my synnes, nether remembre my myszdedes ner [¶] myszdedes of my elders. For we haue not bene obediēt vnto [¶] cōmaundemētes, therefore are we spoyled, brought in to captiuyte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amōge whō thou hast scatred vs. And now O LORDE, [¶] iudgmentes are greates, for we haue not done acorde to [¶] cōmaundemētes, nether haue we walked innocētly before [¶]. And now O LORDE, deale with me accordinge to thy wil, & cōmaunde my sprete to be receaued in peace, for more expediēt were it for me to dye, thē to lyue.

B At the same tyme it happened, that Sara the daughter of Raguel at Rages a cite of [¶] Medes was slaundred of one of hir fathers handmaydes, namely, that she shulde haue had seuen huszbandes, which as soone as they were gone in vnto hir, were slayne of the deuell called Asmodeus. Therfore whan she reproued the mayden for hir faute, she answered her, sayenge: God let vs neuer se sonne ner daughter of the more vpon earth, thou kyller of thy huszbandes. Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne seuen men? At this voyce wēte Sara in to an hye chamber of hir house, and thre dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner drāke, but cōtynued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde deluy her from this rebuke.

C Vpon the thirde daye it chaunced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayesd the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of oure fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgeuest the synnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the O LORDE turne I my face, vnto the lift I vp myne eyes. I beseke [¶] O LORDE, lowse me out of the bondes of this rebuke, or els take me vtterly awaye frō [¶] earth. Thou knowest LORDE, that I neuer had desyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my soule cleane from all vnclenly lust. I haue not kepte company with those that passe their tyme in sporte, nether haue I made my self partaker with them that walke in lighte behauioure. Neuertheles an huszbande haue I consented to take, not for my pleasure, but in thy feare.

D Now peradventure either I haue bene vnworthy of them, or els were they vnmete for me, for thou happily hast kepte me to another huszband. For why? ^athy counsell is not in [¶] power of man. But who so euer loueth the and serueth the a right, is sure, that yf his life be tempted and proued, it stādeth in the tryenge: and yf he endure in pacience, he shal haue a rewarde and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) shal deluyr him: and yf his life be in chastenyng, that he shall haue leue to come vnto thy mercy.

For thou hast no pleasure in oure dampnacion: & why? after a storme thou makest [¶] wether fayre and still: after wepinge and heuynes thou geuest greates ioye. Thy name O God of Israel, be prayesd for euer. At the same tyme were both their prayers herde in the sight of the magesty of the Hyest God. And Raphael the holy angel of the LORDE was sent to helpe the both, whose prayers came together before God.

The iiii. Chapter.

A SO whā Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & sayde vnto him: My sonne, heare the wordes of my mouth, and laye thē in thine hert as a foundation. When God taketh away my soule, burie thou my body, & holde thy mother in honour all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughtest to remembre, what and how greate pears she suffred for y in hir wōbe. And whā she also hath fulfilled the tyme of hir life, bury her besyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy life, & bewarre, lest at any tyme thou cōsent vnto synne, and lest thou let slippe the commaundemētes of the LORDE oure God.

B Geue almes of thy goodes, and turne neuer thy face from the poore: and so shal it come to passe, that the face of the LORDE shal not be turned away from the. Be mercifull after y power. Yf thou hast moche, geue plēteously: yf thou hast litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For so gatherest thou thy self a good rewarde in the daye of necessite. For almes deluyeth *frō death, & suffreth not the soule to come in darcknes. A greate comforte is almes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it.

My sonne, kepe the well from all whordome, and (besyde thy wife) se that no faute be knowne of the. Let neuer pryde haue rule in thy mynde ner in thy worde, for in pryde beganne all destruccion.

C Who so euer worketh any thinge for the, immediatly geue him his hyre, and loke that thy hyred seruante wāgies remayne not by the ouer night. Loke that thou neuer do vnto another man, the thinge that thou woldst not another mā shulde do vnto the. Eate thy bred with the hongrie and poore, and couer the naked with thy clothes. Set thy bred and wyne vpon the buryall of the righteous, and do not thou eate and drynke therof with the synners. Axe euer counsell at y wyse.

Be allwaye thankfull vnto God, and beseke him, that he will ordre thy wayes, & that what so euer thou deuyst or takest in hande, it maye remayne in him. I certifie the also my sonne, that (whan thou wast yet but a bab) I deluyered ten talentes of syluer vnto Gabelus, at Rages a cite of the Medes, & his handwrytynge haue I by me. And therefore seke some meanes, how thou mayest come by him, & receaue of him y sayde weight of syluer, and geue him his handwrytynge agayne.

My sonne, be not afraied: trueth it is, we lede here a poore life: but greate good shall we haue, yf we feare God, and departe from all synne, and do well.

The b. Chapter.

THEN answered Tobias his father, & A sayde: father, all that thou hast commaunded me, wil I do, and that diligently. But how I shal requyre this money, I can not tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token shal I geue him? And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then his father answered him, and sayde: I haue his handwrytynge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediatly he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, & get the some faithfull man to go with y for an hyre, that thou mayest receaue y money, whyle I am yet lyuynge.

Then wente Tobias out, & vpon the strete B he founde a fayre yonge man stondeinge, gyrded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of y Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwelleth in Rages a cite of y Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egbathanis. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tary for me, tyll I haue tolde my father these thinges. Then wete Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At y which his father marueled, & prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

Now whan the angell came in, he saluted C him, and sayde: ioye be with the for euermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that syt here in darcknes, & se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonne to Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And when thou comest agayne, I shal paye the thy hyre. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: Axest thou after the kynred of an hyrelinge, or sekest thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of grete Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a grete kynred, but I praye y, be not displeased, that I desyre to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal I lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waie, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beare you company. So when they had prepared all thinges, y they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias bad his father & his mother fare well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now when they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: "The staff of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs.

Wolde God that money had neuer bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. Yf we had bene content with oure pouerte, this had bene grete riches vnto vs, that we sawe oure sonne here. Then sayde Tobias vnto her: wepe not, oure sonne shall come to vs agayne safe and sounde, & thine eyes shall se him. For I trust, that y good angell of God shal beare him copany, and ordre well all the thinges that he doth: so that he shal come to vs agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left of frō wepyng, & helde hir tonge.

The bi. Chapter.

SO Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and y first night they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fish to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was afrayed, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORDE, he commeth vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the cheke blade, and drawe him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vpō the londe, and the fish beganne to leape at his fete.

Thē sayde the angell vnto him: Take out the bowels of this fish, and as for the hert, the gall and the leuer, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for medicyne. Tobias dyd so, and rosted the fish, and they toke him with them in their iourney: the residue they salted, as much as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias axed the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye y brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fish, that thou hast bydden me kepe?

The angell answered him and sayde: Yf thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coales, the smoke therof dryeth awaye all maner of euell spretes, whether it be from man or from woman, so that from thence forth y same shal come nomore vnto them. The gall is good to anyonte or to strake y eyes withall, where as there is eny blemish in them, so shal they be whole.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: where wilt thou that we remayne? The angell answered and saide: Here is a nye kinsman of thine, one Raguel by name, which hath a daughter called Sara, & hath nether sonne ner daughter but her. All his good belogeth vnto the, and thou must mary his daughter: and therefore desyre her at her father, and he shal geue her the to wife. Then answered Tobias & sayde: As I vnderstonde, she hath bene married vnto seuen huszbandes, and they all are deed: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell slew them. I am afrayed therefore, lest soch thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it came to passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde brynge thē in their age with sorow to their graues.

Then sayde y angell Raphael vnto him: Heare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of soch a fashiō, that they shut God out from thē and from their hert, and geue them selues to their owne lust, euen as it were an horse and Moole, which haue no vnderstandinge: vpon soch hath y^e deuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, witholde thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but vnto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shalbe dryūe awaye. The secōde night shalt thou be receaued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalt thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shalbe borne of you. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desyre of children, then for eny fleshy lust: that in the sede of Abraham thou mayest optayne the blessinge in children.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel loked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good brethren? They saide: Of the trybe of Nephtali, out of the captiuyte of Ninieue. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moche good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou axest, is this yonge mā's father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the neck and kyssed him, and sayde: Gods blessinge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

Now whā they had talked together, Raguel bad kyll a wether, and to make a feast. And whā he prayed thē to sytt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate ner drinke here this daye, excepte thou first graunte me my peticion, & promyse me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astonnyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seuen men, that wēte in vnto her: and he beganne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like maner.

And whyle he stode so in doute, and gaue

the yonge man no answer, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, belogeth thy daughter to wife, therefore might none other haue her.

The sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be married in hir owne kynred, accordinge to the lawe of Moses.^d And now dowte thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the right hāde of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abrahā, the God of Isaac and the God of Iacob be with you, ioynē you together, and fulfill his blessinge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wrytinge of the mariage. And then made they mery, and prayed God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of goode cheare my daughter, the LORDE of heauen geue the ioye, for the heynesse that thou hast suffred.

The viij. Chapter.

NOW after y^e they had supped, they brought the yōge man in to her. Thē thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a pece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hyer Egipte. Thē spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Vp Sara, let vs make oure prayer vnto God to daye, tomorrow, and ouermorrow: for these thre nightes wil we reconyle oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioynē together in y^e deuty of mariage. For we are the children of holy men, and we maye not come together as the Heithen, y^e knowe not God.

Then stode they vp both together, and besought God earnestly, y^e he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of oure fathers, praysed be thou of heauē & earth of the see, welles, & floudes, & of all the creatures that be therein. Thou maydest Adam^e of the mould of the earth, & gauest him Eua for an helper. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of children, in whom thy name be blessed for euer. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age.

C And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruantes, and they wete with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peraduecture, as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wente in vnto her. Now whā they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydēs, to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whan she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepyng together. And so she came agayne, & brought good tydings. D Then Raguel and Anna his wife praysed y LORDE, and sayde: Prayed be thou o LORDE God of Israel, For it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealte mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause thē to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offere the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, y thou onely art God in all the earth.

E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruantes, to fylle the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, & to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meate, to soch as wente by y waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, & meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remayne with him two weekes. As for all the good y he had, he gaue Tobias y one half of it, and made his wrytinge, that the half which remayned, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death.

The ix. Chapter.

A THEN Tobias called vnto him the angell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vnto my wordes: Yf I shulde geue myself to be y seruauant, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Neuertheles I besseke the, that thou wylt take the beastes and the seruantes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Medes, and delyuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my mariage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father telleth y dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath requyred me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruantes, and two Camels, & wente vnto Rages the cite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytyng, & receaued all y money. He tolde him also of Tobias y sonne of Toby, how all thiges had happened, & caused him to come with him to y mariage. Now whan he came in to the house of Raguel, he foude Tobias syttinge at y table: & he leape vp, & they kyssed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and prayed God, and sayde: the blessynge of the God of Israel haue thou, for thou art the sonne of a right verteous & iust man, & of one y feareth God, & geueth greate allmes. And blessynge haue y wife, and youre elders, that ye maye se youre children, and youre childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that youre sede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth worlde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the mariage.

The x. Chapter.

NOW whyle yōge Tobias made lōge tariance by reason of y mariage, his father was full of care and heuynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonne tarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be keppe so longe there? Peraduerture Gabelus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begāne he to be very soroufull, he & Anna his wife with him, & beganne to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appoynted. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a straunge countre, thou light of oure eyes, thou staff of oure age, thou comforte of oure life, "thou hope of oure generation? Seinge all þy thinges that we haue are onely in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye from vs.

B Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and be not discomforted, oure sonne is whole and sounde: the man þy we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuertheles she might in no wyse be cōforted: but daylie wente out, looked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come againe: that (yf it were possible) she might se him cōmyng afafe of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne ī lawe: O tary here, and I shall sende a messaūger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him þy thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.

C So whan Raguel prayed Tobias with many wordes, ⁊ he wolde in no wyse heare him, he deluyered Sara vnto him, ⁊ the half parte of all his good: in seruantes and handmaydēs, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in youre iourney, and brynge you forth safe ⁊ sounde, that ye maye fynde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afore I dye.

So the elders embraced their daughter, kyssed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honour hir father and mother in lawe, to loue hir huszbande, to rule well hir huszsholde, to kepe hir house in good ordre, and to shew hir self faultlesse.

The xi. Chapter.

A NOW as they were goinge homewarde againe, vpon þy xj. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye towarde Ninieue. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therefore yf it please the, we two wyl go before, and let the husholde with thy wife and þy catell come soft ⁊ fairly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon þy toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

And whyle she was waytinge there for his cōmyng, she looked afafe of, and anone she perceaued hir sonne comminge, and ranne and tolde hir huszbande, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne commeth. And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou comest in to the house, immediatly worships the LORDE thy God, and geue thanks vnto him: then go to thy father, and kyss him, ⁊ strake his eyes ouer with the gall of þy fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyce at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene with them in their iourney, rāne before, and came as a messaūger, and wagged with his tayle for gladnesse.

So þy blynde father arose, and beganne to renne, and stombled with his fete, and gaue a seruauant his hande, ranne to mete his sonne, receaued him, and kyssed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped ⁊ thanked God, they satt downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and taryed half an houre, and then beganne the blemysh to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte szkynne of an egg: which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

Then they prayed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thanks, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all þy husholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Nabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, ⁊ reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so for þy space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerichone.

The xij. Chapter.

A THE Tobias called his sonne vnto him ⁊ sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what rewarde shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he droue the euell sprete from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to hir father and mother: he helyuered me, that I was not deuoured of the fish, he hath made the to se the light of heauen, yee we all haue receaued greate good of him. How shulde we worthely deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happlie he wil voutsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him, toke him asyde, and beganne to praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them:
 Prayse ⁊ God of heauen, and geue thanks vnto him before all men luyng, for he hath shewed his mercy * vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Kynges secreete, but to shew and to prayse ⁊ workes of God, it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fastinge, and to geue almes is better, then to hoorde vp treasures of golde. ^a For almes delyuereth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to fynde euerlastinge life. But they that do synne and vnrightheousnes, are ⁊ enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherefore I tell you the trueth, and wyll hyde nothinge from you. ^b Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and ledest thy dynner, and hydest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the night, I offered thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. ^c And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the,
 and to delyuer Sara ⁊ sonnes wife from the euell sprete. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seven that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were sore afraied,

* Some rede, vnto you.

and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces vnto the grounde. Then sayde the angell:
 Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene with you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thanks vnto him.

^d You thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is invisible, and drynke that can not be sene of men.

Now therefore is ⁊ tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his won-derous workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes, he was taken awaye out of their sight, so ⁊ they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of thre houres, and prayed God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wōderous workes.

The xij. Chapter.

THEN olde Tobias opened his mouth, and prayed the LORDE and sayde:
 Greate art thou o LORDE for euermore, and thy kyngdome worlde without ende: for thou scourgest and healest, thou ledest vnto hell, and bryngest out agayne, and there is none ⁊ maye escape thy hande. O geue thanks vnto ⁊ LORDE ye children of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the Heithē.
 For amonge the Heithen which knowe him not hath he scatred you, to the intēt that ye shulde shew forth his maruelous workes: ⁊ cause them for to knowe, that there is none other God allmightie but he. He hath chastened vs for oure mysdedes, and for his owne mercy sake shal he saue vs.

Considere then, how he hath dealt with you, ⁊ prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euerlastinge kyng in youre workes.

I wil prayse him euen in the londe of my captiuyte, for he hath shewed his maiesty vnto a synfull people. Turne you therefore O ye synners, and do rightheousnes before God, and be ye sure, that he wyl shew his mercy vpon you. As for me ⁊ my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his chosen, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto him. ^e O Ierusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punyshed the for the workes of thine owne handes. O prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, ⁊

geue thanks to the euerlastinge God, that he maye builde vp his tabernacle agayne in y, that he maye call agayne vnto the, all such as be in captiuyte, and that thou mayest haue ioye for euermore. ^aWith a fayre light shalt thou shyne, ^qall y endes of y worlde shal honour the. ^bThe people shal come vnto the from farre, they shal bringe gites, and worshipe y LORDE in the, and thy londe shal they haue for a Sanctuary, for they shal call vpon the greate name in the.

^cCursed shal they be that despyse the, ^qall they that blasphem the, shal be condempned: but blessed shal they be, y buylde the vp. As for the, thou shalt reioyse in y childre, for they all shalbe blessed, and gathered together vnto the LORDE. Blessed are they all y loue y, and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE o my soule, for the LORDE oure God hath deliuered his cite Ierusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counte my self happie, yf my sede remayne to se y clearnes of Ierusalē.

The gates of Ierusalem shalbe buylde with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the cōpase of hir walles with precious stones.^c All hir stretes shalbe paved with whyte Marble stone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be sunge. Prayed be y LORDE, which hath exalted her, y his kyngdome maye be vpon her for euermore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkynge.

The xiiij. Chapter.

^aAND after that Tobias had gottē his sight agayne,^d he lyued two and xl. yeares, ^qsawe his childers children. Now whan he was an hundreth and two yeaere olde, he dyed, ^qwas buried honorably in Niniue. For whan he was sixe and fiftie yeaeres of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was three score yeaere olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, and departed in peace.

But in y^b houre of his death he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, and seuen yonge springaldes his sonnes children, and sayde vnto them: The destruccion of Niniue is at hande,^e for the word of the LORDE can not fayle, and oure brethren that are scatred out of the londe of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole londe of it that hath bene waist, shalbe fylled:^f and the house of God that was brent in it, shalbe buylde agayne, ^qall such as feare God shall returne thither: the Heithen also shal forsake their Idols, ^qcome to Ierusalem, and dwell there, and all the kynges of the earth shalbe glad of her, and worshipe the LORDE God of Israel.

And therefore my children, heare youre ^cfather: Serue the LORDE in faithfulness,^g seke after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Commaunde youre children y they do right, geue allmes, be myndefull of God, and euer to be thankfull vnto him in trueth and with all their power. Heare me therfore my childre, and abyde not here: but in what daye so euer ye haue buried youre mother besyde me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wickednes of it shal brynge it to destruccion and ende.

After y^d death of his mother, Tobias departed away from Niniue, with his wife and children, and with his childers children, ^qcame agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of thē. And he closed their eyes, and was heyre vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fifth generacion and childers childre. And whan he was xcix. yeaere of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynsfolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy consersacion: so that they were loued ^qaccepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the londe.

The first Chapter.

ARPHAXAT the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his dominion, & buylded a noble ströge cite, which he called Egbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuētie cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundreth cubites hye. But vpon the foure corners euery syde was twentie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charettes.

So in y twelfth yere of his raigne it happened, that Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assirians (which raigned in the greate cite of Ninieue) fought agaynst Arphaxat, and ouercame hī in y greate felde called Ragau, besyde Euphrates and Tigris and Iadason in the felde of Erioth the kinge of the Elikes.

Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the Heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greate felde of Esz-drelō, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Iordane vnto Ierusalem and the whole londe of Iesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all these dyd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of y Assirians sende messaungers. But they all with one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptie, and put the awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciō at all those londes, and sware by his trone & by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

The ij. Chapter.

IN the xiiij. yere of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xxij. daye of y first moneth, it was deuysed in the courte of Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assiriās, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all y elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secrete counsell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his domynion. Now when they were all content with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kinge called Holofernes the chefe captayne of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despysed my commaundement. ^aThou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

Then Holofernes called together all the captaynes & rulers of all the power in Assiria, and mustred the soudyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundreth and twētye thousande fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousande archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinance sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oxen, and small catell, and y without nombre. He caused corne to be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Moch golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they couered the grounde of the lande, like the gres-hoppers.

And when he was gone past the borders of the Assirians, he came towarde the greate mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne euery ströge holde. As for y welthy citie of Melothus, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childrē of Tharsis and the Ismaelites, which laye towarde the wyldernes and vpon the south syde of y londe of Chelon. He went ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye cities that were there, from the broke of Mambre tyll a man come to the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Iaphet towarde the south. He caried awaye all the Madianites, and spoyled all their goodes: & who so euer withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of haruest, and brent vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vynes to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in y earth.

The iij. Chapter.

SO the kynges & prynces of all cities & ^alondes sent their Embassitours: namely,

^a 1 Mac. 1. a.^b Eze. 9. b.

they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal ⁊ Lybia ⁊ Celicia, which came to Holofernes, ⁊ sayde: Let thy wrath cease towarde us:
 It is better for vs to serue the greate kynge Nabuchodonosor with oure lyues, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All oure cities and possessions, all mountaynes and hilles, all felde, greate and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all oure goodes and houtholdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subieccion be it altogether. We oure selues also and oure children wylbe thyne owne, come vnto vs a peceable lorde, and vse oure seruyce at thy pleasure.

B Then came Holofernes downe from the mountaynes with horsemē ⁊ greate power, and conquered all stronge fenced cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, ⁊ soch as were mete for ⁊ warre, to helpe him. There came soch a feare also vpon those countrees, that the indwellers of all the cities, the prynces and rulers ⁊ the people together, wēte forth to mete him as he came, ⁊ receaued him honorably with garlandes ⁊ torches, with daunces, tabrettes and pipes.

C Neuertheles though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomak:
 but he destroyed their cities, ⁊ hewed downe their woddos. For Nabuchodonosor the kynge had commaunded him, that he shulde rote out all the goddes of the londe: to ⁊ intent that he onely might be called and taken for God, of the nacions which Holofernes with his power brought vnder him. So wente he thorow Syria Sobal, and thorow all Appamia, and all Mesopotamia, came to the Idumeans in the lode of Gabaa and Septopoli, and toke their cities, and remayned there thirtie dayes, wherin he caused all the whole multitude of his hoost to be gathered together.

The iiii. Chapter.

A WHAN the children of Israel ⁊ dwelt in Iewry herde this, they were sore afraied of him. There came soch tremblinge also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed he shulde do vnto the cite of Ierusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities ⁊ their temples. So they sent in to all Samaria rōude aboute vnto

Iericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared corne for them agaynst the battayll.

Eliachim also ⁊ prest wrote vnto all the that dwelt towarde Eszdrelon (which lyeth ouer agaynst ⁊ greate felde by Dotha Im) ⁊ vnto all those by whom men might haue passage vnto them, that they shulde take in the wayes of the mountaynes, wherby there might be eny waye and passage to Ierusalem, ⁊ ⁊ they shulde holde diligent watch, where eny strate waye was betwixte ⁊ moūtaynes.
 And the children of Israel dyd, as Eliachim the prest of the LORDE had commaunded them. And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the aluter of the LORDE with an hayrie clothe. And with one acorde cried they vnto the LORDE God of Israel, that their children shulde not be geuen in to a pray, and their wyues in to a spoyle, ⁊ their cities shulde not be layed waist, ⁊ ⁊ their Sanctuary shulde not be vnhalowed, and so they to be a shame and rebuke vnto the Heithen.

C Then Eliachim the hye prest of the LORDE wente rōude aboute all Israel, and spake vnto them, sayenge: Be ye sure, ⁊ the LORDE wil heare youre peticions, yf ye cō-tynue stedfast in fastinges and prayers in ⁊ sight of the LORDE. Remembre Moses the seruante of the LORDE, which ouer-threw ⁊ Amalechites (that trusted in their might ⁊ power, in their hoost, in their shildes, in their charettes ⁊ horsmen) not with weapens, but with holy prayers. Euen so shal all the enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer before the LORDE: In so moch that they which offred brent sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offred the offringes vnto ⁊ LORDE, beyng arrayed in hayrie clothes, and had aszshes vpon their heades. And they all besought God from their whole hert, ⁊ he wolde vyset his people of Israel.

The v. Chapter.

A ND worde came to Holofernes the prynce of the warres of the Assyriās, ⁊ the childre of Israel prepared them selues to make resistance, & how they had stopped the wayes betwixte the mountaynes. Then was he exceddinge wroth, & called all the prynces of Moab, & the captaynes of Ammon, & sayde vnto them: Tell me, what people is this, [¶] kepeth in the mountaynes? Or what maner of cities are they? What is their power? Or what maner of hoost haue they? Who is their captayne? And why do they [¶]despyse vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to mete vs, [¶] they might receaue vs with peace?

Then Achior the [¶]captayne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Syr, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the trueth before the concernynge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

B This people is of the generacion of the Caldees, they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe [¶] goddesses of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, & so forsoke they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddesses) and worshipped one God, that made heauē and earth: which also commaunded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now when there came a deth^d in to [¶] whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, & there they dwelt foure hundreth yeares, in [¶] which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And when the kynge of Egipte oppressed them,^e and subdued thē in buyldinge of his cities with makynge of claye & brick, they cried vnto God their LORDE, which punished the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plagues.

C Now when the kynge of Egipte let thē go their waye,^f & the plage ceased, & then folowed after thē, to take thē, & to bryngē the agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauē opened [¶] see, so [¶] the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, & these wente thorow the botome of the see drye shod. In the which place whā an innumerable people of the Egipcians folowed vpon them, they were so ouerwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell thē that came after, how it happened.

D So when this people was passed thorow the reed see, they came in to the wildernes of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, & where the sonne of mā had neuer rested. [¶] There were [¶] bytter waters made swete for thē, that they might drynke, & xl. yeares had they meate from heauē. Where so euer they wente (without bowe & arowe, without bukler or swerde) their God fought for thē, & caused thē to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, excepte it were so, [¶] they departed vnfaitfully from [¶] worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped^d eny other besyde their God, he gaue them ouer to be spoyled, to be slayne, & to be put to confucion. Neuertheles as oft as they were sorry for departyng from the worships of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power & strēth to withstōde their enemies.

E Morouer they slew the kynge of the Canaanites, Iebusites, Pherezites, Ethites, Euites & Amorites,ⁱ & all [¶] mightie in Hesebon, & toke their lōdes & cities in possession: and so longe as they synned not in [¶] sight of their God, it wētē well with them, for their God hateth vnrighteousnesse. For in tymes past when they wente out of [¶] waye,^k which God had geuen them, [¶] they shulde walke in it, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, & many of them were caried awaye presoners into a straunge cōtre. But now lately they haue turned thē selues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, & are come together agayne^l out of the countrees where they were scatred abrode: and thus haue they cōquered these mountaynes & dwell therein: & as for Ierusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it agayne in possession.

F And therefore my lorde, make diligēt inquisition, yf this people haue done wickednesse in the sight of their God, then let vs go vp agaynst them, for doutles their God shal deliuer them in to thy handes, & subdue them vnto [¶] power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstande them, for their God shal defende thē,^m & so shall we be a shame to all [¶] worlde.

Now when Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes were wroth, & thought to slaye him, & sayde one to another: what is he this, which darre saie, y^e y^e childrē of Israel are able to withstōde Nabuchodonosor the kynge & his hoost? where as they are an vnwapened people, without strength or vnderstōdinge of y^e fettes of warre? That Achior therefore maye knowe, y^e he hath disceaued vs, we wil go vp in to y^e moũtaynes: & whan the mightie men of thē are taken, he also shalbe stickte with the swerde, y^e all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The vi. Chapter.

SO whan they had left of speakinge, Holofernes toke sore indignacion, & sayde vnto Achior. For so moch as thou hast prophecied vnto vs, sayenge: that the people of Israel "shalbe defended of their God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. Yee whan we slaye them all as one man, ^bthou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, & all Israel shal be destroyed with the, & thē shalt thou fele, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORDE of the whole earth. Thē shal the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow thy sydes, & thou shalt fall downe stickte amonge the wounded of Israel, & shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be vtterly destroyed with thē. But yf thou thynkest thy prophecy to be true, why dost thou then chaunge thy coloure? why art thou afayed? Thynkest thou that my wordes are not able to be per-133 fourmed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt fele these thinges with thē, beholde, from this houre forth wyll I sende the vnto yonder people, that whan the punyshment of my swerde (which they haue worthely deserued) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punyshed with them.

So Holofernes cōmaunded his seruantes to take Achior, & to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to delyuer him in to the handes of the children of Israel. Then Holofernes seruantes toke him, & wete thorow the playne felde. But whan they drew nye vnto the mountaynes, the slynge casters came out agaynst them: Neuertheles they gat them awaye by the syde of the mountayne, & bounde Achior hand & fote to a tre, & so left him bounde with wythies, & turned agayne vnto their lorde.

Notwithstōdinge the children of Israel wente downe frō Bethulia, came vnto him, lowsed him, brought him to Bethulia, set him in the myddest of the people, and axed him what the matter was, that the Assiriās had left him bounde.

Osias the sonne of Micha of the trybe of Symeon, & Charmim (which is also called Gothoniell) were the pryncipall rulers at the same tyme. Now whan Achior stode in the myddest of the Senatours, & before thē all, he tolde them, ^cwhat answere he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he axed him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, & how Holofernes himself was wroth, & cōmaunded him for the same cause to be delyuered vnto y^e Israelites: that whan he ouercame the childrē of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: ^d"the God of heauen is their defender.

And whā Achior had playnely tolde out all these thinges, all the people fell downe vpon their faces, prayinge the LORDE, and poured out their prayers together vnto the LORDE, with a generall complaynte & wepyng, & sayde: O LORDE God of heauen & earth, beholde their pryde, & loke vpon oure lowlynes, & cōsidre how it standeth with thy sayntes, & make it to be knowne, y^e thou forsakest not those, which holde them fast by the, & how y^e thou bringest thē lowe, y^e presume of thē selues, & make their boast in their owne strength. So whan the wepyng and prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they cōforted Achior, sayge: the God of oure fathers, whose power & strength thou hast praysed, shall so rewarde the, y^e thou shalt rather se their destruccion. Whan y^e LORDE oure God then shall geue his seruantes this liberte, God be with the also amonge vs: so y^e if it please y^e, thou with thyne mayest dwell with vs.

Now whan Osias had ended the counsell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greate supper, called all the elders to it, & so they refrezshed them selues after the fastinge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and besought the God of Israel for helpe.

The vij. Chapter.

THE next daye Holofernes commaunded his hoost, to go vp agaynst Bethulia. There were ^aan C. & xx. thousande fightinge men on fote, & two & twentie thousande horsmē, besyde the preparynge of them ^y were wonne, & came to them on euery syde out of the countrees & cities which he had takē. All these prepared them selues vnto the battayll agaynst the Israelites, and came on by the hyl syde, vnto the topp that loketh ouer agaynst Dothaim, from the place which is called Belma, vnto Chelmon ^y lyeth towardes Eszdrelon.

Now whan the childrē of Israel sawe so greate a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon ^y ground, strowed aszshes vpon their heades, & prayed with one acorde, ^y the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapens, & sat betwixte the mountaynes in ^y narrow place, & kepte the waye daye & night. But wyle Holofernes was goinge aboute, he founde the water springe, which from the south syde was conueyed in to the cite by a condyte: this cōmaunded he to be directe another waye, & to cut their condite in sunder. There were welles also not farre from the walles, which they vsed secretly, more for pleasure then for necessite.

Then wente the Ammonites & the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The children of Israel trust nether in speare ner arowe, but haue taken in, and kepe the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest ouercome them therefore without ^y strykyng of eny battayll, sett mē to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye thē without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wōne, for so moch as it lieth in the mōū-taynes. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and he ^bset an hundred men at euery well rounde aboute.

And whan this watch had endured twentie dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, fayled them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in ^y whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge personnes and children all vnto Osias, and sayde all with one voyce: 'God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the kynge of the Assirians, therfore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirste and greate destruccion. Therefore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto ^y people of Holofernes: for better it is ^y we be captyue and prayse the LORDE with oure lyues, then to be slayne and perishe, and to be laughed to scorne & shamed of euery man whan we se oure wyues and children dye before oure eyes. We take heauen & earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which punysheth vs accordinge to the deseruyng of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, ^y ye geue vp the cite now in to ^y power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

Whan they had spokē out these wordes, There was a greate wepyng and howlyng in the whole congregacion, and that of euery man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voice, sayenge: we haue synned with oure fathers, ^dwe haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou ^y art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punish oure vnrighteousnes with thine owne scourge, and geue not those ouer that knowlege the, vnto a people which knoweth the not, lest they saye amonge the Heithen: 'where is their God?

And whan they were so weery with this crienge and wepyng, that they helde their tinges, Osias stode vp with watrye eyes, and sayde: 'O take good hertes vnto you (deare brethren) and be of good cheare, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORDE: peraduenture he shal cut awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

The viij. Chapter.

AND it happened whan these wordes came to the eares of Iudith a wyddow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Idox, the sonne of Ioseph, the sonne of Osias, the sonne of Elai, [¶] sonne of Iammor, the sonne of Iedeon, the sonne of Raphoim, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Melchia, the sonne of Euam, [¶] sonne of Nathania, the sonne of Salathiel, [¶] sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Ruben. And hir huszbande was called Manasses, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye haruest. For whyle he was byndinge [¶] sheeues together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was Iudith his desolate wyddow three yeares [¶] six monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made herself a preuy chambre, where she dwelt, beyng closed in with hir maydēs. She ware a smock of hayre, and fasted all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones [¶] the solempne dayes that the people of Israel kepte. She was a very fayre and beutyfull personne. Hyr husbando also had lefte her greate riches, a plenteous housholde, greate vnmoueable possessions and many catell. This Iudith was a woman of a very good reporte with euery one, for she feared the LORDE greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell worde of her.

Whā this Iudith herde, how Osias had promised the people, ^athat after the fyfthe daye he wolde geue vp [¶] cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chambri and Charmin: and whan they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherin Osias hath consented, [¶] yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians? What are ye, that ye tempte the LORDE? This deuycce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wrath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of [¶] LORDE a tyme, [¶] appoynte him a daye after youre wyll?

C Neuertheles for so moch as the LORDE is pacient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pouring out teares, and besekynge him of grace. ^bFor God threateneth not as a mā, nether wyll he be prouoked vnto wrath as the children of men. And therfore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a meke sprete, and with wepyng eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs accordinge to his owne wyll and mercy: that like as oure hert is now vexed, [¶] brought lowe thorow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thorow his grace: in so moch as we folowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which forsoke their God, [¶] worshipped other goddes: [¶] for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled [¶] brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for whose cōforte let vs tarry with mekenesse. He shall requyre and make [¶] inquisition for oure bloude, from the vexacions of oure enemies: he shal bryng downe all the Heithen, that ryse vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, euē the LORDE oure God.

Therfore deare brethren, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all [¶] people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondesth, lift vp their hertes with youre exortacion, [¶] they maye call to remembrance, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, [¶] they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a right. They ought to remēbre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thorow many tribulations, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was [¶] Isaac, so was Iacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thorow many troubles, were fōude stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaued not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put thē selues [¶] forth with vnpaciency and murmuryng agaynst God, perished of the destroyer, and were slayne of serpentes. And therfore shulde not we undertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to conside, that all these punyshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes [¶] myszdedes: Beleuynge also, that this correccion commeth vnto vs (as to the [¶] seruantes of God) for amendment, and not for oure destruction.

Then sayde Osias [¶] the elders vnto Iudith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no mā can reprove thy wordes. Praie thou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy womā, and fearest God. And Iudith sayde vnto them: "Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my counsell and deuce, yf it be of God: and beseke God, that he wyll brynge my counsell to a good ende.

Thus haue I deuysed: "Ye shal stōde this night before the porte, and I wyll go forth with Abra my maydē: Praye ye therefore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remēbre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, axe ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE youre God for me. Then Osias the prynce of the people of Iuda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne.

The ix. Chapter.

NOW whā they were gone their way, Iudith wente in to hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed aszhes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my father "Symeon, which gauest him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that vsed violence and wilfulness, and that rauyshed ♀ vyrgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gauest their wiues in to a praye, and their daughters in to captiuyte, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruantes, which bare a zeale vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I beseke ♀. For thou hast done all thinges from the begynnyng, and loke what thou hast taken in hande and deuysed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, & thy iudgements are done in thy euerlasting fore knowlege. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure somtyme to loke vpon the hoost of the "Egipcians, when they beyng weapened, persecuted thy seruantes, & put their trust in their charettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokest vpon their hoost, casting a thicke darcknes before them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters ouerwhelmed them.

Euē so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in ♀ power and multitude of their men of warre, in their charettes, "arowes & speares, and knowe not, that thou onely art oure God, which destroyest warres from the begynnyng, and that thou art the LORDE. O lift vp thine arme now like as euer from ♀ begynnyng, and in thy power brynge their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, ♀ they wyl vnhalowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waist the tabernacle of thy name, and to cast downe the horne of thine aluter with their swerde. Brynge to passe (O LORDE) ♀ the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and ♀ thou mayest smyte him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strength, and that I maye destroye him.

This shal brynge thy name an euerlasting remēbraunce, yf the hande of a woman "ouerthrowe him. For thy power (O LORDE) stondest not in ♀ power of men, nether hast thou eny pleasure in the strēth of horses. There was neuer proude personne that pleased the, but in the prayer of the humble and meke hath thy pleasure bene euermore.

O thou God of the heauens, thou maker of the waters, and LORDE of all creatures, heare me poore woman, callynge vpon the, and puttyng my trust in thy mercy. Remembre thy "couenaunt O LORDE, and mynister wordes in my mouth, & stablysh this deuce in my hert, that thy house maye contynue still in holynes, and that all the Heithen maye knowe and vnderstōde, that thou art God, and that there is none other but thou.

The x. Chapter.

AND whan she had left of cryenge vnto the LORDE, she rose vp from the place, where she had lyen flat before the LORDE, and called hir mayde, wente downe in to hir house, layed ♀ hayrie cloth from her, "put of the garmentes of hir wyddowhode, waszshed hir body, anoynted hir self with precious thinges of swete sauoure, broyded and plated hir hayre, sett an hooue vpon hir heade, and put on soch apparell as belongeth vnto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armettes, spanges, earynges, fynger rynges, and deckte herself with all hir best araye.

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beutyte and fayrnesse (for all this deckinge of hir self was not done for eny voluptuousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therefore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye) so ŷ she was exceadinge amyable and wel fauoured in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bred & chese, and wente hir waye.

B Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, & marueled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they axed no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of oure fathers geue ŷ his grace, and with his power perfourme all the deuyce of thy hert: that Ierusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy & righteous. And all they ŷ were there, sayde with one voyce: so be it, so be it. Iudith made hir prayer vnto ŷ LORDE, & wente out at ŷ porte, she & hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spyes of ŷ Assirians met with her, and toke her, sayenge: whence comest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of ŷ Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shalbe geuē vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scorne to yelde thē selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in youre sight. Therefore haue I deuyced by my self after this maner: I wyll go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyll shew him, how he maye come by them, and wynde them, so that not one man of his hoost shall perish.

C And whan these men had herde hir wordes, & considered hir fayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye) & sayde vnto her: Thou hast saued thy life by fyndinge oute this deuyce, ŷ thou woldest come downe to oure lorde: & be thou sure, that whā thou comest vnto him, he shal in-treate the well, & thou shalt please him at ŷ hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes payulion, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was ouercome & taken with hir bewtye. Then saide his seruantes: who wolde despyse ŷ people of ŷ Iewes, ŷ haue so fayre wemē? Shulde we not by reason fight against thē for these? So whā Iudith sawe Holofernes syttinge in a canapye, ŷ was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragde and precious stones, she loked fast vpō him, & fell downe vpō the earth. And Holofernes seruantes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wolde serue Nabuchodonosor the kyng. As for thy people, yf they had not despyed me, I shulde not haue lift vp a speare agaynst thē. But tell me now, what is the cause ŷ thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Iudith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after ŷ wordes of thy hād-mayden, the LORDE shall brynge thy matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe lyueth, & as truly as his power lyueth, which is in the to the punyshment of all men that go wronge, all men shall not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the beestes also of ŷ felde. For all people speake of thy prudēt actiuyte, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commēded in all londes.

B The thinge is manifest also, that Achior spake, and it is wel knowne, what thou commaundedst to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl deliuer them ouer vnto the enemye. And for so moch as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are sore afayed of the. They suffre greate hunger also, & for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Morouer, they are appointed to slaye all their catell, that they maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornamentes of their God (which he hath forbyddē thē to touch) for corne, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, y^e they must nedes be destroyed. Which when I thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto y^e, to shew the these thinges. For I thy handmayden worshipec God euen here now besyde the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wil make my praiser vnto God, and he shal tell me, when he wyl rewarde thē their synne: then shal I come and shew the, & brynge the thorow the myddest of Ierusalem, so that thou shalt haue all y^e people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so much as one dogg barck agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouydence of God: and for so much as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

These wordes pleased Holofernes and all his seruantes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not soch a woman vpon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so much as thy promyse is good, yf thy God perfourme it vnto me, he shall be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The xij. Chapter.

THEN commaunded he her to go in, where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue hyr dwellynge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her frō his table. Iudith answered him, and sayde: "As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of such as I haue brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Yf these thinges that thou hast brought with the fayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Iudith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shall not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I haue deuyd.

So his seruantes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appoynted. And as she was goinge in, she desyred that she might haue leue to go forth by night & before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wēte forth in to the valley of Bethulia, and wasshed herself in the well water. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the delyueraunce of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the euenynge.

Vpon y^e fourth daye it happened, y^e Holofernes made a costly supper vnto his seruantes, and sayde vnto Vagao his chamberlayne: Go thy waye, and counsell this Hebruesse, that she maye be wyllynge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to scorne, that she were come from him vnmedled withall.

Then wente Vagao vnto Iudith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be afraied, to come in to my lorde, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Iudith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye my lorde naye? what so euer is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as long as I lyue.

So she stode vp, and deckte herself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he brent in desyre towardes her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and sytt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Iudith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is meryer to daye, than euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and dranke before him, the thinges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery with her, and dranke more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A NOW when it was late in the night, his seruauntes made haist, euery mā to his lodginge. And Vagao shutt the chamber dores, and wente his waye, for they were all ouerladen with wyne.^a So was Iudith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkennes fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Iudith hir mayden, to stōde without before the dore, and to wayte. And Iudith stode before the bed, makyng her prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strength me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Ierusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye perfourme the thinge, which I haue deuyded thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

B And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lōwsd the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his heade, and sayde: Strength me o LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the neck, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediately she gat her forth, and deluyered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Iudith cried afarre of vnto ȝ watchmen vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in Israel. And whan they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle ȝ greate, yonge ȝ olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered aboute hir euerichone: but she wente vp in to an hye place, and caused sylence to be proclaimed.

C Whan euery man now helde his tonge, Iudith sayde: O prayse the LORDE oure God, for he hath not despyed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me his honde mayden he hath perfourmed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assiriās, and this is the canapy, wherin he laye in his dronkennes: where the LORDE oure God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE lyueth, his angell hath kepte me, goinge thither, remayninge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynges of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: ȝ ȝ with greate victory, so that I am escaped, and ye deluyered. O geue thanks vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.^b

So they praysed the LORDE altogether, and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought oure enemies to naught.

And Ozias ȝ chefe ruler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all wemen vpon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded ȝ a right to wounde and to smyte of the heade of the captayne of oure enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shall neuer come out of the mouth of mē, which shal all waye remembre ȝ power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in ieoperdy, consideringe the anguysh and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God oure LORDE. And all the people sayde: Amē, Amen.

Achior also was called, ȝ he came. Then sayde Iudith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whō thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be auenged of his enemies, euen he hath this night thorow my hande smyttē of the head of all the vnfaithfull. And that thou mayest se that it so is, beholde, this is ȝ heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despyed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened \hat{y} with destruccion, sayenge :

 "whan the people of Israel is takē, I shall cause the also to be stickte with the swerde.
 Whan Achior sawe Holofernes heade, he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguish & feare, so \hat{y} he swowned withall.
 But after that he was come agayne to himself,
 he fell downe before her & prayed her, sayēge:
 Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Iacob : for all the people that heare of thy name, shall prayse the God of Israel because of the.

The xiiij. Chapter.

IUDITH saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Styck vp this heade vpon oure walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take euery man his weapon, and fall out violently: not as though ye wolde go besyde them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyes in the tētes se this, they shall of neces-site be cōpelled to fle backward, and to rayse vp their captayne to the battyll. So whā their captaynes come in to Holofernes paulion, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the bloude, fearfulness shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceauē that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal delyuer them vnto you, to be destroyed.

Then Achior seynge the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his Heithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcided: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterite vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they stickte vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and euery man toke his weapon, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyes sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tēt, came before his chamber, and made a greate russzhinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him.
 For there durst not one of the Assirians knocke, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynces and all the chefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes,^a and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber, C stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepyng with Iudith.

But whā he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceauē no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lift it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, weltred in his bloude vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepyng rent his clothes, and wente in to Iudiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapte out vnto the people, and sayde: one womā of \hat{y} Lewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame.

For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpon the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge vpō them, so \hat{y} theyr myndes were sore afrayed. And there was an exceedyng greate crye in the whole hoost.

The xv. Chapter.

NOW whan all the hoost herde that A Holofernes was headed, their mynde and counsell fell from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they vndertoke to defende them selues by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, left all behynde them, and made haist to escape from the Hebrues: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapens, and so they fled by the wayes of the felde, and thorow all the fote pathes of the dales.

And whan \hat{y} children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wente downe with trōpettes, blowinge and makynge a greate crie after thē. As for the Assirians, they had no ordre, and kepte not thē selues together, but fled their waye. Neuerthelesse the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordre, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messaungers vnto all the cities and cōtrees of Israel.

So all the regions and euery cite sent out B their best men after them in harnesse, & smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to þy vtmost parte of their borders. And the other that were in Bethulia came in to the têtes of the Assirians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greates good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soch thynges as had bene theirs: there was no nôbre of the catell, and of all costly Iewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hiest, they were all made riche of the spoyles of them. And Ioachim the Hye prest at Ierusalē, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Iudith.

C Now when she came out vnto them, they beganne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worships of the cite of Ierusalem, thou ioye of Israel, thou honoure of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy hert is comforted, because thou hast loued clenlynes and chastyte, & hast knowne no man but thine owne huszbande: therfore hath the hāde of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be for euer. And all people sayde: so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarce gather vp the spoyles of the Assirians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clothinge and all ornamentes) they gaue it vnto Iudith. And all the people reioysed, both wemen, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The xvi. Chapter.

A THEN sange Iudith this songe vnto the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O syng vnto him a new songe of thankesgeuyng, be ioyfull and call vpon his name. "It is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might delyuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes,^a and their horses couered the valleys.

He purposed to haue brēt vp my londe, and to slaye my yonge men with the swerde.

B He wolde haue caryed awaye my children and virgins in to captiuyte, but the allmightie LORDE hurte him, and delyuered him in to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confusion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, nether haue the greates giauntes sett them selues agaynst him: but Iudith the daughter of Merari with hir fayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. For she layed awaie hir widdowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an houoe, to begyle him. Hir slippers rauyshed his eyes, hir bewtye captiuated his mynde,^a with the swerde smote she of his neck. The Persians were astonnyed at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of þy Assirians, whan my symple appeared, drye of thyrst. The sonnes of the daughters haue pearced them thorow, and slayne them as fugityue childrē: they perished in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let us syng a songe of thākesgeuyng vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we syng vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greates God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouercome. All thy creatures shulde serue the, for thou spakest but the worde, & they were made: thou sente thy sprete, & they were created, and no man maye withstonde thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundations with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the like waxe. But they that feare the, shal be greates with þy in all thynges. Wo vnto the people that ryse vp against my generation, for the allmightie LORDE wyl auenge him self of them, & in the daye of iudgmēt wyl he yset them. For he shall geue fyre & wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and fele it for euermore.

B After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Ierusalem, to geue prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whā they were purified, they offred all their brent sacrifices and their promysed offerynges.

^a Gen. 1. a. Psal. 32. a. Psal. 103. d.

And Iudith offred all Holofernes weapens, and all the Jewels, that \hat{y} people had geue her, "and the canapy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them vp vnto the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: α this ioye by reason of the victory, with Iudith, endureth thre monethes.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Iudith was in greate reputacion at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so \hat{y} after hir huszbonde Manasses dyed, she neuer knew man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worshipec. She dwelt in hir huszbandes house an hundredh and fyue yeare, α left hir honde mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried besyde hir huszbande in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seuen dayes. ^b So longe as she lyued, there was none that troubled Israel, and many yeares also after hir death.

The daye wherein this victory was gotten, was solemnly holden, and rekened of the Iewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Iewes euer sence, vnto this daye.

The chapters in the boke of Hester,

Which are not founde in the text of the Hebrue, but in the Greke and Latyn.

The xi. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is describyed the dreame of Mardocheus.

MARDOCHEUS the sonne of Iair, the sonne of Semei, \hat{y} sonne of Cisei of \hat{y} trybe of Ben Iamin a Iew: which had his dwellynge in Susis, a man of greate reputaciō, α excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges courte (Neuerthelesse he was one of the presoners, whom ^aNabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilō had caried awaye from Ierusalem vnto Babilon with Iechonias the kyng of Iuda.) In the seconde yeare of the raigne of greate Artaxerses in the first daye of \hat{y} moneth Nisan, had this Mardocheus soch a dreame: He thought he herde a greate tēpest, horrible thonderclappes, erthquakes, α greate vprour in \hat{y} londe: α \hat{y} he sawe two greate dragōs, ready to fight one agaist another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaringe and crye all Heithen were vp, to fight agaynst \hat{y} righteouse people. And \hat{y} same daye was full of darcknes α very vnclaire, full of trouble α anguysh, yee a greate fearfulnes was there in all the londe. The righteouse were amased, for they feared \hat{y} plage α euell \hat{y} was deuysed ouer thē, α were at a poynte with them selues to dye. So they cried vnto God, and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greate ryuer α in to many waters. And with \hat{y} it was daye, α the sonne rose vp agayne. And \hat{y} lowly were exalted, and deuoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and mused stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desyred to knowe all the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntyll the night.

The xij. Chapter.

In this chapter is declared, how Mardocheus vttereth the treason of the two seruantes agaynst the kynge, and therfore doth the kynge rewarde him.

AT the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuyce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell handes vpon the kynge Artaxerses: and so he certified the kinge therof. Then caused the kynge to examen f two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

BThis the kynge caused to be put in f Cronicles for an euerlasting remembraunce, and Mardocheus wrote vp the same matter. So the kynge commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the courte, and for this faithfulnessse of his, he gaue him a rewarde. But Aman the sonne of Amadathu the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputation in the kynges courte, vnder-toke to hurte Mardocheus g his people, because of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

The xiiij. Chapter

The copie of the commaundement, which kige Artaxerses (by the entisinge of Amā) sent out in to all countres, for the destruction of the Iewes. The prayer of Mardocheus.

ATHE greates kynge Artaxerses which Braigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and seuen and twēty londes, sendeth his frendly salutation vnto all the prynces and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his dominion. Whan I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed with equitye allwaye and gentylnes, to gouerne those that be vnder my iurisdiction, and wholly to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to brynge my kingdome vnto tranquylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now whan I axed my counselers, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellēt in wyszdome, whose good wyll, trueth g faithfulness hath oft bene shewed g proued (which was also f pryncipall g next vnto f kige) Amā by name, which certified vs, how f in all lōdes there was crepte in a rebellious folke, f made statutes g lawes agaynst all other people, g haue allwaye despyed the proclaimed commaundementes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that soch rule shulde contynue by you g not to be put downe. Seinge now we perceauē the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, g withstonde oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shrewd matters, that oure kyngdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therefore haue we commaūded, that all they that are appoynted in wrytinge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordered and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most pryncipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues g children be destroyed and rote out with the swerde of their enemies and aduersaries: g f there shalbe no mercy shewed, g no man spared. And this shalbe done f xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar) of this yeare, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the intēt that after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranquylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the workes and noble actes of f LORDE, g made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE LORDE, thou valeaunt and allmightie kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and delyuer Israel, there is no mā that can withstōde ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen g earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORDE of all thinges, and there is no man, f can resist the O LORDE) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORDE, that it was nether of malyce, ner presumption, ner for eny desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipec yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene cōtent, and f with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel eny good, to haue kyst euē his fotesteppes) but that I dyd it, because I wolde not sett the honour of a mā in the steade of the glorye of God, and because I wolde worshipe none but onely ȝ my LORDE. And this haue I done in no pryde ner presumption.

E And therefore O LORDE thou God and kinge, haue mercy vpon thy people for they ymagyn how they maye bringe vs to naught, yee their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to ouerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine enheritaunce of olde. O despyse not thy porciō, which thou hast deliuered & brought out of Egipte for thine owne self. Heare my prayer, and be mercifull vnto thy people, whō thou hast chosen for an heretage vnto thyself. Turne oure complaynte and sorow in to ioye, that we maye lyue O LORDE, and prayse thy name. O LORDE, suffre not ȝ mouthes of them that praise the, to be destroyed.

All ȝ people of Israel in like maner cried as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORDE, for their death and destruction stode before their eyes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of quene Hester.

QUENE Hester also beyng in the battayll of death, resorted vnto the LORDE, layed awaye hir glorious apparell, and put on the garmētes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the steade of precious oyntment, she scatred ashes and dōge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe, All the places where she was wōte to haue ioye afore, those fylled she with ȝ hayre, ȝ she pluchte out herself. She prayed also vnto the LORDE God of Israel with these wordes:

O my LORDE, thou onely art oure kynge, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but ȝ, for my misery and destruction is harde at my hande. Fro my youth vp I haue herde "out of the kynred of my father, that thou tokest Israel from amōge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritaunce, and loke what thou didest promise thē, thou hast made it good vnto thē.

Now well LORDE, we haue synned before B the, ^atherefore hast thou geuen vs in to the hādes of oure enemies, because we worshipped their goddes. LORDE thou art righteous. Neuertheles it satisfieth thē not, that we are in bytter and heuy captiuyte and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed their hondes vpon the hondes of their goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordered and appoynted: to destroye thyne inheritaunce, to shut and to stoppe ȝ mouthes of them that prayse the, to quēch the glory and worshipe of thy house and thine aulter, and to open the mouthes of the Heithen, ȝ they maye prayse the power & vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshly kynge for euer.

O LORDE, geue not thy cepter vnto thē C that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorne in oure misery and fall: but turne their deuyce vpō them selues, and punysh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Thinke vpon vs O LORDE, and shew thy self in ȝ tyme of oure distres and of oure trouble. Strength me O thou kynge of goddes, thou LORDE of all power, geue me an eloquēt^e and pleasant speach in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his hert in to ȝ hate of oure enemye, to destroye him, and all such as consent vnto him. But deliuer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate woman, which haue no defence ner helper but onely ȝ. LORDE thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glory and worshipe of the vnrighteous, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vncircūcyded and of all Heithen.

Thou knowest and wotest my necessite, D ȝ I hate the token of my preemynence & worshipe, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be sene, & that I abhorre it as an vnleane cloth, and that I weere it not whā I am quyet and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amās table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dronke the drynkofferings, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye sens ȝ daie that I was brought hither vnto this daye: but onely in the O LORDE. O thou God of Abraham, O thou mightie God aboue all,

The xv. Chapter.

Queene Hester appeareth before the kynge, with an heuy hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

AND vpon f thirde daye it happened, that Hester^a layed awaye f mournynge garmētes, and put on hir glorious apparell, and dectē herself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder & Sauoure of all thinges) toke two maydes with her: vpon the one she leane^d hir self, as one f was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir bewtye made hir face rose coloured. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amiable, but hir hert was soroufull for greate feare. She wente in thorow all the dores, and stode before the kynge. The kynge sat vpon the trone of his kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly araye, all of golde, and sett with precious stones, and he was very terribble. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearenes, and loked grymly vpon her. Then fell the Queene downe, was pale and faynt, leane^d hir self vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her.

B Neuertheles God turned f kynges mynde, that he was gentle,^b that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, & helde hir vp tyll she came to herself agayne. He gaue her louynge wordes also, & sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am thy brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for our commaundement toucheth the comons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wandē, and layed it vpon hir neck, and embraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. Thē sayde she: I sawe the^c (O lorde) as an angell of God, & my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearenesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (O lorde) and thy face is full of anyte. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the which cause the kynge was afraied, and all his seruantes comforted her.

The xvi. Chapter.

A copye of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerses caused to be proclaimed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the Iewes.

THE greate kynge Artaxerses, which raigneth frō India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces & rulers of the same londes, such as loue him, his frendly salutation. There be many, that for the sondrye frendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worshipec, be euer f more proude and hye mynded, and vndertake not onely to hurte oure subiectes (for plenteous benefites maye they not suffre, and begynne to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnthankfulnes awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumption (as they that be vnmyndefull and vnthakfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the iudgment of God, f seyth all thinges, which (iudgment) hateth & punysheth all wickednes. It happeneth oft also, f they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are cōmytted to be handled, waxe proude, and defyle thē selues with sheddyng of innocent bloude, which bryngeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceatfull wordes and with lyenge tales, disceaue and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

B Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search thereafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vn honest, and noysome thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and therby to be warre in tyme to come, that we maye make the kyngdome quyetē & peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a change: and as for f thinge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu f Macedonayan^d (a straunger verely of the Persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amōge vs as an aleaunt, and had optayned the frendshipe that we beare towarde all people, so that he was called oure father, and had in hye honoure of euery man, as the next and pryncipall vnto the kynge, he coude not forbear him self from his pryde, hath vndertaken not onely to robbe vs of the kyngdome, but of oure life.

With manyfolde disceate also hath he desyred to destroye Mardocheus oure helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent Hester the like partaker of oure kyngdome, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had takē them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kyngdome of the Persians vnto thē of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Iewes (which were accused of ſ wicked, ſ they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable & right lawes, and that they be the children of the most Hye lyuyng God, by whom the kyngdome of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherefore, as for the letters and cōmaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effecte: for he that set them vp and inuented thē, hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deseruyng.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set vp the copy of this letter in all places, that the Iewes maye frely and without hinderaunce holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpō ſ xij. daye of ſ xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguysh and trouble wolde haue oppressed thē. For the God that gouerneth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye wherin ſ chosen people shulde haue perished.

Morouer, amōge the hye solempne dayes that ye haue, ye shall holde this daye also with all gladnesse: that now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraunce to good, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the Persians: but a remembraunce of destruccion to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lōdes that do not this, shall horribly perish and be destroyed with the swerde and fyre, and shall not onely be no more inhabited of men, but be abhorred also of ſ wilde beastes & foules.

The first Chapter.

O SET youre affection vpō wysdome, ye that be iudges of the earth.^a Haue a good opinion of the LORDE, & seke him in the synghenesse of hert.^b For he will be foude of them that tempte him not, and appeareth vnto such as put their trust in him. As for frowarde thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be alowed,) refourmeth & vnwyse. And why? wysdome shall not entre in to a frowarde soule, ner dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fayned nurtoure, & withdraweth himself frō & thoughtes that are without vnderstandinge: & where wickednes hath the vpper hāde, he flieth from thence.^c For the sprete of wysdome is lounge, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witness of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge.^d For the sprete of & LORDE fylleth the rounde compasse of the worlde, and & same that vpholdeth all thinges, hath knowledge also of the voyce.

Therefore he that speaketh vnrighteous thinges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgmēt of reprove. And why? inquisition shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shalbe punished. For the eare of gelousy heareth all thinges, and the noyse of the grudginges shal not be hydd. Therefore beware of murmuringe, which is nothinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from slaūder.^e For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shall go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule.

O seke not youre owne death in & erreure of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre owne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destruction of the lyuynge. For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beyng: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shulde haue health, that there shulde be no destruccion in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shulde not be vpon earth (for righteousnesse is euerlastinge and immortal, but vnrighteousnes bringeth death.) Neuerthelesse, the vngodly call her vnto them both with wordes & workes, & whyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The ij. Chapter.

FOR & vngodly talke & ymagin thus amonge them selues (but not right:)^a The tyme of oure life is but short & tedious, & when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioye ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man & turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught, & we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrels, & & wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for oure body, it shalbe very aszshes & are quēched, & oure soule shal vanish as & soft ayre. Oure life shall passe awaye as & trace of a cloude, & come to naught as & myst & is dryūe awaye with the beames of & Sonne, & put downe with the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle & litle, & no man shal haue oure workes in remembraunce.

For oure tyme is a very shadow & passeth awaye,^b and after oure ende there is no returnynge, for it is fast sealed, so & no mā cōmeth agayne. Come on therfore, let vs enioye & pleasures & there are, & let vs soone vse & creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues with good wyne & oymntment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne oure selues with roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no fayre medowe, but oure lust shal go thorow it. Let euery one of you be partaker of oure voluptuousnes. Let vs leaue some token of oure pleasure in euery place, for & is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppresse the poore righteous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regarde & heades & are gray for age. Let & lawe of vnrighteousnesse be oure auctorite, for & thinge & is feble is no-thinge worth. Therefore let vs defraude the righteous, & why? he is not for oure profit, yee he is cleane cōtrary to oure doinges. He checketh vs for offendinge agaynst & lawe, & slaundreth vs as transgressours of all nurtoure. He maketh his boost to haue y knowlege of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewrayer of our thoughtes: ^a It greueth vs also to loke vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashion. He counteth vs but vayne personnes, he withdraweth him self from oure wayes as from fylthynes: he comendeth greatly y latter ende of the iust, a maketh his boast y God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs proue what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be y true sonne of God, ^b he will receaue him a delyuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examine him with despitfull rebuke and tormentinge, that we maye knowe his dignite a proue his pacience. ^c Let vs condemne him with the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Soch thinges do the vngodly ymagin, a go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath blynded them. As for the misteries of God, they vnderstonde them not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousness, ner regarde the worshippe that holy soules shall haue. For God created man to be vnderstroied, yee ^d after the ymage of his awne likenesse made he him. ^e Neuerthelesse thorow enuye of the deuell came death in to the worlde, ^f and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT the soules of y righteous are in y hande of God, ^g a y payne of death shal not touch the. ^h In y sight of y vnwyse they appeare to dye, a their ende is takē for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vtter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffre payne before men, ⁱ yet is their hope full of immortalite. They are punished but in few thinges, neuerthelesse in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them, a fyndeth the mete for himself: yee as the golde in the fornace doth he trye them, a receaueth them as a brentofferinge, and when y tyme commeth they shalbe looked vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparkes y renne thorow the rede buszshe. ^k They shal iudge the nacions, a haue dominion ouer y people, a their LORDE shal raigne for euer. They y put their trust in him, shal vnderstonde the trueth, and soch as be faithfull, wil agree vnto him in loue: for his chosen shal haue giftes a peace. ^l But the vngodly shalbe punyshed accordinge to their awne ymaginaciōs, for they haue despyed the righteous, a forsaken the LORDE.

Who so despyseth wysdome a nurtoure, he is vnhappye, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfrutefull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vndiscrete, and their childrē most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather y baren a vndefyled, which hath not knowne the synfull bedd: she shall haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is y gelded, ^m which with his handes hath wrought no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymagined wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be geuen y speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable porcion in y temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good labour, a the rote of wysdome shall neuer fade awaye. As for y childrē of adoutrers, they shal come to an ende a the sede of an vnrighteous bedd shal be roted out. And though they lyue lōge, yet shal they be nothinge regarded, a their last age shalbe without honoure. Yf they dye haistely, they haue no hope, nether shal they be spoken to in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vnrighteous.

The iij. Chapter.

OHOW fayre is a chaist generacion with y vertue? ⁿ The memoriall therof is immortal, for it is knowne with God and men. When it is present, mē take exāple thereat: and yf it go awaye, yet they desyre it. It is allwaie crowned a holden in honoure, a wyneth y rewarde of the vndefyled battayll. But the multitude of vngodly childrē is vnprofitable, and the thinges y are planted with whordome, shal take no depe rote, ner laye eny fast foundation, ^o Though they be grene in the branches for a tyme, yet shal they be shakē with the wynde: for they stonde not fast, a thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roted out. For the vnparfecte braunches shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eate, yee mete for nothinge. And why? all the children y are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wickednesse agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be axed. But though the righteous be ouertaken with death, yet shal he be in rest.

B Age is an honorable thinge: neuertheles it stondeth not only in the lenth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeares: but a mans wysdome is the graye hayre, and an vndeified life is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued amōg synners, he traslated him. Yee sodely was he taken awaye, to the intent y wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstōdinge, & y ypocrisie shulde not begyle his soule. For y craftie bewitchinge of lyes make good thinges darck, y vnderfastnesse also & wickednes of voluptuous desyre, turne asyde y vnderstōdinge of y symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therefore haisted he to take him awaye frō amonge y wicked. This the people se, & vnderstōde it not: they laye not vp soch thinges in their hertes, how y y louynge fauoure & mercy of God is vpō his saintes, & y he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

C Thus y righteous y is deed, cōdemneth the yngodly which are lyuinge: & y youth y is soone brought to an ende, y lōge life of y vnrighteous. For they se y ende of y wyse, but they vnderstōde not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherefore y LORDE hath taken him a waie. And why? they se him & despyse him, therefore shall God also laugh thē to scorne: So y they thē selues shal dye here after (but without honoure) yee in shame amonge y deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those y be puft vp, & remoue the frō y foundations, so y they shalbe laied waist vnto the hyst. They shal mourne, and their memoriall shal perishe. So they beyng afraied shall remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewraye thē.

The b. Chapter.

A THEN shal y righteous stonde in greate stedfastnesse agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely with thē, & takē awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed with horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of y sodane health: grōninge for very distresse of mynde, & shall saye within them selues (hauynge inwarde sorow, and mournynge for very anguysh of mynde):

These are they, whom we somtyme had in derision, & iested vpō. We fooles thought their life very madnesse, & their ende to be without honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therefore we haue erred from the waye of trueth, y light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sōne of vnderstōdinge rose not vp vpō vs. We haue weered oure selues in y waye of wickednesse & destruccō. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it.

What good hath oure pryde done vnto vs? B Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messaunger renynge before: as a shippe y passeth ouer the wawes of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, nether y path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde y flyeth thorow y ayre, & no man can se eny token where she is flowen, but only heareth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wynde, partinge the ayre thorow the vehemēce of hir goinge, & flyeth on shakynge hir wynges, where as afterwarde no tokē of hir waye can be fōude. Or like as whē an arowe is shott at a marck, it parteth the ayre, which immediatly cōmeth together agayne, so that a man can not knowe where it wente thorow. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure ende: & haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

C Soch wordes shal they that haue synned, speake in the hell: for the hope of the yngodly is like a drye thistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye with the wynde: like as thyne scombe y is scatred abrode with the storme: like as y smoke which is dispersed here & there with the wynde, & as y remembrance of a straūger y tarieth for a daie, & thē departeth.

But y righteous shal lyue for euermore:

their rewarde also is with the LORDE, & their remembrance with the Hiest. Therefore shal they receaue a glorious kyngdome & a beutifull crowne of the LORDES hande: for with his right hande shal he couer the, & with his owne arme shall he defende the. His gelousy also shal take awaye the harness, and he shal wapē ſ creature to be auēged of ſ enemies. He shal put on righteousnes for a brest plate, & take sure iudgment in steade of an helmet. The invincible shyld of equite shall he take, his cruell wrath shal he sharpē for a speare, & the whole compase of the worlde shall fight with him agaynst the vnwyse.

The shal the thonder boltes go out of ſ lighteninges, & come out of the rayne bowe of the cloudes to the place apoynted: out of the hard stony indignacion there shall fall thick hailes, & ſ water of ſ see shal be wroth agaynst the, & the floudes shal renne roughly together. Yee a mightie wynde shal stōde vp agaynst them, & a storme shall scatter the abroad. Thus the vnrighteous dealing of the shal bringe all the lōde to a wyldernes, & wickednes shall ouerthrowe the dwellings of the mightie.

The bi. Chapter.

WYSZDOME is better then strength,^a & a mā of vnderstādinge is more worth the one ſ is strōge. Heare therefore (O ye kinges) & vnderstonde: O lerne ye ſ be iudges of the endes of the earth. Geue eare ye ſ rule ſ multitudes, & delite in moch people. For the power is geuē you of the LORDE,^c & the strēgth from the Hiest: which shal trie youre workes and search out youre ymaginaciōs: How that ye beyng officers of his kyngdome, haue not executed true iudgment, haue not kepte the lawe of righteousnes, ner walked after his will. Horribly & that right soone shall he appeare vnto you: for an harde iudgmēt shal they haue ſ beare rule. Mercy is graūted vnto the symple,^d but they that be in auctorite shalbe sore punyshed. For God which is LORDE ouer all, shall excepte no mās personne, nether shal he stande in awe of eny mans greatnesse: for he hath made ſ small and greate, & careth for all alyke. But the mightie shal haue ſ sorer punyshmēt.

Vnto you therefore (o ye kinges) do I speake, ſ ye maye lerne wyszdome and not go amysse:

for they ſ kepe righteousnes shalbe righteously iudged: and they ſ are lerned in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answere. Wherefore set youre lust vpon my wordes, & loue the, so shal ye come by nourtoure. Wyszdome is a noble thinge, & neuer saydeth awaie: yee she is easely sene of the that loue her, & founde of soch as seke her. She preuēteth them ſ desyre her, ſ she maye first shewe herself vnto the. Who so awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no greate trauayle, for he shal fynde her syttinge ready at his dores. To thinke vpon her, is perfecte vnderstandinge: & who so watcheth for her, shalbe safe, & that soone. For she goeth aboute, sekyng such as are mete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, & meteth them with all diligēce. For ſ vnfaigned desyre of reformation is hir begynnynge: to care for nourtoure is loue, and loue is the kepinge of hir lawes. Now the kepinge of ſ lawes is perfeccion & an vn corrupte life, & an vn corrupte life maketh a man familer with God. And so the desyre of wyszdome ledeth to ſ kingdome euerlastinge. If youre delyte be the in royall seates & cepters (o ye kynges of the people) set youre lust vpon wyszdome, ſ ye maye raigne for euer more. O loue the light of wyszdome, all ye ſ be rulers of the people. As for wyszdome, what she is, and how she came vp, I wil tell you, and will not hyde the misteries of God from you: but wil seke her out from ſ begynnynge of the natiuite, and brynge the knowlege of her in to light, and wil not kepe back the trueth. Nether will I haue to do with cōsumynge envy, for soch a man shal not be partaker of wyszdome. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wyse kyng is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nourtoure then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good.

The biij. Chapter.

I MYSELF also am a mortall man, like as all other, & am come of ſ earthly generaciō of him ſ was first made, & in my mothers wōbe^e was I fashioned to be flesh: In the tyme of ten monethes was I brought together in bloude, thorow the sede of man, & the cōmodious appetite of slepe. ¶ fell vpon the earth (which is my nature) crienge & wepinge at the first, as all other do. I was wrapped in swadlinge clothes, & brought vp with greate cares. For there is no kinge [¶] hath had eny other begynnynge of byrth.^a All men then haue one intraunce vnto life, & one goinge out in like maner.

33 Wherefore I desyred, and vnderstandinge was geuē me: I called, & the sprete of wysdome came in to me. I set more by her thē by kingdomes & royall seates, & counted riches nothinge in cōparison of her.^b As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, & syluer shal be counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her aboue wel fare & beutie, & purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched. ^c All good thinges came to me with her, & innumerable riches thorow hir hādes. I was glad in thē all, for this wysdome wēte before me, & I knew not [¶] she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lerned vnfaignedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, & hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue & frendshipe of God, and are accepted vnto him for the giftes of wysdome.

C God hath graunted me to talke wysely, & conueniētly to hādle the thinges [¶] he hath graciously lent me. For it is he, [¶] ledeth vnto wysdome, & teacheth to vse wysdome aright. ^d In his hāde are we & oure wordes: yee all oure wysdome, oure vnderstandinge & knowlege of all oure workes. For he hath geuē me [¶] true sciēce of these thinges: so that I knowe how [¶] worlde was made, & the powers of [¶] elemētes: [¶] begynnynge, endinge & myddest of [¶] tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: [¶] course of the yeaere: the ordinaunces of the starres: the natures & kindes of beastes: the furiousnesse of beastes: the power of [¶] wyndes: the ymaginacions of mē: the deuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, & all such thinges as are secreete & not looked for, haue I lerned. For the workmaster of all thinges hath taught me wysdome. In hir is [¶] sprete of vnderstādinge, which is holy, manifold, one onely, sotyll, curteous, discrete, quyk, vndeified, playne, swete, louynge the thinge [¶] is good, sharpe, which forbyddeth not to do well, gētle, kynde, stedfast, sure, fre: hauynge all vertues, circūspecte in allthinges: receauinge all spretes of vnderstādinge beige cleane & sharpe. For wisdome is neemblem thē all neēble thīges: she goeth thorow & attayneth to all thīges, because of hir clenness. For she is [¶] breth of [¶] power of God, & a pure cleane expresseing of [¶] clearnes of Allmightie God. Therefore can no vndeified thinge come in to her: for ^e she is [¶] bryghtnes of [¶] euerlastige light, [¶] vndeified myrroure of [¶] maiesty of God, & [¶] ymage of his goodnesse. And for so much as she is one, she maie do all thinges: & beinge stedfast herself she renueth all, & amōge [¶] people cōveyeth she herself in to [¶] holy soules. She maketh Gods frendes & prophetes: for God loueth no mā, but him in whō wysdome dwelleth. For she is more beutyfull then the Sonne, and geueth more light then the starres, and the daye is not to be cōpared vnto her: for vpō [¶] daye cōmeth night. But wickednesse can not ouercome wysdome, and foolishnes maye not be with her.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME reacheth frō one ende to another mightely, & louigly doth she orde all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her euē fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligēce to mary my self with her, soch loue had I vnto hir beuty. Who so hath [¶] cōpany of God, cōmēdeth hir nobilyte, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is [¶] scolemastresse of [¶] nurtoure of God, & [¶] choser out of his workes. Yf a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wisdome, [¶] worketh all thīges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstādinge worketh. What is it amōge all thinges, [¶] worketh more thē wysdome? Yf a man loue vertue & righteounes, let him labour for wysdome, for she hath greate vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes & prudence, righteounes & strēgh, which are soch thinges as mē can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. Yf a mā desyre moch knowlege, she cā tell [¶] thinges [¶] are past, & discerneth thinges for to come: she knoweth [¶] sotilities of wordes, & cā expōude darke sentēces. She can tell of tokēs & wōderous thinges, or euer they come to passe, & the endes of all tymes & ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my cōpany, & comō lougly with her: no doute she shal geue me good coucell, & speake comfortably vnto me in my carefulnes & grefe. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amōge the comōs & lordes of þy counsell. Though I be yonge, yet shal I haue sharpe vnderstandinge: so þy I shal be maruelous in þy sight of greate mē, & þy faces of prynces shal wōder at me. Whā I holde my tōge, they shal byde my leysure: whā I speake, they shal loke vpō me: & yf I talke moch, they shal laye their handes vpō their mouth. Morouer, by the meanes of her I shal optayne immortalite, and leaue behinde me an euerlasting memoriall, amōge thē þy come after me. I shal set þy people in ordre, and the nacions shalbe subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrauntes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amōge the multitude I shal be counted good, & mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest with her: for hir cōpany hath no bytternes, & hir felashipe hath no tediousnesse, but myrth & ioye.

C Now whan I cōsidered these thinges by myself, & pondered them in my hert, how þy to be ioyned vnto wyszdome is immortalite, & greate pleasure to haue hir frendshipe: how þy in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company with her shalbe wyse: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honour: I wente aboute sekyng, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a rype wytt, and had a good vnderstandinge.

But whan I grewe to more vnderstādinge, I came to an vndefyled body. Neuertheles whan I perceaued that I coude not kepe myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (& þy was a poynte of wyszdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

The ix. Chapter.

A GOD of my fathers, & LORDE of mercies, (thou þy hast made^b all thiges with thy worde, & ordeyned mā thorow thy wyszdome, þy he shulde haue dominio^c ouer þy creature, which thou hast made: þy he shulde ordre þy worlde acordinge to equite & righteousness, & execute iudgmēt with a true hert) geue me wyszdome, which is euer aboute thy seate, & put me not out frō amōge thy children: for I thy seruau^ct & sonne of thy handmayden, am a feble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yōge to the vnderstandinge of iudgment and þy lawes. And though a man be neuer so perfecte amonge the children of men, yet yf thy wyszdome be not with him, he shal be nothinge regarded. ^dBut thou hast chosen me to be a kynge vnto thy people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.

B Thou hast cōmaunded me to buylde a temple vpon thy holy mount, & an altier in the cite wherin thou dwellest: a licknesse of thy holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared frō the beginnyng, and thy wyszdome with þy, which knoweth thy workes: which also was with þy whan thou maydest þy worlde, & knew what was acceptable in thy sight, & right in thy commaundementes. O sende her out of thy holy heauens and from the trone of thy maiesty, that she maye be with me, & labour with me: that I maye knowe, what is acceptable in thy sight. For she knoweth and vnderstandeth all thinges: and she shal lede me soberly in my workes, and preserue me in hir power. So shal my workes be acceptable, & then shal I gouerne thy people righteously, & be worthy to syt in my fathers seate. ^eFor what man is he, that maye knowe the counsell of God? Or, who can thinke what the will of God is? For the thoughtes of mortall men are miserable, & oure forecastes are but vncertayne. ^fAnd why? a mortall and corruptible body is heuy vnto the soule, and the earthy mansion kepeth downe the vnderstandinge þy museth vpon many thinges. Very hardly can we discern the thinges that are vpon earth, and greate labour haue we, or we can fynde the thinges which are before oure eyes: Who will then seke out the groude of the thinges that are done in heauē? Oh LORDE, who cā haue knowlege of thy vnderstandinge and meaninge, excepte thou geue wyszdome and sende thy holy goost frō aboue? that the wayes of them which are vpon earth maye be reformed: þy men maye lerne þy thinges that are pleasaunt vnto the, and be preserued thorow wyszdome.

The x. Chapter.

WYSZDOME preserved f first mā, whō God made^a a father of the worlde, whā he was created alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the moulde of f earth, t gaue him power to rule all thinges. When the vnrighteous wente awaye in his wrath from this wyszdome, f brotherheade perished^b thorow f wrath of murthur. Agayne, whā f water^c destroyed f whole worlde, wyszdome preserved the righteous thorow a poore tre, wherof she was gouerner herself. Morouer whā wickednes had gotten f vpperhande, so f the nacions were puft vp with pryde, ^dshe knewe f righteous, preserved him faultlesse vnto God, and layed vp sure mercy for his children. ^eShe preserved the righteous, whan he fled from the vngodly f perished, what tyme as f fyre fell downe vpon f v. cities: Like as yet this daye the vnfrutefull, waist and smokinge lōde geueth testimony of their wickednesse: yee the vnripe and vntymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a tokē of a remembrance of the vnfaithfull soule, there standeth a pilier of salt. For all such as regarded not wyszdome, gat not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thinges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto mē, a memoriall of their foolishnes: so f in the thinges wherin they synned, they coude not be hydd. But as for such as take hede vnto wyszdome, she shal deluyuer them from sorowe.

When the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, ^fwyszdome led him the right waye, shewed him f kyngdome of God, gaue him knowlege of holy thinges, made him riche in his laboures, and brought to passe the thinges that he wente aboute. In f disceatfulness of such as defrauded him, she stode by him, t made him ryche. She saued him from the enemies, and defended him from f disceauers. She made him stronge in battayll, and gaue him the victory, f he might knowe, how that wyszdome is stronger then all thinges. ^gWhan the righteous was solde, she forsoke him not, but deluyered him frō synners. She wente downe with him in to the dongeon, and sayled him not in the bandes: ^htyll she had brought him the cepter of f realme, and power agaynst those that oppressed him. As for them that had accused him, she declared them to be lyers, t brought him to perpetuall worshipec.

She deluyered the righteous people and faultlesse sede, ⁱfrom the nacions that oppressed them. She entred in to the soule of the seruauant of God, and stode by him in wonders and tokens agaynst the horrible kynge. She gaue f righteous the rewarde of their laboures, t led them forth a maruelous waye: on the daye tyme she was a shadowe vnto them, and a light of starres in the night season. ^kShe brought them thorow the reed see, and caried them thorow the greate water. She drowned their enemies in the see, and brought them out of the depe. So the righteous toke the spoyles of the vngodly, and ^lprayed thy holy name (o LORDE) and magnified thy victorious hād with one acorde. For wyszdome openeth the mouth of f domme, t maketh f tonges of babes to speake.

The xi. Chapter.

SHE ordred their workes in the hādes of the holy prophet: ^mso f they wente thorow f wyldernes f was not inhabited, t pitched their tētes in f waist deserte. They stode agaynst their enemies, t were auenged of their aduersaries. ⁿWhā they were thirstie, they called vpō f , t water was geuē them out of f rok, t their thirst slockened out of f harde stone. For by f thinges, where thorow their enemies were punished, were they helped in their nede. For vnto the enemies thou gauest māas bloude in steade of lyuyng water. And where as they had scarcenesse in f rebuke whan the children were slayne, thou gauest vnto thine awne a plenteous water vnloked for: declaringe by the thyrst f was at that tyme, how thou woldest bringe thine awne vnto honour, t slaye their aduersaries.

For whan they were tryed t noutrured with fatherly mercy, ^othey knowleged how the vngodly were iudged, and punyshed thorow f wrath of God. These hast thou exorted as a father, t proued thē: but vnto f other thou hast bene a boysteous kynge, layed hard to their charge, & condēd thē. Whether they were absent or present, their punyshmēt was alyke. For their grefe was dubble: namely, mournynge, and ȝ remēbraunce of thinges past. But whā they perceaued ȝ their punishmētes dyd thē good, they thought vpon the LORDE, & wondered at ȝ ende. For at the last they helde moch of him, of whō in ȝ out-castinge they thought scorne, as of an abiecte. Neuerthelesse ȝ righteous dyd not so when they were thirstie: but euen like as ȝ thoughtes of ȝ foolish were, so was also their wickednes.

Where as certayne mē now (thorow erreure) dyd worshipe domme "serpentes & vayne beestes, thou sendedst a multitude of domme beastes vpon them for a vengeance: ȝ they might knowe, that loke where withall a mā synneth, by the same also shal he be punyshed. For vnto thy almighty hande, that made the worlde of naught, it was not vnpossible, to sende amonge them an heape of Beeres, or woode lȳs, or cruell beastes of a straunge kynde, such as are vnkowne, or spoute fyre, or cast out a smokinge breth, or shote horrible sparkes out of their eyes: which might not only destroye them with hurtinge, but also kyll them with their horrible sight. Yee without these beestes might they haue bene slayne with one winde, beyng persecuted of their awne workes, and scattered abrode thorow the breth of thy power.

Neuertheles thou hast ordred all thinges in measure, nōbre & weight. For thou hast euer had greate strēth & might, & who maye withstōde ȝ power of thine arme? And why like as ȝ small thyng ȝ ȝ balauce weyeth, so is ȝ worlde before ȝ: yee as a droppe of ȝ morninge dew, that falleth downe vpon the earth. Thou hast mercy vpon all, for thou hast power of all thynges: and makest the as though thou sawest not the sinnes of mē, because they shulde amende. For thou louest all the thinges that are, and hatest none of thē whō thou hast made: nether didest thou ordeyne or make eny thinge of euell will.

How might eny thinge endure, yf it wer not thy will? Or how coude eny thinge be preserued, excepte it were called of ȝ? But thou sparest all, for all are thine, o LORDE, thou louer of soules.

The xij. Chapter.

O LORDE, how gracious & swete is thy sprete in all thinges? Therefore chastenest thou thē measurably that go wrōge, and warnest them, concernynge the thinges wherin they offende: thou speakest vnto them (o LORDE) and exortest thē to leaue their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde "inhabiters of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, for they commytted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wythcraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy: they ate vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominaciōs, myszbeleues & offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that ȝ londe which thou louest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the childrē of God.

Neuertheles thou sparedest thē also (as mē) & sendedst ȝ forerūners of thine hoost, euē hornettes to destroye thē out by lytle & litle. Not ȝ thou wast vnable to subdue ȝ vngodly vnto ȝ "righteous in battayll, or with cruell beestes, or with one rough worde to destroye thē together: But thy mynde was to dryue thē out by lytle & litle, geuinge thē time & place to amende: knowinge well, ȝ it was an vnrighteous nacion & wicked of nature, & ȝ their thought might neuer be altered. For it was a cursed sede from ȝ begynnynge, & feared no mā: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done ȝ? Or who wyl stōde agaynst thy iudgmēt? Or who wil come before thy face an auēger of vnrighteous mē? Or who wil blame ȝ, yf ȝ people perish, whō thou hast made? For there is none other God but thou, ȝ carest for all thinges: ȝ thou mayest declare how ȝ thy iudgmēt is not vnright. There dare nether kige, ner tyrāut in thy sight requyre accōptes of them, whō thou hast destroyed.

For so moch thē as thou art righteous thy self, thou ordrest all thiges righteously, & "punishest euē hī ȝ hath not deserued to be punyshed, & takest him for a straüger & an aleaut in ȝ lōde of thy power. For thy power is ȝ beginnyng of righteousness: and because thou art LORDE of all thinges, therfore art thou gracious vnto all. Whan men thinke y not to be of a full strength, thou declarest thy power: a boldly deluyerst thou them ouer y knowe y not. But thou LORDE of power iudgeth quietly, and ordrest us with greate worshippe, for thou mayest do as thou wilt.

D By soch workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mā also shulde be iust and lounge: and hast made thy childrē to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudget, thou geuest rowme to amende from synnes. For in so moch as thou hast punyshed, and with soch diligence deluyered y enemies of thy seruauētes, which were worthy to dye (where thorow thou gauest thē tyme a place of amēdement y they might turne frō their wickednes) with how greate diligence then punyshest thou thine awne childrē, vnto whose fathers thou hast sworne a made couenaūtes of good promises? So where as thou doest but chasten vs, thou punyshest oure enemies dyuerse wayes: to y intēt y whā we punysh, we shulde remēbre thy goodnesse: a whan we oure selues are punyshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

E Wherefore where as men haue lyued ignorautly a vnrighteously, thou hast punyshed thē sore, euē thorow y same thinges that they "worshipped. For they wente astraye very lōge in y waye of erreure, a helde y beestes (which euē their enemies despyed) for goddes, lyuyng as children of no vnderstandinge. Therfore hast thou sent a scornfull punyshment amonge them, as amonge the childrē of ignoraunce. As for soch as wolde not be reformed by those scornes a rebukes, they felt the worthy punishmēt of God. For y thinges y they suffred, they bare thē vn-pacietly, beinge not contēt in them but vnwyllinge. And whan they perysht by y same thinges that they toke for goddes, they knowledged then, that there was but one true God, whom afore they wolde not knowe: therfore came y ende of their dampnacion vpon them.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A VAYNE are all men, which haue not y knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are "sene, knewe not him, that of himself is euerlastinge.

Nether toke they so moch regarde of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or ayre, some y course of y starres, some y water, some toke Sonne and Moone, or the lightes of heauen which "rule y earth, for goddes. But though they had soch pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes: yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more fayrer he is that made them. For the maker of beuty hath ordered all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of thē, they shulde haue perceaued therby, y he which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

For by the greatnesse a beuty of the creature, y maker therof maye playnely be knowne. B Notwithstandinge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God a wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they wēte aboute in his workes and sought after them, it is a toke, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes y are sene: howbeit they are not wholly to be excused. For yf their vnderstandinge and knowledge was so greate, y they coude discerne the worlde and y creatures, why dyd they not rather fynde out y LORDE therof?

But vnhappye are they, and amonge the deed is their hope, that call thē God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by connyng, the similitude of beastes, or eny vayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. C Or as whan a carpenter cutteth downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the bark of it connyngly: and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be vsed, and dighteth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothinge (for it is a croked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he carueth it diligently thorow his vanite, and (acordinge to the knowlege of his connyng) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what foule spot is in it, he casteth some coloure vpon it. Then maketh he a conueniēt tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, prouydinge so for it, lest it happē to fall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessity be helped.

D Then goeth he and offreth of his goodes vnto it for his children and for his wife: he seketh helpe at it, he axeth counsell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it ⁊ hath no soule: for health, he maketh his petition vnto him that is sicke: for life, he prayeth vnto him that is deed: he calleth vpon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: ⁊ to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye not go. And in all the thinges ⁊ he taketh in hande (whether it be to optayne eny thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do no maner of good.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A GAYNE, another mā purposinge to sayle ⁊ begynnyng to take his iourney thorow ⁊ raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, ⁊ is farre weaker, thē ⁊ tre ⁊ beareth him. For as for it, coueteousnesse of moneye hath founde it out, ⁊ ⁊ craftsmā made it with his connyng. But thy prouydence (O father) gouerneth all thinges frō ⁊ begynnyng, for thou hast made a waye in ⁊ see, ⁊ a sure path in the myddest of ⁊ wawes: declaringe therby, ⁊ thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Neuerthelesse, ⁊ ⁊ workes of thy wysdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made: ⁊ therefore do men commytte their lyues to a small pece of wod passinge ouer the see in a shyppe, ⁊ are saued.

B For in the olde tyme also whā the proude gyautes perished,^a he (in whō the hope was left to increase ⁊ worlde) wēte in to the shippe, which was gouerned thorow thy hande, and so left sede behinde him vnto ⁊ worlde. For happie is ⁊ tre where thorow righteousnes cometh: but cursed is the ymage of wod, ⁊ is made with hādes, yee both it ⁊ he ⁊ made it: He, because he made it: ⁊ it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge.^d For the vngodly ⁊ his vngodlynes are both like abhominable vnto God. Euen so ⁊ worke ⁊ he ⁊ made it also shal be punished together. Therefore shal there a plage come vpon the ymages of the Heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abhominacion, a temptacion vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the fete of the vnwyse. And why? the sekinge out of ymages is the begynnyng of whordome, and the bringinge vp of them is the destruction of life. For they were not from the begynnyng, nether shall they cōtinue for euer. The welthy ydilnes of men hath founde them out vpon earth, therefore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whē a father mourned for his sonne ⁊ was taken awaye frō him, he made him an ymage (in all ⁊ haist) of his deed sonne: ⁊ so begane to worshipe him as God, which was but a deed mā ⁊ ordered his seruantes to offre vnto him. Thus by processe of tyme ⁊ thorow lōge custome, this erreure was kepte as a lawe, ⁊ tyrāutes cōpelled mē by violēce to honoure ymages. As for those ⁊ were so farre of, ⁊ mē might not worshipe them presently, their picture was brought frō farre (like the ymage of a kyng whō they wolde honoure) to the intent that with greate diligence they might worshipe him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the singlar connyng of the craftsmā gaue the ignoraunt also a great occasiō to worshipe ymages. For the workman wyllyng to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his connyng to make the ymage of the best fashion. And so (thorow the beuty of the worke) the comon people was disceaueid, in so moch that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honored as a man. And this was the erreure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affection, or to do some pleasure vnto kinges) ascrybed vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be geuen vnto no man.

Morouer, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greате warres of ignoraunce, those many and greате plagēs called they peace.^e For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable watches: so that they kepte nether life ner mariage cleane: but ether one slewe another to death maliciously, or els greued his neyghboure with aduoutrie. And thus were all thinges myxte together: bloude, manslaughter, theft, dissimulacion, corrupcion, vnfaithfulnesse, sedicion, periury, disquyetinge of good men, vnthakfulnes, defylinge of soules, chaūginge of byrth, vnstedfastnesse of mariage, mysordre of adoutrie and vncleennesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnynge and ende of all euell. For they ŷ worshipe Idols, either they are madd whā they be mery, or prophecie lyes, or lyue vngodly, or els lightly mansweare them selues. For in so moch as their trust is in ŷ Idols (which haue nether sole ner vnderstandinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurte them.

Therefore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthely: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuinge hede vnto Idols, swearinge vniustly to disceauē, and dyspysinge righteousnes. For their swearinge is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth euer with the offence of the vngodly.

The xvi. Chapter.

BUT thou (O oure God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordrest thou all thinges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. Yf we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the, is perfecte righteousness: Yee to knowe thy righteousness and power, is the rote of immortalite. As for the thinge that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath not disceaued vs: as the payntinge of the picture (an vnprofitable labour) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sight entiseth the ignoraunt: so that he honoureth and loueth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

Neuertheles, they that loue soche euell thinges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honour them. The potter also taketh ⁊ tempereth soft earth, laboureth it, and geueth it the fashion of a vessell, what so euer serueth for oure vse: and so of one pece of claye he maketh some cleane vessel for seruice, and some contrary. But where to euery vessell serueth, that knoweth ŷ potter himself. So with his vayne labour he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle whyle after (whan he dyeth) turneth to earth agayne.

Notwithstandinge, he careth not ŷ more because he shal labour euer ner because his life is shorte: but stryue to excell goldsmithes, ŷ syluer smithes ⁊ copper smithes, and taketh it for an honour to make vayne thinges. For his hert is ashes, his hope is but vaine earth ⁊ his life is more vyle then claye: for so moch as he knoweth not his awne maker, that gaue him his soule to worke, and brethed in him the breth of life. They counte oure life but a pastyme, and oure conuersacion to be butt a market, and that men shulde euer be gettinge, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he ŷ of earth maketh frayle vessell and ymages, knoweth himself to offende aboue all other.

All the enemies of thy people and ŷ holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, vnhappye and excedinge proude vnto their owne soules: for they iudge all the Idols of the Heithē to be goddes,^a which nether haue eyesight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: ⁊ as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man made them, and he that hath but a borrowed sprete, fashioned them. But no man can make a God like vnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himself is better then they whom he worshippeth, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. Yee they worshippe beestes also, which are most miserable: for compare thinges that can not fele vnto them, ⁊ they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of these beestes, that with his sight cā beholde eny good thinge, nether haue they geuen prayse ner thanks vnto God.

The xvi. Chapter.

FOR these and soch other thinges haue they suffred worthy punishment, ⁊ thorow ŷ multitude of beestes are they roted out. In steade of the which punishmentes thou hast graciously ordred thine awne people, ⁊ geuen them their desyre that they lōged for: a new ⁊ straunge taist, preparinge them^b quales to be their meate: to the intent ŷ (by the thinges which were shewed and sent vnto them) they ŷ were so gredy of meate, might be with-drawen euen from the desyre that was necessary. But these within shorte tyme were brought vnto pouerte, and taisted a new meate. For it was requisite y (without eny excuse) destruccion shulde come vpō those which vsed tyrāny, α to shewe onely vnto the other, how their enemies were destroyed. α For whan the cruel woodnesse of the beestes came vpon them, they perished thorow the stinges of the cruell serpentes.

B Notwithstōdinge thy wrath endured not perpetually, but they were put in feare for a litle season, y they might be reformed, hauynge a token of saluacion, to remembre the cōmaundement of thy lawe. For he y cōuerted, was not healed by the thinge y he sawe, but by THE, O sauioure of all. So in this thou shewdest thine enemies, y it is thou, which deliuerest frō all euell. As for thē whan they were bytten with greshoppers and flyes, y they died, for they were worthy to perish by soch: But nether the teth of dragons ner of venomous wormes ouercame thy children, for thy mercy was euer by them α helped thē. Therefore were they punyshed to remēbre thy wordes, but hastily were they healed agayne: lest they shulde fall in to so depe forgetfulness, that they might not vse thy helpe.

C It was nether herbe ner plaster y restored thē to health, but thy worde (o LORDE) which healeth all thinges. It is thou (o LORDE) y hast the power of life α death: y thou ledest vnto deathes dore, α bringest vp agayne. But man thorow wickednes slayeth his owne soule, α when his sprete goeth forth, it turneth not agayne, nether maye he call agayne y soule y is takē awaye: It is not possible to escape thy hande. For y vngodly y wolde not knowe y , were punyshed by y strēgh of thine arme: y with straunge waters, hailes and raynes were they persecuted, α thorow fyre were they cōsumed. For it was a wonderous thinge that fyre might do more then water which quēcheth all thinges: but y worlde is y auēger of the righteous. Some tyme was y fyre so tame, y the beestes which were sent to punysh y vngodly, brent not: α y because they shulde se α knowe, y they were persecuted with the punyshmēt of God. And somtyme brent the fyre in the water on euery syde, y it might destroye y vnrighteous naciō of the earth. Againe, thou hast fed thine awne people with angels fode, y sent thē bred ready from heauē (without their labour) beyng very pleasaūt α well gusted. And to shewe thy riches α swetnesse vnto thy childrē, thou gauest euery one thy desyre, so y euery man might take what liked him best. But the snowe α yse abode the violēce of the fyre, α melted not: y they might knowe, y the fyre burninge in the hale α rayne, destroyed y frute of y enemies: y fyre also forgatt his strēgh agayne, y y righteous might be nourished. For y creature y serueth y (which art y maker) is fearse in punyshinge y vnrighteous, but it is easy α gētle to do good, vnto soch as put their trust in the. Therefore dyd all thinges alter at the same tyme, α were all obediēt vnto thy grace, which is y norse of all thinges, accordinge to y desyre of thē y had nede therof: y thy childrē (O LORDE) whō thou louest, y might knowe, y it is not nature α the growinge of frutes y fedeth mē, but y it is thy worde, which preserueth thē y put their trust in the. For loke what might not be destroyed with the fyre, as soone as it was warned with a litle Sonne beame, it melted: y all men might knowe, y thanks ought to be geuen vnto y before y Sonne ryse, α y thou oughtest to be worshipped before y daye sprynge. For y hope of y vnthankfull shal melt awaie as the wynter yse, α perishe as water, y is not necessary.

The xlvj. Chapter.

GREATE are thy iudgmētes (o LORDE) α y thy counceles can not be expressed: therefore men do erre, y wil not be reformed with thy wysdome. For whan the vnrighteous thought to haue thy holy people in subieciō, y they were bounde with the bandes of darcknes α longe night, shutt vnder y rofe, thinkinge to escape y euerlastinge wysdome. And whyle they thought to be hyd in y darcknesse of their synnes, they were scatered abrode in y very myddest of the darck coueringe of forgetfulness, put to horrible feare α wonderously vexed. For the corner where they were, might not kepe them from feare: because y sounde came downe and vexed them: yee many terryble and straunge visions made them afayed.

B No power of the fyre might geue them light, nether might the cleare flames of the starres lightē ȝ horrible night. For there appeared vnto thē a sodane fyre, very dredeful: At ȝ which (whan they sawe nothings) they were so afrayed, that they thought ȝ thinge which they sawe, to be the more fearful. ^a As for the sorcery & enchauntemēt ȝ they vsed, it came to derisiō, and the proude wyszdomē was brought to shame. For they ȝ promysed to dryue awaie the fearfulnes & drede frō ȝ weake soules, were sick for feare thē selues, and that with scorne. And though none of ȝ wōders feared thē, yet were they afrayed at the beestes which came vpon thē, & at ȝ Hissinge of the serpētes: In so moch that with trēblinge they swowned, & sayde they sawe not ȝ ayre, which no mā yet maye escape.

C For it is an heuy thinge, whā a mans owne consciēce beareth recorde of his wickednes & condēpneth him. And why? a vexed & wounded consciēce, taketh euer cruell thinges in hāde. ^b Fearfulnes is nothings els, but a declaringe ȝ a mā seketh helpe & defence, to answer for him self. And loke how moch lesse the hope is within, the more is ȝ vncertaynte of the matter, for the which he is punished. But they ȝ came in ȝ mightie night, slepte ȝ slepe ȝ fell vpō thē frō vnder ȝ frō aboue: somtyme were they afrayed thorow ȝ feare of ȝ wonders, & somtyme they were so weake, ȝ they swowned withall: for an hastie & sodane fearfulnes came vpon thē. Afterwarde, yf eny of thē had fallē, he was kepte & shutt in preson, but without chaynes. But yf eny dwelt in a vyllage, yf he had bene an hyrd or huszbandman, he suffred intollerable necessite: for they were all bounde with one chayne of darcknesse.

B Whether it were a blasynge wynde, or a swete songe of ȝ byrdes amonge the thicke braunches of the trees, or the vehemence of haistie rünyngē water, or greate noyse of ȝ fallynge downe of stones, or the playenge & rünyngē of beastes whō they sawe not, or ȝ mightie noyse of roaringe beestes, or ȝ sownde ȝ answereth agayne in the hye mountaynes: it made thē swowne for very feare. For all the earth shyned with cleare light, & no mā was hyndered in his laboure. Onely vpon thē there fell a heuy night, an ymage of darcknesse that was to come vpon them. Yee they were vnto them selues the most heuy & horrible darcknesse.

The xliij. Chapter.

NEUERTHELES thy sayntes had a ^a very greate light (and the enemies herde their voyce, but they sawe not the figure of them.) And because they suffred not ȝ same thinges, they magnified the: and they ȝ were vexed afore (because they were not hurte now) thanked the, and besought ȝ (o God) ȝ there might be a difference. Therefore had they ^a a burnynge piler of fyre to lede them in the vnknowne waye, & thou gauest them the Sonne for a fre gift without eny hurte. Reason it was, that they shulde want light & to be put in the preson of darcknes, which kepte thy childrē in captiuyte, by whom the vncorrupte light of the lawe of ȝ worlde was for to be geuen. Whan they ^b thought to slaye ^a the babes of the righteous (one beinge laied out, and yet preserued to be leder vnto the other) thou broughtest out the whole multitude of the children, ^a and destroydest these in the mightie water. Of that night were oure fathers certified a fore, that they knowinge vnto what othes they had geuen credēce, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued ȝ health of the righteous, but the vngodly were destroyed. For like as thou hast hurte oure enemies, so hast thou promoted vs whom thou callest a fore. For the righteous children of the good men offred secretly, & ordred the lawe of righteousness vnto vnite: ȝ the iust shulde receaue good and euell in like maner, singinge prayes vnto ȝ father of all men. Agayne, there was herde an vnconuenient voyce of the enemies, & a piteous crie for childrē that were bewayled. The master and the seruāut were punyshed alike, the meane man and the kynge suffred in like maner. For they all together had innumerable that dyed one death.

^c Nether were ȝ lyuinge sufficient to bury ȝ deed, for in ȝ twinclinge of an eye, the noblest nacion of thē was destroyed. As oft as God helped thē afore, yet wolde it not make thē beleue: but in ȝ destruccion of ȝ first borne they knowledged, that it was ȝ people of God. For whyle all thinges were still, & whā ȝ night was in ȝ myddest of hir course, thy Allmightie worde (o LORDE) leapte downe fro heaue out of thy royall trone, as a rough mā of warre, in þy myddest of þy londe þy was destroyed: ⁊ þy sharpe swerde performed thy straitē cōmaundemēt, stādinge ⁊ fyllinge all thinges with death: yee it stode vpō þy earth ⁊ reached vnto the heauen. Then the sight of the euell dreames vexed them sodenly, and fearfulness came vpon them vnawares.

Then laye there one here, another there half deed half quyk, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed thē, shewed thē these thinges afore: so that they were not ignoraunt, wherfore they perished.

The tentacion of death touched the righteous also, and amonge the multitude in the wyldernes there was insurreccion, but thy wrath endured not longe. For the faultlesse man wente in all the haist,^a and toke the battayll vpon him, brought forth the weapē of his ministracion: euen prayer and þy cēsours of recōcilinge, set himself agaynst þy wrath, and so brought the misery to an ende: declaringe therby, that he was thy seruauant. For he ouercame not the multitude with bodely power, ner with weapēs of might: but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembrance of the ooth ⁊ couenaūt made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, pacified the wrath, and parted þy waye vnto the luyunge. And why? ^bin his longe garmēt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers grauē, and thy maiesty was written in the crowne of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gaue place, and was afraied of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of wrath.

The xix. Chapter.

AS for the vngodly, the wrath came vpō them without mercy vnto the ende. For he knew before what shulde happē vnto them: how that (whan they had cōsented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greate diligence) they wolde repente, ⁊ folowe vpon them. ^cFor whan they were yet mournyng and makinge lamētacion by the graues of the deed, they deuysed another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their fiengē, whom they had cast out afore with prayer. Worthy necessite also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane forgotten the thinges þy happened vnto them afore. But the thinge that was wantynge of their punyshment, was requysite so to be fulfilled vpon them with tormētes: that thy people might haue a maruelous passage thorow, and that these might fynde a straunge death.

Thē was euery creature fashioned agayne of the new acordinge to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy commaundementes, þy thy children might be keppe without hurte. For the cloude ouersadowed their tentes, ⁊ the drye earth appeared, where afore was water: so þy in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greате depe became a grene felde: where thorow all þy people wente that were defended with thy hande, seinge thy wonderous ⁊ maruelous workes. For as þy horses, so were they fedd, ⁊ leapte like lābes, prayinge the (o LORDE) which haddest deluyered them. And why? they were yet myndefull of the thinges, that happened whyle they dwelt in the londe: how the grounde brought forth flies in steade of catell, and how þy ryuer scrauled with the multitude of frogges in steade of fysshes.

But at the last they sawe a new creacion of byrdes, what tyme as they were ^ddisceaued with lust, and desyred delicate meates. For whan they were speakinge of their appetite, the quales came vp vnto them from the see, and punyshmentes came vpon þy synners, not without the tokēs which came to passe afore by the vehemēce of þy streames: for they suffred worthely acordinge to their wickednesses, they dealt so abhominably ⁊ churlishly with straungers. Some receaued no vnknowne gestes, some brought the straungers in to bondage that dyd them good. Besyde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaued no straungers with their wylls, but persecuted those also,^e and dyd thē moch euell, that receaued thē gladly. Therefore were they punyshed with blyndnesse, like as they that were couered with ^fsodane darcknesse at the dores of the righteous: so þy euery one sought þy inтраnce of his dore.

Thus the elementes turned in to them selues, like as whan one tune is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all the residue kepe their melody: which maye easily be perceaued, by the sight of the thinges that are come to passe. The drye lode was turned in to a watery, & y thinge that afore swamme in the water, wente now vpon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (cōtrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench.

Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beastes hurte not the flesh of them that wete with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lightly. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honour: thou hast not despysed them, but allwaye and in all places hast thou stonde by them.

The ende of the boke of wysdome.

Ecclesiasticus called Iesus Syrac.

The prologe of Iesus the sonne of Syrac unto his boke.

MANY and greate mē haue declared wysdome vnto vs out of y lawe, out of y prophetes & out of other that folowed thē. In the which thinges Israel ought to be commended, by the reason of doctrine and wysdome: Therefore they that haue it & reade it, shulde not onely thē selues be wyse there thorow, but serue other also with teachinge and wrytinge.

After that my graundfather Iesus had geuen diligent laboure to reade the lawe, the prophetes and other bokes that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exercised himself therein: he purposed also to wryte some thinge of wysdome and good maners, to the intēt that they which were wyllinge to lerne and to be wyse, might haue the more vnderstandinge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuersacion.

Wherefore I exorte you to receaue it louyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not so eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wrytten in the Hebrue tonge, soundeth not so well whan it is trāslated in to another speache. Not only this boke of myne, but also the lawe, the prophetes, and other bokes sounde farre other wyse, than they do, whan they are spoken in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yeaere whan I came in to Egipte in the tyme of Ptolomy Euerges, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wryte many good thinges. Wherefore I thought it good and necessary, to bestowe my diligence and trauaile to interpret this boke. And consideringe that I had tyme, I laboured and dyd my best to perfourme this boke, and to brynge it vnto light: that the straügers also which are disposed to lerne, might applye them selues vnto good maners, & lyue acordinge to y lawe of y LORDE.

What this boke contepnerh.

The first Chapter.

ALL wysdome cōmeth of God^a the LORDE, & hath bene euer with him, and is before all tyme. Who hath nombred y sonde of the see, y droppes of the rayne & the dayes of tyme? Who hath measured the heyth of heauē, y bredth of the earth & the depenesse of the see? Who hath sought out the grounde of Gods wysdome,^b which hath bene before all thinges? Wysdome hath bene before all thinges, and the vnderstandinge of prudence from euerlastinge. (Gods worde in the heyth is the well of wysdome, and the euerlastinge cōmaundementes are the inraunce of her.) Vnto whom hath y rote of wysdome bene declared? Or who hath knowne hir wyt? Vnto whom hath the doctrine of wysdome bene discouered and shewed? and who hath vnderstande the manyfolde entraūce of her?

There is one: eue the Hiest, the maker of all thinges, y Allmightie, y kyng of power (of whom men ought to stonde greatly in awe) which sytteth vpon his trone, beinge a God of dominion: He hath created her thorow y holy goost: he hath sene her, nombred her, and measured her: He hath poured her out vpon all his workes, and vpon all flesh acordinge to his gift: he geueth her richely vnto them that loue him. The feare of the LORDE is worshipec and triumphe, gladnesse & a ioyfull crowne. The feare of the LORDE maketh a mery hert, geueth gladnesse, ioye and longe life. Who so feareth the LORDE, it shal go well with him at the last, & in the daye of his death he shal be blessed.

^a 3 Re. 3. b, and 4. c. Iob 28. c. Iacobi 1. a.

The loue of God is honorable wysdome: Cloke vnto whom it appeareth, they loue it, for they se what wōderous thinges it doth.^c The feare of LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome, and was made with the faithfull in the mothers wombe: it shall go with the chosen wemen, and shalbe knowne of y righteous and faithfull. The feare of the LORDE is y right Gods seruyce, that preserueth and iustifieth the hert, and geueth myrth & gladnesse. Who so feareth the LORDE, shalbe happie: and whan he hath nede of comforte, he shal be blessed. To feare God is the wysdome that maketh rich, and bringeth all good with her. She fylleth the whole house with hir giftes, & the garners with her treasure. The feare of the LORDE is the crowne of wysdome, and geueth plenteous peace & health. He hath sene her & nombred her: knowlege and vnderstandinge of wysdome hath he poured out as rayne: and them that helde her fast, hath he brought vnto honoure.

The feare of the LORDE is the rote of wysdome, and hir braunches are longe life. (In the treasures of wysdome is vnderstandinge and deuocion of knowlege, but wysdome is abhorred of synners.) The feare of the LORDE dryueth out synne, for he that is without feare, can not be made righteous, & his wilfull boldnes is his owne destruccion. A paciēt man wyl suffre vnto the tyme, and thē shal he haue y rewarde of ioye. A good vnderstōdinge wil hyde his wordes for a tyme, and many mēs lippes shal speake of his wysdome. In the treasures of wysdome is the declaracion of doctrine, but the synner abhorreth the worshipec of God. My sonne, yf thou desyre wysdome, kepe the commaundement, and God shal geue her vnto the: for the feare of the LORDE is wysdome ⁊ nurture, he hath pleasure in faith and louynge mekenesse, and he shal fyll the treasures therof. Be not obstinate and vnfaithfull to the feare of the LORDE, and come not vnto him with a duble hert. Be not an ypocrite in the sight of men, and take good hede what thou speakest. Marck well these thinges, lest thou happen to fall and brynge thy soule to dishonoure, and so God discouer thy secretes, and cast the downe in the myddest of the congregacion: because thou woldest not receaue the feare of God, and because thy hert is full of faynednes and disceate.

The ij. Chapter.

MY sonne, yf thou wilt come in to ⁊ seruyce of God,^a stonde fast in righteousness and feare, ⁊ arme thy soule to tentacion: sattle thine hert, and be paciēt: bowe downe thine eare, receaue the wordes of vnderstandinge, and shrencke not awaye, whan thou art entysed. Holde the fast vpon God, ioyne thy self vnto him ⁊ suffre, that thy life maye encrease at the last. What so euer happeneth vnto the, receaue it: suffre in heynesse, and be pacient in thy trouble.^b For like as golde and syluer are tryed in the fyre, euen so are acceptable men in the fornace of aduersite. Beleue in God, and he shal helpe the: ordre thy waie a right, and put thy trust in him. Holde fast his feare, and growe therein. O ye ⁊ feare the LORDE, take sure holde of his mercy: shrencke not awaye fro him, that ye fall not. O ye that feare ⁊ LORDE, beleue him, and youre rewardes shall not be emptye. O ye that feare ⁊ LORDE, put youre trust in him, ⁊ mercy shal come vnto you for pleasure. O ye ⁊ feare ⁊ LORDE, set youre loue vpo him, ⁊ youre hertes shal be lightened.

Considere the olde generations of men (o ye children) and marck them well:^c was there euer eny one confounded, that put his trust in the LORDE? Who euer continued in his feare, and was forsaken? Or whom dyd he euer despyse, that called faithfully vpo him? For God is gracious and mercifull, he forgeueth synnes in ⁊ tyme of trouble, and is a defender for all them ⁊ seke him in ⁊ trueth. Wo be vnto him that hath a dubble hert, wicked lippes and euell occupied handes, ⁊ to the synner ⁊ goeth two maner of waies. Wo be vnto them that are lowse of hert, which put not their trust in God, and therefore shal they not be defended of him. Wo be vnto them that haue lost pacience, forsaken the right wayes, and are turned back in to frowarde wayes. What wyl they do, whan the LORDE shal begynne to vyset the?

They that feare ⁊ LORDE, wil not mistrust his worde: and they that loue him,^d wyl kepe his commaundement. They that feare the LORDE, wyl seke out ⁊ thinges that are pleasaunt vnto him: and they that loue him, shal fulfill his lawe.^e They that feare ⁊ LORDE wil prepare their hertes, and hūble their soules in his sight. (They that feare the LORDE, kepe his commaundementes, and wil be pacient, tyll they se himself) sayenge: better it is for vs to fall in to the handes of ⁊ LORDE, then in to the hādes of men: for his mercy is as great as him self.

The iij. Chapter.

THE children of wysdome are a cōgregacion of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Heare me youre father (o my deare children) and do there after, that ye maie be safe. For the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaūdeth hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honoureth his father, his synnes shall be forgeuē him: and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honoureth his father, shal haue ioye of his owne children: ⁊ whan he maketh his prayer, he shal be herde. He that honoureth his father,^f shall haue a longe life: ⁊ he that is obedient for ⁊ LORDES sake, his mother shal haue ioye of him.

He that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and doth them seruyce, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honour thy father in dede, in worde and in all pacience, that thou mayest haue his blessing:^g for the blessinge of ⁊ father buyldeth vp the houses of the children, but the mothers curse roteth out the foundations. whan thy father is reprovèd, for it is no honoure vnto the, but a shame. For the worshippe of a mans father is his awne worshippe, and where the father is without honoure, it is the dishonesty of the sonne. My sonne, make moch of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his vnderstandinge fayle, haue pacience with him, & despyse him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vnto thy father, shall not be forgotten: and whan thou thy self wantest, it shall be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be recompensed with good, yee it shal be founded for the in righteousnes) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembred: thy synnes also shall melt awaye, like as the yse in \hat{y} fayre warme wether.

C He \hat{y} forsaketh his father, shall come to shame: and he that defyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, perfourme thy workes with louynge mekenesse, so shalt thou be loued aboue other men. ^aThe greater thou art, the more hūble thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt fynde fauoure in the sight of God. For greate power belongeth onely vnto God, & he is honoured of the lowly.

^bSeke not out the thinges that are aboue thy capacite, and search not the grounde of soch thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, ^cthinke vpon that allwaye, and be not curious in many of ^d*his workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to se with thine eyes, \hat{y} thinges \hat{y} are secreete. Make not thou to moch search in superfluous thinges, and be not curious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vnto the already, which be aboue \hat{y} capacite of men. The medlinge with soch hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wyttes in vanite. Now he that loueth parell, shal perish therin.

B An harde herte shal fayre euell at \hat{y} last (an hert that goeth two wayes, shal not prosper: & he that is frowarde of hert, wyll euer be the worse and worse.) A wicked hert shall be ladē with sorowes, and \hat{y} vngodly sinner wyll heape one synne vpon another. The counsell of the proude hath no health, for \hat{y} plante of synne shal be rotē out in the. The hert of him \hat{y} hath vnderstandinge, shal perceaue hye thinges, and a good eare wil gladly herken vnto wysdome. An hert that is wyse & hath vnderstandinge, wyl abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousnes. ^dWater quenchem burnynge fyre, & mercy reconcyleth synnes. God hath respecte vnto him \hat{y} is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that whan he falleth, he shal fynde a stronge holde.

The iiij. Chapter.

MY sonne, defraude not the poore of his almes, and turne not awaye thine eyes from him that hath nede. Despise not an hongrie soule, and defye not the poore in his necessite: greue not the hert of him that is helplesse, and withdrawe not the gift from \hat{y} nedefull. Refuse not the prayer of one that is in trouble, and turne not awaye thy face from the nedy. Cast not thine eyes asyde fro \hat{y} poore, \hat{y} thou geue him not occasion to speake euell of the. For yf he complayne of \hat{y} in the bytternes of his soule, his prayer shal be herde: euē he \hat{y} made him, shal heare him. Be curteous vnto \hat{y} company of the poore, humble thy soule vnto the elder, & bowe downe thy heade to a man of worshippe. Let it not greue the to bowe downe thine eare vnto the poore, but paye thy dett, and geue him a frendly answer, and \hat{y} with mekenesse.

B Delyuer him \hat{y} suffreth wrōge fro \hat{y} hāde of \hat{y} oppressoure, ^a& be not faint harted whā thou sittest in iudgmēt. Be merciful vnto \hat{y} fatherles as a father, & be in steade of an husbāde vnto their mother: so shalt thou be as an obediēt sonne of \hat{y} Hyst, and he shal loue the more thē thy mother doth. Wiszdome bretheth life in to hir children, receaueth thē \hat{y} seke her, & wyll go before thē in \hat{y} waye of righteousnes. He \hat{y} loueth her, loueth life: & they \hat{y} seke her diligētly, shal haue greate ioye. They \hat{y} kepe her, shal haue the heretage of life: for where she entreth in, there is the blessinge of God. They that honour her, shal be \hat{y} seruantes of the holy one: and they that loue her, are beloued of God. Who so geueth eare vnto her, shal iudge the Heithē: and he that hath respecte vnto her, shall dwell safely.

"For there is a shame ȳ bringeth synne, and there is a shame that bringeth worshippe and fauoure. "Accepte no person after thine owne will, that thou be not confounded to thine owne decaye. Be not ashamed of thy neyghboure in his aduersite, τ kepe not back thy counsell whā it maye do good, nether hyde thy wysdome in hir beuty. For in the tōge is wysdome knowne, so is vnderstandinge, knowlege and lernynge in the talkinge of the wyse, τ stedfastnesse in ȳ workes of righteousnes. The b. Chapter.

¶ TRUST not vnto thy riches, and saye not: tush, I haue ynough for my life.^a (For it shall not helpe in the tyme of vengeance and temptacion.) Folowe not the lust of thine owne hert in thy strength, and saye not: tush, how shulde I, or who wyl cast me downe because of my workes? for doutles God shal auenge it. And saye not: I haue committed mo synnes, butt what euell hath happened me? For the Allmightie is a pacient rewarder. "Because thy synne is forgeuē ȳ, be not therfore without feare, nether heape one synne vpō another. And saye not: "tush, the mercy of the LORDE is greate, he shal forgeue my synnes, be they neuer so many. "For like as he is mercifull, so goeth wrath from him also, and his indignacion cōmeth downe vpon synners.

Make no tariēge to turne vnto ȳ LORDE, τ put not of frō daye to daie: for sodenly shal his wrath come, τ in the tyme of vengeance he shal destroye ȳ. "Trust not in wicked riches for they shal not helpe in the daye of punishment and wrath. Be not caried aboute to euery wynde, and go not in to euery waye: for so doth the synner that hath a dubble tonge (Stonde fast in ȳ waye of ȳ LORDE) be stedfast in thy vnderstandinge, abyde by thy worde, and folowe the worde of peace and righteousnes. Be gētle to heare ȳ worde of God, that thou mayest vnderstande it, and make a true answer with wysdome. "Be swift to heare, but slowe and pacient in geuinge answer. Yf thou hast vnderstandinge, shappe thy neyghboure an answer: Yf no, laye thine hāde vpō thy mouth: lest thou be trapped in an vndiscrete worde, τ so cōfounded. Honoure τ worshippe is in a mā wyse talkinge, butt ȳ tōge of ȳ vndiscrete is his awne destrucciō. "Be not a prey accuser as long as thou luyest, and vse no slaunder with thy tonge. For shame and sorow goeth ouer the thefe, and an euell name ouer him that is dubble tonged: but he that is a preuy accuser of other men, shalbe hated envyed and confounded. And there is some frende that turneth to enemyte, and taketh parte agaynst the: and yf he knowe eny hurte by the, he telleth it out. C A faithful frende is a stronge defence: who so findeth such one, findeth a noble treasure. A faithfull frende hath no peare, the weight of golde and syluer is not to be compared to the goodnesse of his faith. A faithful frende is a medicyne of life, γ they γ feare the LORDE, shal fynde him. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal prosper with frendes: and as he is himself, so shal his frende be also. My sonne, receaue doctryne fro thy youth vp, so shalt thou fynde wysdome tyll thou be olde. Go to her as one that ploweth, and soweth, and wayte paciētly for hir good frutes. Yee a glorious rayment is it, thou shalt put it on, and the same crowne of ioye shalt thou weere.

E My sonne, yf thou wilt take hede, thou shalt haue vnderstādinge: and yf thou wilt applye thy mynde, thou shalt be wyse. Yf thou wilt bowe downe thine eare, thou shalt receaue doctryne: and yf thou delyte in hearinge, thou shalt be wyse.
